> Enclosed you will find copy of our weekly program, which we have just lately commenced putting out. Realizing that there is considerable room for improvement, I am sending you this copy hoping that you will be able to give me some good suggestions. You will notice that we are not taking in any advertising, notwithstanding the fact that we have had several bids for space. We have two reasons for not doing so, namely: First, we wish to make our programs as interesting as possible, and think that advertsing detracts from the general attractiveness of a house organ, and, second, we do not want to antagonize or enter into competition with our local newspapers for the sale of advertising space.
> We are receiving compliments, abundantly, for keeping advertising out of our program, and our business has increased about thirty per cent. in the five weeks that we have been issuing the programs. However, the increase cannot all be attributed to the house organ, as cooler weather has had considerable to do with it. But we have great hopes for our little sheet, and hope to improve it with each issue. Already a large number of our patrons call for the programs at the box office on Saturday nights, being too impatient to wait for our delivery on Monday morning. We issue the program every Saturday, for the week following, and deliver the program to every house in the city on Monday morning.
> I am a constant reader of the World, and usually turn to the Advertising for Exhibitors page first. We are located in a small city of about 4,000 inhabitants, there being two houses.
> I am also inclosing two copies of a newspaper ad. and have marked each one, and in case you comment on them please mention each one separately, so that I may show each publisher what you think of his work.

The sheet is four pages, 8 by 11 inches, on pink paper. The head carries a cut of the house and rather large "ears" on either side, the real title drops an inch and three-quarters below the top lines. It would be better to drop the cut and run the title at the top, using the cut in the body of the first page, if desired, though the cut is too fine a screen to work well with the press work possible. The front and back pages are broken through the center by a column of heavy type program, three days to each page. This should be replaced by a general program, all on the front page and taking less space than the three day program now runs. It can be done if only the printer can be shown that smaller type, if it has nothing larger to fight, gives a better display. Something on the lines of the Theater Louisiana would be better in every way. It would get all of the program together, would be more sightly and more informative. It would be better to set this double column in the lower right hand corner and run the straight matter around it. Inside are two display house advertisements, one on each of the two pages. The rest is type matter telling of the coming stories and telling too much of the story. There is no surprise left.

If we had this sheet we would first change the head as suggested and get the general program. We would use the rest of the front page for a running story about all the films of the week. We would start the second page with an editorial head, and then run about a column and a half of house talk, a leader and some snappy paragraphs. The rest could be local gossip. The third column of this page and the first column of page three could be given to advertising—outside advertising at that—and the other two columns of the third page could be brief and brisk comment on the coming stories mixed with some good chat of the players, carefully selected and not the first stuff that comes to hand. If possible it would be about people in the coming subjects and be given a local twist with a "John Jones, who has the title part in 'The Shield of Love,' to be seen here Wednesday, is completing his tenth year in photoplay." This gives John what the editors call a news value and makes the paragraph more interesting. We would have the back page carry an underline, some outside advertising and at least a column and a half of readable stuff, about the business rather than about the players. Get the patrons interested in films rather than film favorites to the exclusion of the films. Tell them what is doing in the rest of the country. Tell of the educational value, of the film cities, of new wrinkles. Be chatty and entertaining. At present the sheet is held too closely to the bill for the week, and tells this in too great detail. It helps business, but a more general sheet would make for a more permanent interest. And we would have a column of house stuff that was readable if we had to spend all day Sunday writing it.

The two newspaper advertisements are both for "The Ne'er Do Well," but they cannot be compared typographically because the copy and layout are different. Both are well set from the copy provided, but the Tribune is better printed and this layout is better than the other save in that the essential date line is not given proper space. The Democrat makes the better showing of the next most essential fact commencing "While attending the big celebration." Here the compositor is at fault, for he could have used a larger type, for this is vastly more important than a later line that reads "One of six best photoplays." That does not mean one-tenth as much to the reader as the fact that this is the celebration feature, but the line falls so that it makes a better typographical display and the printer sacrifices value of statement to prettiness of appearance. Stand over the man and make him give the important lines the important showing. On the whole the Democrat's compositor makes the better showing and the Tribune's pressman deserves the greater credit. It is not easy to train compositors to appreciate the proper display lines. They are printers, not showmen. They must be trained. If they know, they might be managers, too, instead of printers.

This is something often brought out in the department and elaborated in Picture Theater Advertising. It is up to the manager to either mark his lines for importance or else—and better—to indicate the size of the type for each line. It is the only way to get real results, and it is not as difficult as many suppose to learn about types. It is the printer's business to know how to set type, but it is the advertiser's part to indicate the lines to be given the heaviest display.

We've Noticed.

"Totem Squaw(k)s" is a parasite on V-L-S-E Pals, one of those miniature newspapers of the sort invented by Franklin P. Adams and copied by most everyone else. It purports to be edited by Augusta Wind, but it seems to us that the editor is too thirsty to be a lady—a perfect lady, at any rate. Augusta asks Tom North to call our attention to her, but we'll beat him to it by admitting it is bright and breezy and wholly readable. In the same issue Augusta asks:

> Axes and Guns
> Guns and Axes
> Do they throw it in the gutter
> Or put it in their sackses?

If Augusta really wants to know, we'll admit knowing a Judge in similarly afflicted Maine and to the best of our knowledge and belief they do neither, at the moment, but put in down in their cellars. And not wanting to hurt Augusta's feelings, the word "parasite" is used purely in a definitive and not an offensive sense. Augusta is all right even if she is not a member of the W. C. T. U. and she helps to make Pals even better than ever.

And from the same issue of Pals we take this helpful hint:

> WHAT COLORS MAKE A GOOD WINDOW?
> The colors having the greatest attention-getting powers are red and green. Red and green when used together appear at their brightest brilliancy—one is the complement of the other. They should never be used in great quantities together. If your window is trimmed in green a touch of red in one or two spots will add to its attractiveness, but if the red is used in large quantities the window loses its refined effect.
> The following contrasts of color are good:
> Good and strong: Normal red with blue green—Normal red with green—Orange with blue—Yellowish green with normal green.
> Poor: Normal red with violet—Scarlet with violet—Orange with purple—Yellow with green—Green with turquoise—Blue green with blue—Blue green with green—Red with yellow.

You may need this some time. Specially note what is said about the proportions.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising to Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

One Reason.

LATELY a clever author wrote a friend who had become editor, asking what he wanted and he replied that he wanted "clean, strong, modern stories." He wrote it because it sounded well and because he didn't know enough about his job to know what he did want. The author went to the theater and saw one of the clean, strong, modern stories, and this was the table of constituents:

Two murders
One accidental death.
One bank robbery.
One run on the bank.
A dope fiend.
An attempted burglary.
One seduction.

Now the writer is wondering what an unclean story must be. And yet perhaps clean stuff may be what the editor does want, and the story on the screen may not represent the present needs. Companies are hard up. They are taking down from the shelf the filmed stuff put up there a year or two or three years ago. They are taking from the safe the manuscript they bought and set aside for something better. It may be two or three years old—too old fashioned to be good, but it saves the payment of from $25 to $300, and to save money they waste a larger sum on production of a story that is foredoomed to failure. To this writer's own knowledge one company is releasing stories made into negative from twelve to twenty months ago, and did not then have the nerve to put out, and several companies are using up stories bought for trifling sums two and three years ago. It is a short-sighted suicidal policy. It is a waste of money and waste of opportunity, but they are doing it, so if you see stories that seem to lie contrary to the present dictum, wonder how old they may be.

You cannot go by what you see on the screen, and not always by what the editor says. Right now it is pure gamble, and not very pure, at that.

Revision Stuff.

As showing the type of persons who are encouraged to write by the revision bureaus, Phil Lang, of the Kalem company, offers in evidence a letter accompanying two scripts which bore the stamp of one of these frauds. The writing is a spidery, unformed script and the text runs:

> Dear sir—am sending you two Photo Plays Ritten by my self Please look them over and see if they are anything you can use I am a new Writer in the field the Script titeled (an Outlaws Heart) Has Been submitted once and that was to the Vitagraph Company of America, but they could not use it at this time, But the other script titled the Spider and the Flie) have never Been submitted Be fore if You find that you can use eighther or Both of them please make Best offer.

And people out of jail take money from such incompetents on the plea that they can reconstruct their plays and make them salable. Perfect spelling is not always the hallmark of good authorship, but absolute illiteracy is something else, and it is not alone the spelling that makes this letter impossible. The handwriting is even worse. It is plain robbery to coax such people along, and yet revision bureaus are within the law. It's a shame.

Ones and Twos.

Do you remember what a rush there was a couple of years ago to get aboard the feature wagon? For a time they used book adaptations and play arrangements, and all of a sudden it was discovered that original plays were better adapted to the screen. Overnight there was a demand. Some morning we are going to wake up and find that there really is a market for one reelers at a hundred dollars each in cash. And there will be few with a stock on hand.

Suppose.

Suppose that you had your name up as a star writer and suppose that some time an editor offered you an even better price for full action, and suppose that you either had to confess or show in your writing that you did not know the first thing about writing real photoplays? Wouldn't you feel small? Even if short-sighted editors do prefer the synopsis only, until they get fired, don't make that an excuse for laziness. Learn to write continuities, too, and learn to write them so well that your stories on the screen will be even better when they are all your own.

Filing Schemes.

Lately we have adopted a new filing system for scripts and ideas. We got some loose leaf covers to take the standard 8½ by 11 inch paper, and sent a sample sheet over to the printer with a couple of boxes of carbon second sheets and had him punch the holes. The punching costs about twenty cents a thousand holes. This is used for carbon copies of continuities and synopses. Both are numbered consecutively, but the numbers are not the same. If an idea on synopsis sixty is worked up into play 653, then the new number takes the place of the old. When the story is developed the used synopsis is transferred to another binder. In time this last will show a record of all stories written, while the original synopsis book will show the stories yet to be done. The sold stuff, when there is enough, will be sent to the binders for permanent covers, while the old binder will be put to use again. We are sorry now we did not put just this scheme into practice years ago. Start in now and in time your files will be invaluable to you.

Running Easy.

Now and then what may be called a cumulative idea will occur to a writer. This generally takes the form of a series of incidents, no one of which by itself is important but which, in the aggregate, precipitate a climax. Perhaps Smith and his wife move to the country. Jones and his wife run out to visit them. They are made welcome. But Green and his wife and child, Brown and his wife and children, White and his family and a few others drop in until Smith gets angry, blows up the cottage with dynamite and goes back to town. This reads well, but this type of story requires the most extreme care in development if repetition is not to be avoided. If the action is merely a succession of arrivals, the same business is apt to be repeated over and over again. Jones and his wife come up the walk, are greeted and taken into the house. Then Green and his wife and child go through the same performance and in turn are followed by the others until the tired spectator prays for relief. Then the explosion comes and the man who is squirming in his seat is glad that it is all over. He has not been amused, but merely bored. There is nothing amusing in a parade that lasts too long. It is better to avoid ideas of this type, but where they are handled, the aim of the author should be to take the main theme and make the arrivals seem to be as incidental as possible. The main theme, in a case like this, would probably be the joy of Smith in his new-found rural happiness That, and not the arrivals, should be played up and each new arrival must not be made the signal for a formal entry of the new players, but must be made to seem merely a fresh blow struck at Smith's happiness. In this way the story may get over, but it should be born in mind that the theme is not the arrivals but the anticipations of Smith, and the arrivals should be subordinate.

On Disguise Plots.

"Disguise Plots in the Elizabethan Drama" is the title of a treatise on the use of disguise as a means of obtaining or enriching plots that lists in brief several hundred plots of that period and their original sources. The chapter on the technique of the disguise is decidedly good and will be helpful to modern authors. The book is to be found in most large libraries and is worthy of study. It is by Dr. Victor O. Freeburg, of Columbia, and is published by the Columbia University Press, New York.

Doing Your Best.

If a thing is worth doing, it is worth doing the best you know how. What is done to it afterward is not your concern.

The other day our sole remaining pupil sold a "kid" play. He was surprised to the point of shock, but started in to write some more, and he turned out stories without plot or reason. He thought they were simple and easy and he slapped down any old thing. He knows better now and is doing his best, but others probably feel the same way about it, when there is nothing more difficult to write than a good child story. Another author—a woman—found that a certain type of play was wanted. She does not like that style of play, but she is doing the very best she knows how and so she is filling the demand. Because the stuff wanted is not strong and gripping, she does not let down tension. She knew beforehand that she was likely to, so she guarded against just that and her second story was better than her first acceptance. Write all stories with your whole heart and all your brain and then they will be none too good.

The THIRD Edition of

Technique of the Photoplay

IS NOW READY

This is virtually a new book under the old title. More than double the text and with an arrangement especially adapting it for the student. The most complete book ever written on the subject of scenario or photoplay construction.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 159.

Has the mercury arc rectifier or motor generator set the higher efficiency?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 148.

The Roll of Honor on Question 148 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; M. M. Moon, Sherman, Texas; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; Leon Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; D. A. Snyder, Bangor, Pa.; G. A. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.; M. Capobianco, Roseto, Pa., and George H. Hopper, Jacksonville, Ill.

I think the reply of Brother Moon covered the matter more completely, supplemented by reply to the last half of the question by F. F. Bell.

Reply to Question No. 148.

By M. M. Moon, Sherman, Texas.

The Question:

What do you regard as the best safety guard or guards against panic in case of fire? When the law prescribes minimum age at which a man may operate moving picture apparatus, what age do you favor? Give your reasons in full.

The Answer:

The best safety guard from fire is: First, an experienced operator and high grade projection apparatus; second, wall shutters so constructed that they will drop within three seconds of the time of the starting of a fire, the slots at the bottom of the shutter to be packed with material to deaden the sound of the falling shutter, so that the audience will not be alarmed; third, the turning on of the emergency lights, and the signaling to the manager if the fire gets started and gets away from the aperture; fourth, help that is cool-headed and well drilled for such emergencies; fifth, audience accustomed to using exits; sixth, seats 32 inches between the rows, aisles four feet wide, and even wider near the exits; seventh, exits plainly marked; eighth, piano player or orchestra which will keep its head and start up some popular music the instant there is a sudden stop in projection, which may or may not mean serious trouble; ninth, thoroughly fireproof operating room; tenth, an ample vent flue so that all smoke and gas from a film fire may escape.

As to the age limit of operators, the minimum should be twenty-one years, because you cannot put a man's head on a boy's shoulders, and a boy is more likely to become excited and do things which should not be done.

F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas, replies to the last half of the question as follows:

As to the age question, why, some fellows eighteen years old know more and have cooler judgment than the average man of twenty-five or even thirty, but they are the exception, and the exception must suffer for the rule. The moving picture business is becoming more and more complicated, and I believe the final limiting of the age of operators to twenty-one years is inevitable.

Moisture in Slide Gelatine.

J. B. Middleton, manager Home Telephone & Telegraph Co., Portland, Ore., says:

> On August 25, 1914, I wrote you with regard to trouble we were having with moisture in slides. I have anaylzed this difficulty as follows: The heat forces the moisture to evaporate out of the gelatine and the mat, and this moisture is deposited on the inside of the cover glass. I have tried every way I know to to get the gelatine and mat dried so they will not steam, but there seems to be no way. The residual moisture left in the gelatine and mat will not dry out when left in the open air. If there is anything you know of which will remedy this evil so that one will not be thus annoyed, I will be glad to learn of it through the columns of the paper.

I have never experienced the trouble you speak of, except what might be termed semi-occasionally. Possibly the condition might be due to some peculiarity of the atmospheric conditions in Portland. I don't know. I should suppose, however, that the moisture could be evaporated by laying the slide glass on a tolerably warm metal plate, which could readily be heated by gas. I would, however, respectfully refer this matter to our readers for further comment.

Would Take It to Bed.

John H. Reents, Dillon, Mont., certainly is a live wire. He has found that the itinerary of my western trip does not include Dillon, and that Pocatello, Idaho, will be my nearest point. He is trying to make arrangements to have me change the route to include Butte, Mont., and says: "If this cannot be done I will guarantee your expenses from Pocatello to Dillon and return, for I am interested enough in my work to hear what you have to say." Now the expenses from Pocatello to Dillon, Mont., and return would not be anything in the nature of a joke, even for a good-sized union, yet here is an individual operator offering to assume it. Therefore it must be conceded that Brother Reents is not a man who could be classed as among the dead ones. In another part of the letter Brother Reents says: "With regard to the third edition of the Handbook, if there was any danger of losing it I would take it to bed with me, but as it is I always keep it locked up—safety first."

Very Good Indeed.

The Chicago Evening News, dated April 3rd, heads an article, "Some Film Men Still in the Slapstick Age: They Speed Up the Reel and Thus Spoil the Picture from Pure Greed." Portions of the article are good enough to bear reproduction:

> Certain theaters in Chicago still possess the idea that motion pictures are "chasers," if one may judge from the way they put on some modern cinema dramas. In the olden days, when pictures consisted chiefly of chases and slapstick humor, the variety theaters concluded their performances with a short reel of film designed to empty the houses of their patrons. When the lights illumined the house after the completion of the picture the audience was mostly conspicuous by its absence, and what few were left were for the most part making their exit. The "theatres," improvised hurriedly from barber shops, butcher and tailor stores to accommodate the frantic "movie" fans of that period, gave a speedy performance of one or two reels, and emptied the seats of their occupants hurriedly to permit the waiting throng to get in. It was thus the movies earned the name of "chasers" from the theatrical profession. But today the system has changed. Vaudeville theaters recognizing the importance of the motion picture, give it the same consideration as headline acts, while on the other hand many modern moving picture theater managers retain the habit of filling and emptying their houses by speeding up their pictures to an incongruous degree, apparently to crowd more performances into a day's business. The unwary "fan" has no redress except to refrain from visiting the theatre a second time. Frequently a spectator condemns the producer for the faults of the exhibitor. At times the screen results suffer from the failure of the operator to attend to his business, but when the performance looks hurried the theater man himself is to blame if he has speeded up the projection. Not alone does the production suffer by the grotesue appearance of the players, but the eyes of the spectators are strained trying to follow the rapid action. This fault is discernible in outlying theaters principally. Recently a grumbling lot of spectators left one of the north side theatres where they went to enjoy Anna Pavlowa's performance in "The Dumb Girl of Portici." Except that the characters and situations were the same as when the Universal presented it at a down town theater, the play could barely be recognized. It looked more like a ragtime edition of the famous opera than the artistic conception Lois Weber and Anna Pavlowa produced. In a south side theatre one evening last week Lena Baskette, a juvenile interpretative dancer, gave an exhibition in a single reel picture. Were it not for the assistance of the sub-titles, which announced that her performance was called "The Dance of Love," a casual observer would be under the impression that he was witnessing a remarkable contortionist at work. Many in the theater audibly complained of the rapidity of the action, others laughed outright at the grotesqueness of the thing, while still others questioned the youth of the dancer, who is credited with only eight summers. Even more grotesque was a well remembered incident in a play in which one of the characters was shown to be descending a flight of stairs. Because of the speed of the film the descent looked as though the actor were sliding down on his heel, Charlie Chaplin fashion. The scene was intended to be melodramatic, but it was greeted with an outburst of laughter. This is bound to have a bad effect upon the public. Motion picture theatergoers will either refrain from attending the picture theaters as frequently as in the past, or they will shy from houses where this practice prevails. Painstaking theatre managers, who respect their patrons' privileges, allow approximately fourteen minutes (You mean 18, Mr. Moving Picture News Editor. Ed.) for each 1000-foot reel of ordinary subject, or a little less for fast comedies. Where pictures are presented expressly for the personal profit of the manager, and not necessarily for the spectators' entertainment, a reel of film is given in as little as eight minutes.

This is indeed an excellent article. I congratulate the Chicago News in having told some of the Chicago managers a little bit of good, plain TRUTH. I am told by operators, and others in Chicago, that fully 80 per cent of the Chicago theaters practice over-speeding in greater or less degree. What the Chicago News says about the final outcome of this insane practice is, in my judgment, absolutely true. There ought to be some way of stopping the outrage. As I have repeatedly pointed out, producers have an absolute right in this matter, and it seems to me it would be possible for exchanges to combine on at least this proposition, and refuse absolutely to furnish service to theaters who outrage the productions by shooting them through like a comet. And the worst part of it is that the practice is not altogether confined to low class theaters. Amazing as the statement is, there are those who lay claim to being among the foremost exhibitors of the country who overspeed the films, and in some instances overspeed them to a ridiculous and outrageous degree.

A Serious Error.

Two or three weeks ago the department contained an editorial entiled "At Last," in which the editor was made to assume a position he did not intend to. This particular article was written quite some time ago, was put in type, and when the proof reached me I marked it "kill," because meanwhile something had come up which caused me to doubt the correctness of my position. Of course, Brothers Martin, Griffiths and Deutsch lost no time in whetting their scalping knives and getting out their heavy artillery. I suppose I will be accused of crayfishing. Well, I can only give you the facts as they were. The article was published by mistake. Here is what Friend Griffiths has to say in the matter, and, broadly speaking, it is about the same position Deutsch and Martin take. Also it is the very thing that caused me to mark the article "kill." Brother Griffiths says:

> Here is where the Ansonia battery opens on your fortifications. Now the proposition is this: Standard E. F.; standard crater position; standard throw, and standard spot, although the white flag is over the crater position, so we will not try to hit that, though it will be difficult, because the crater diameter is close alongside. In order to make the argument more clear, we will assume the aperture to be the crater, the objective to be the condensers, and the screen the aperture. Now what would happen if you varied the size of the aperture? Why naturally the screen image would vary in proportion, so that if we got a 1½-inch spot with a 5-16 crater, then with a ½-inch crater the spot would be 2.4 inches in diameter. Now, owing to the fact that spherical aberration is present in the condensers, it is possible to withdraw the large crater without materially affecting the light quality. Thus you see we have had to change one condition, viz: the position of the crater. It is, however, much better practice to change the E. F. of the condensers in order to reduce the enlargement of the crater than to retard the crater and thus have the film cut a section of the condenser beam where the light may not be so even. With a 16-inch distance between condenser and aperture, using an aperture lens, there would be very few condenser difficulties. The E. F. of the condenser need only vary with the amperage, but it is absolutely necessary that the crater distance vary with the size of the crater (amperage) in order to get the same size spot, because we cannot get away from the ratio of enlargement without changing the type of lines.

Quite right, Brother Griffiths. That is the one thing I overlooked when I wrote that article. But would it not be possible to maintain all these conditions by using a fixed amperage with an E. F. condenser to suit, understanding that, of course, any variation of the amperage would necessitate the changing of the focal length of the condensers, since with a fixed distance two 6½s would give a smaller spot than would two 7s or 7½s.

Nothing Doing.

Frank McManus, Corvallis, Ore., says:

> Enclosed find 4 cents, for which send me carbon copy of department reply to the following questions: I wish to build a transformer for my operating room, same to be adjustable for say 30, 40, 50 and 60 amperes. What will be the size of wire? How many turns? My current is 110. Will iron clamp bolts effect the core? Please give me all the information you can. I have one of your Handbooks which gives the working principle, but as I wish to build a transformer, this information is not sufficiently explicit. Enclosed find sketch of what is supposed to be a transformer, or choke coil, which same is operating in one of our theaters. It is a home-made affair, and I would like to know if it is constructed on the right principle. You speak of an aperture lens. Can I purchase one of these?

Sorry, old man, but I cannot help you out on this particular matter. The building of a transformer is a matter which requires very close calculation and an exact knowledge of the metal which is to be used in the core, the thickness of the same, the insulation, the cycle of current, and the size and turns of the wire. The sketch you sent, if it is a correct diagram of the instrument, shows what might be termed a freak choke coil. It is, in effect, two choke coils hitched together in series. The bar at the end of each one of the coils does not cut any figure at all, except that it might cause each coil to set up a slight magnetic influence over the other, and that would not, I think, be good.

Of course, I could very easily tell you how to build a transformer, and you could build one that would work, but the chances are about ten to one that the home-made transformer would not be as efficient as a rheostat, and I do not care to give instructions which I know will not produce satisfactory results. I could, of course, dig up all the data you want, and prepare precise instructions, which would give you a transformer just as good as any of those on the market, but that information, my dear Mr. McManus, would cost you, not four cents, but nearer four hundred dollars. Sorry, Friend McManus, but it cannot be did.

As to aperture lens, why that matter is not yet settled, and they cannot, as yet, be procured.

Drinks Nervene.

George H. Hopper, Jacksonville, Ill., writes:

> Have just drunk a bottle of nervene, which accounts for this letter. I have been operating for about eight years, and have been an interested reader of the department for the past two of them. I am the proud owner of a new Handbook and the Hawkins' Electrical Guide, which no one could separate me from either with love or dynamite. Have been working here for nearly a year, and am a member of Local 323, I. A. T. S. E., Springfield, Ill. Had the pleasure of meeting and shaking hands with you when you were in Sprinfield, which was quite a treat, as I consider you to be the "daddy" of them all. I am working for a real boss, and don't have to ask twice for anything I need. When I came here he told me he was a crank on projection, and proposed to have the real article, to which I replied that I was some crank on that subject myself, and projection was the thing I was there to deliver. Suppose I made good, because I am still here. The boss has spent about $800 on the operating room since I have been here, and I think you will agree with me that that is going some. Am enclosing answers to a couple of questions.

I am very partial to the boss who is a "crank on projection," always provided he is willing to supply the necessary things to enable the operator to deliver good results on the screen, which is the case with your manager. An operator is always a crank on projection if he is a real operator. The Oh-it-is-good-enough operator is not really an operator at all—just a mere imitation, the height of whose ambition is and must be either the union scale, or, if there is no union, then considerable less. Glad to hear from you, Brother Hopper. The latch string is always hanging out for "cranks on projection."

Good.

Dasher—"I don't believe the war films we saw last night were taken at the front."

Mrs. Dasher—"Of course they were; didn't you notice the bullet-holes at the end of each reel?"—Puck.

The foregoing is respectfully referred to the meal ticket operator and his little punch.

Regarding Objective Lenses.

Louis Phillips, New Haven, Conn., says:

> This is my first letter to the department. If it is worth publication well and good, if not give it to John, the junkman. I have tried to educate myself in the construction of condensers and lenses.
> The diameter of projection lenses is governed by the curves of the individual lenses—in other words, the combined focus of the series of lenses composing the objective. For instance, in a short focus lens the curves are more pronounced than in a lens of longer focus. If you were to project a large picture at a short distance the requirements of the objective would be more exacting than in a lens that would project the same size picture at longer distance. Cheap objective lenses are not corrected to project a picture entirely sharp from center to extreme edge. It requires an enormous amount of labor and grinding to thus correct a lens, and this is side-stepped somewhat by reducing the diameter of the cheap lens. In a highly corrected lens the diameter may be increased.
> There are many kinds of optical glass. Some grades absorb more light than others. The color of glass, both in condensing and objective lenses, is extremely important. Certain chemicals used in making lenses have tendency to discolor when exposed to heat. In the manufacture of lenses the glass is brought to a liquid state by heating gradually and pouring into a mold the shape the finished lens is to have. These molds are allowed to cool gradually, the cast is inspected for imperfections, and the perfect ones are selected for annealing. The cheaper lenses are ground to diameter and focus immediately after cooling, and are then ready to be sold. The better grade lenses, which are free from imperfections, are again heated almost to the melting point, this for the purpose of annealing. They are then slowly cooled in ovens of varying temperatures. The annealing process, however, applies more to the condensing lenses, although the objective lenses of higher quality are annealed to a certain extent when you look at a picture that is being projected by a cheap lens from a distance it looks quite sharp but come up closer and you will discover that each line appears to have a border of different colors covering the entire length of the spectrum This is chromatic aberration, which is not present in the high class lens.

Well, Brother Phillips, most of your letter concerns things which have already been discussed in the department many times, but some of the processes you describe may nevertheless be of interest to our readers. I am obliged to take issue with you on one point, however, and that is that while you may be correct in saying that a high class lens may be made in larger diameters, still, as a matter of fact, I find it very difficult to get high class lenses except in comparatively small diameters

Another Answer.

J. H. Graff, Jr., Philadelphia, Pa., says:

Regarding "Interesting Problem," August 12th issue, it is not so much of a puzzle as one would think, if we take into consideration the number of different ways film may be torn and injured. If the operator is careless this particular thing will happen, regardless of what make of machine he may have. I know from experience that this can be avoided if proper care is taken in the rewinding of a film. If you rewind the film loosely, so that it sags on the reel, the reel will not run evenly, and there is going to be a succession of heavy jerks, and this is likely to break the sprocket holes in the manner shown, particularly if the projector is being overspeeded. This sort of injury will pass the top sprocket, but won't pass the intermittent. I have had the above happen on account of the assistant operator not doing as he was told when rewinding the film. After an experience or two of that kind I learned to examine all the reels myself before I put them in the magazine This is a little extra work, but the success of every operator depends on the way the films are put on the screen.

Well, all those who have answered this question agree that the damage is done by a jerk at the top sprocket, due to the reel not working properly, though they don't all agree as to the exact cause of the reel not working right. As a matter of fact all the different causes named by various correspondents would produce the same result, and the same damage.

Position of the Dowser.

Fred J. Merklein, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

In the past few weeks I have been called upon to act as relief operator in various houses, and the experience has taught me that we have overlooked one small, but, to me, a seemingly important point in the construction of projection machines, namely: position of the dowser. An operator works, for instance, for an extended period of time with a Power machine, late model, in which the dowser handle is placed below and between the cone and the slide carrier. He is then suddenly called upon to take charge of a Simplex, whereon the dowser is placed in front of the cone, with the handle above. Now in case something happens and the film stops at the aperture, in order to prevent a fire he, through force of habit acquired through using a Power machine, reaches back and below for the dowser handle, but don't find it there. Naturally he may, for an instant, be confused, and by the time he does locate the dowser the film is quite probably ablaze. This danger is greatly intensified when using high amperage. It seems to me the position of the dowser should be standardized. This would be a very good matter to take up with the proper authorities, and as you are the only man who seems to be able to effectively dispose of such matters, I present it for your consideration.

Yes, Brother Merklein, you are absolutely correct. The dowser position should be standardized, and that is not the only thing which should be standardized; there are literally hundreds of others. What you set forth might very easily happen. When the film stops in front of the aperture the first, instinctive movement is to yank the dowser shut, and habit is a hard thing to break, therefore, as you say, if you have been working for a long time on a machine with the dowser handle in one position, your hand will automatically reach for it there, and since seconds count in a case of that kind, failure to find the dowser handle where the hand expected to find it might easily prove to be a serious matter. A simple, little thing of this kind might be at the bottom of a fire panic. As to taking it up with the authorities, yes, I could, and doubtless could get action on it too, but such an action on my part would result in a lot of hard feeling on the part of machine manufacturers, who very naturally would resent being compelled to make costly changes. I have hope that there will, in the near future, be some authoritative body which will be able to compel standardization of this and other matters.

Thirst for Knowledge.

J. P. Whitney, McPherson, Kans., says:

Will you kindly answer the following, thus satisfying our thirst for knowledge, besides settling a dispute. In a lamphouse that we know of, the current is 500 volts D. C. This is run through heavy resistance to reduce it to arc requirements. Is the voltage at the arc 500, or is it more or less?

It seems to me that entirely too little attention is paid to reels on which the films are rewound. From my own experience I know that a poor reel can, and often does materially injure the film, especially the last one hundred feet. I have seen reels so badly out of shape that they would have jerked the film apart at the upper sprocket if placed in a projection machine in the condition they were received. This is caused sometimes by lopsided cores; some times by sides of reels catching on the film or the side of the magazine, and sometimes by the reel binding on the magazine spindle. All this places too great or too sudden strain on the film at the upper sprocket, sometimes breaking out the sprocket holes.

Probably the most troublesome type of reel is that known as the "all-metal" reel, made, I think, by the Taylor-Shantz Company, in which the metal core may, and sometimes does collapse, which makes the film rewind "lopsided" and jerk when run the next time. These reels are also usually narrow in the core, which, on a Powers at least, keeps the tension off the upper reel, and has a tendency to make the jerk worse. The "Globe" brand reel, also an all-metal reel with pressed metal sides, is a little thin in the center, but its chief trouble is in the tendency of the pressed metal sides to spring out of line and catch the film, or rub on the side of the magazine. The Sharlow Brothers' reel with the square openings for threading, and the film clip placed opposite the square opening, is a very good reel. They are of good width and the sides are not usually warped out of all semblance to flatness; also the core is true, but the type with the patent clip placed between the square openings give trouble, because the heavy clip throws the core out of true, and the reel winds lopsided. It seems to me if these points were incorporated into red letter "Don'ts" for manufacturers and exchanges there would be a great deal less damage to films for which we operators are often unjustly blamed.

I would respectfully direct the attention of exchange managers to the foregoing. It seems to me it is nothing short of crass stupidity to place a film which is worth $125 on a reel which in the first place only had one thing to commend it, viz.: its absurd cheapness, and which is, as Brother Whitney says, all too often bent all out of shape, or has a hub which is uneven and untrue. I have often seen new films worth $125 wound on reels of this kind, and what is more, such a reel may very easily cause damage to one film equal to several times the first cost of the reel, or more than equal to the cost of a really first-class reel.

The reel is, as Friend Whitney intimates, a very important item, and an item to which altogether too little attention is given. Cheap reels are an abomination, and a mighty expensive thing in the long run. I would most emphatically advise film exchanges to not only get better reels, but to pay a great deal more attention to the condition of the reels.

As to the voltage question: Yes and no. When the arc is burning normally, pulling its full amperage, the resistance reduces the voltage to approximately the 50 volts required at the arc, but if you gradually lengthen the arc, thus adding to its resistance, hence to the total resistance of the circuit, the amperage is lowered and the voltage at the arc automatically rises and when the arc breaks, and no current at all flows, the carbons will be charged at the full 500 volts. A 110 volt test lamp will burn at full C. P. when placed across the carbons of a projection arc lamp when the arc is not burning (110 volt supply), because the amperage is so small that the rheostat sets up practically no resistance.

An Interesting Road Equipment.

The Picture Theater Equipment Company, 1604 Broadway, New York City, report that they have supplied to Mr. James F. Sargent of New Haven, Conn., a special road outfit consisting of a Powers No. 6 mechanism with a specially constructed stand, a Six-A lamp and lamphouse, a circular rheostat that can be readily adjusted for either 110 or 220 volts, and a complete set of their Piteco lenses.

A notable feature is that, where electric current is not available the No. 6A lamp may be removed from the lamphouse at a moment's notice and a special attachment inserted in the 6A lamphouse, so that a calcium burner can be used in conjunction with a "Model B" gas outfit.

From Martin.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., says:

I have noted Friend Griffiths' remarks, August 5th issue. His criticisms of my drawing in issue of June 24th are perfectly correct, but my original drawing was also correct and agrees with his criticisms. The whole trouble seems to have been caused by reducing the drawing for publication to such an extent that the lines at the shutter position appeared to run together and intersect at a single point, hence the incongruity of the drawing with the text matter. Being the draftsman, however, I will have to be the goat, but I am going to elucidate that particular point shortly in a better way, for I think I will bring out an important point with reference to spherical aberration.

I have tried Griffiths' experiment with the cardboard in the slide carrier, and agree that it does indicate the amount of spherical aberration in the condensers, and judging from the distance the crater image can thus be moved sidewise, the amount of spherical aberration is considerable, and is, I believe, responsible for a large, juicy volume of light being lost to the screen. I even venture the assertion that a condenser practically free from spherical aberration would give as good results on the screen with 40 amperes D. C. as are now secured with 60. Griffiths' experiment would produce an appreciable movement of the spot only when a small screen is placed at a position such as the true crater image, but if the screen be moved back toward the condenser until it comes to the location of the white spot, the movement produced by shifting the cardboard slide will be very little, which fact further substantiates my claim that the white spot should be placed at the aperture, because it is the position of least aberration. In the Handbook, page 119, Figures 47 and 48, Griffiths' experiment is shown with the aperture placed at the white spot, but even with this condition the loss at the colling plate, through spherical aberration alone, not including the necessary loss at that point, is considerable, as shown in Figure 46. The "fuzzy-type" philosophy about the danger of the harsh effect by placing the crater in exact focus at the aperture is one too many, particularly since a condenser that will give an exact focus has never yet been produced.

For the information of readers the white spot referred to has to do with the tables and drawing published on page 1244, August 19th issue. I would suggest that it would be of distinct interest and value if a number of operators would test out the tables on page 1244, and report results. The proof of the pudding is always in the eating, and if the ordinary operator can get better results through the use of the table in question, then that table has distinct value. Let us hear from you.

From Australia.

C. B. Wynn, Lidcombe, New South Wales, Australia, says:

I am enclosing $5.00 for which please send me a copy of the third edition of the Handbook.

The Handbook has gone forward. I would suggest to Friend Wynn that a letter setting forth conditions in his vicinity would be of interest. Don't be so stingy with your ink, Neighbor Wynn. We would like to know what is doing over in the land of the kangaroo, so come across with a good long letter.

Lots of Trouble.

D. E. Anderson, Spokane, Washington, writes:

I would like to call your attention to things which make for unpleasant feeling on the part of the operator. Why is it that some manufacturers print the titles so dark that it is impossible to see and frame the picture when threading? I find that in some features it is necessary to use the framing lever pretty constantly if the picture is to be kept in frame, due to differing relation of the sprocket holes to the picture, or to different width of dividing lines. Why could there not be a standard for such things, so that these annoying things would not occur? I also object to the plain, transparent tailpiece used with many films. The tail piece of the film should be opaque, so that if you run the scene clear through the white light won't show on the screen. When the white light is flashed on the screen by reason of the tail piece, it is bad for the eyes of the audience; also it destroys the illusion.

All of which is quite true, though it is the first time I have heard of titles being printed so dark that one could not see to frame them. I think, however, what Brother Anderson probably needs is a framing lamp. By the way that reminds me that this is the first letter I have had from Spokane for quite some considerable time, though that city used to be pretty well represented in the department. For why, gentlemen, did you crawl back into your hole and pull the hole carefully in after you?

Another Opinion.

From Port Huron, Mich., comes the following:

The article recently printed concerning projection in Port Huron seems to have been from the pen of someone connected with the Maxine Theater. The facts in the matter are that the best projection in Port Huron may be seen at the Bijou; also it is the most beautiful house in that city. The next best is at the American; after that comes the Family. At the Maxine the music is good, though I, myself, prefer the Bijou music rather than that of the pipe organ in use at the Maxine. I cannot agree that the projection at the Maxine is good. Sarnia, Ont., which is near Port Huron, has two picture shows, viz: the Princess on Front street, and the Crescent on Christina street. The Princess is a very pretty little place on the outside, though not quite so pleasing inside. However, the interior is neat, and above all I have never seen pictures projected better anywhere. The Crescent is very much after the style of the Bijou at Port Huron. The picture is well projected only for the speed, which is pretty close to nine or ten minutes. Of course, under that condition, the picture jumps a lot. The writer is in no way connected with any Port Huron or Sarnia house.

Well, of course I don't know, and cannot know the exact truth of the matter, but some times I am tempted to cut out all reference to local projection, because there generally seems to be a dispute over it, and there is always the possibility that the report is made by interested parties.

Lens Cleaning Compound.

L. B. Neuman, Bucyrus, Ohio, says:

I noted not very long ago that you recommended some kind of cleaning compound for lenses. Wish you would let me have the adress of the firm who handles it. I have your latest Handbook. Was surprised when I found it was to be sold at four dollars; thought it certainly would be five or six.

I don't remember the article you refer to, Brother Neuman, nor do I know of any lens cleaning compound that is being sold at this time. I would suggest that there are two methods of cleaning lenses which are inexpensive and, I believe, very effective. (a) Make a solution of 1-2 alcohol, either ordinary or wood alcohol, and 1-2 water. Wash the lens with this and polish afterwards with a perfectly clean, soft piece of cloth, or a perfectly clean chamois, but let us place emphasis on the "perfectly clean." (b) Another very effective method is to get a cake of bon ami, which may be had at any grocery store for five or ten cents, wet a soft, clean cloth, rub it two or three times on the bon ami and then, without using any pressure, wash the lens. Don't wipe the lens off, but let it dry, whereupon you will find upon its surface a thin white film. Wipe this off with a perfectly clean, soft dry cloth, or a perfectly clean piece of chamois. I think either of these methods will prove entirely satisfactory, and if properly carried out will not work the slightest injury to the lens.

A Question of Health.

From a Minneapolis, Minn., operator comes a letter containing a clipping taken from the Minneapolis Evening Journal, August 11, 1916. The correspondent seems to be an operator who is asking certain questions of some department in the paper. He first sets forth the fact that he is working in a room 4 feet 6 inches in height, lined with tin, in which there was a window 18x30 inches, and a hole two feet square in the floor which serves as an entrance. In summer the temperature registers 90 to 100. The question he propounds and answers given thereto by the Evening Journal are as follows:

"1. What effect does the carbon dust have on the occupant of the room? Six months ago I was examined and tubercle bacilli were found in my sputum. I have had an operation. In spite of this I am much better.

"2. What are my chances?

"3. When will it be safe for me to play tennis and row?

"4. What precautions should I take?

"5. What should my weight be? I am 21, 5 feet 8 1-2 inches in height, and weigh 134 pounds."

1. The combination of hot air, poor ventilation and carbon dust is bad on the lungs. It leads to consumption, pneumonia, colds.

2. Your chances seem good if you really will go in a sanitarium or otherwise take care of yourself.

3. The physician who sees you is the best judge of that.

4. For one thing, you must not work as a motion picture operator now or ever. You should have a nurse or physician instruct you in detail just what precautions to take.

5. One hundred forty-eight. Get up to that weight by resting and eating.

The answers are interesting. It will be noted that the Journal man condemns the combination of hot air, poor ventilation and carbon dust as being "bad for the lungs." He says it "leads to consumption, pneumonia and colds."

Well, we knew all that long ago. But if the conditions set forth obtain in any Minneapolis operating room it seems to me it is high time the Minneapolis union got busy and called the attention of the Board of Health thereto. Very likely, however, the room spoken of is not in the city. In fact I very much doubt that the Minneapolis men would tolerate anything of that kind.

They Kept on Coming.

Edward Marshall, Vancouver, B. C., writes:

I find I have derived a great deal of benefit from the questions. When they first came out I did not read them. I thought, Oh, what's the use! But they kept on coming, and after awhile I began to read and then study and answer them. I was not content with only studying, but somehow felt I should try harder and get on the Honor Roll, in which I have succeeded quite some few times. In other words, the questions set me studying. I have both of your Handbooks—some books, my boy—Hawkins' Electrical Guide, and others, and I intend sending for "Optic Projection." I wish you would draw up another set of 150 questions.

Well, as regards another set of questions, supposing operators send in questions they think ought to be asked. Don't send questions, however, merely with a view of sticking someone; also don't send catch questions. Questions should be only such as will bring out points which the operator ought to know.

How to Make Positives Direct.

The problem of making positives direct in the camera without the expense of making the extra negative film where only one copy is desired has occupied the attention of many experimentors.

Many samples of each process have come to this department from time to time but many of them were jealously guarded as secrets by those who sent them and even those who seemed willing to divulge their formulas were generally so vague that others were unable to duplicate the results claimed.

The followiug method will enable anyone familiar with the ordinary film manipulations to make good projectible positives direct in the camera.

To the camera owner who takes pictures for his own amusement, or the man who makes a single picture for his local theater, this method will prove a great saver in cost of materials.

It is really a means of making a negative on a strip of film and then printing that negative on the same strip and destroying the original negative by a chemical process leaving the positive print.

It requires a particular style of developing apparatus, that is a drum of metal or wood painted with black Probus paint or other similar black photographic enamel which is is resistant to the action of photographic chemicals. This developing drum must be smooth and tight, the skeleton type with ribs will not do, as we shall see presently.

Negative film may be used but positive film is much preferable where the strength of the light permits. Positive film gives much clearer, brighter, snappier results. Negative film having a tendency to flatness and greying in the high lights. As positive stock is very much slower than negative stock a much larger diaphram opening must be used and if interiors or badly lighted exteriors are to be taken negative stock must be used. In either case the exposure must be rather full so that the image may penetrate well into the bromide of silver film.

A very contrasty hydroquinone developer is the best to use although the usual formula for positive titles works very well. The following is a very good formula:

Hydroquinone, 1 oz.
Sulphite of soda (dry), 11 oz.
Carbonate of soda (dry), 7 oz.
Potassium Bromide, 1 oz.
Water, 1 gallon.
Alcohol, 1 pint.

The alcohol may be omitted but enables the developer to be used at a higher temperature thereby giving greater contrast.

Development should be slow with dim red light so as to give a brilliant snappy negative with pure whites and deep blacks. Developments must be continued until the high lights have fully penetrated to the other side of the film and the picture is plainly visible from the back. This kind of development is the chief condition of success. After development, wash for five minutes or more to thoroughly remove all traces of developer.

The development has probably caused the film to swell and lengthen and it is necessary to cinch it up close to the drum for the next operation which is that of printing the positive picture. The drum is carried to a window which admits diffused light and turned for ten to twenty seconds before the light. The white positions of the film, usually of creamy white or greenish shade, soon become grayish. This indicates sufficient exposure and the drum is carried back to the dark room and rinsed.

In this process the negative on the film is printed on the remaining silver bromide in the emulsion which has not previously been acted upon by the developer. We now see that only a tight drum can be used on which the film is tightly wound or the resulting positive would be light struck by light penetrating from the back of the film.

The tight drum has the advantage of being very economical of developer as a shallow semi-circular trough in which the drum is revolved will develop a two hundred foot drum of film with only a gallon or two of developer.

The negative image is now destroyed or dissolved away in the following solution:

Water, 1 gallon.
Bichromate of potash, 1 1-2 oz.
Nitric acid, 3 oz.

This bath, compared with other formulas for the same purpose, is very weak; but as a matter of fact a very small quantity of bichromate is necessary to oxidize the silver of which the image consists. This bath is allowed to work until the negative image has been entirely dissolved away and only the creamy white of the remaining silver is visible. This remaining silver bromide carries the yet undeveloped positive image from which the bichromate solution must be thoroughly washed before immersing it again in the developer to materialize the positive.

The same developer may be used in which the negative was originally developed although softer results may be obtained by using the regular metol-hydro or some other softer working developer for the second development.

After the second development the positive should be fixed for five minutes in a fixing bath containing acid hardener or if fixed in a plain bath hardened afterwards with formalin solution or a five per cent solution of chrome alum.

The two developing solutions and the reversing solution all have a softening effect on the film and care must be taken that the temperature does not rise sufficiently to cause the film to frill.

If trouble is experienced with softening of the film the following developer may be substituted for the one given above:

Hydroquinone, 2 oz.
Sodium Sulphite (dry, 2 1-2 lbs).
Formaldehyde, 2 oz
Water, 1 gallon.

This developer works very contrasty indeed, and has the smarting, disagreeable odor of formaldehyde; but will absolutely prevent frilling. This is distinctly a hot weather developer and must not be used under 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

Do not forget that a thorough development of the negative is essential to the success of this process. If this is not thoroughly done, then the lower strata of the emulsion will still contain undeveloped bromide of silver which has not been reduced to a silver negative image by the negative development and which in the following second development will be reduced in the high lights of the positive, clogging them with a veil of negative which has not yet been destroyed because it must be developed before the bichromate solution can dissolve it away.

Do not attempt this process on a valuable exposure until you have made a number of test pieces successfully and are fully convinced that you can trust yourself to conduct the entire process with the same success that you would the ordinary developing and printing processes.

Recent Motion Picture Patents.

The following are condensed descriptions of patents recently granted relating to motion picture photography. A number of correspondents have written asking information about various patents relating to inventions and processes on which they were working and there are doubtless many others who like to follow the trend of progress in the art.

A list of recent patents was given with short descriptions in the issue of August 26th. The following are patents which have been granted since then. As there are such a large number of patents granted for instruments and processes relating to cinematography, it is not possible to give them all; only those of direct bearing and interest to the motion picture photographer being included in the list.

These abstracts are made by the staff of the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company and contain only the meat of the Patent claims minus the legal phraseology. If you are particularly interested in any U. S. Patent you can obtain a complete description with explanatory diagrams by sending five cents for each copy wanted, giving the number of the patent, to the Patent Office, Washington, D. C.

1187929— D. E. Reid.

Non-flam film. An apparatus for forming a sheet continuously from an aqueous solution of viscose. The viscose is fed in a thin stream onto the top of a large rotating drum. It is surface-hardened by passing under a steam heated plate over which hot air is drawn by a vacuum device. The surface-hardened film is then carried into a bath of coagulating liquid and thereafter is stripped off the drum as a continuous sheet, which is conveyed over suitable rollers to other treating apparatus. Between the point where the sheet is stripped off the drum and the point where the viscose is fed to the drum there is located a cleaning and drying apparatus for preparing the surface of the drum.

A method for producing pictures in natural colors by photographing through color filters placed together in strips (three 0.2 mm. wide), and from the negative so secured making relief prints. The relief is made to actuate, by electrical means, an airbrush which sprays the respective complementary colors onto paper according to the height or depth of the relief; three colors superposed in this manner reproduce a subject in natural colors.

A Process of Color Photography. A colored negative film is made by exposing through but one side of a film composed of a transparent support having on one side an emulsion sensitized chiefly for green and on the other side an emulsion sensitized for red. After exposure it is developed, fixed, and the green selection negative stained green while the red negative selection is stained red. This colored negative is then printed upon positive film substantially like the negative film, said positive film being developed, fixed and stained in the same manner as the negative. This is British Patent 3435 of 1914.

Musical Suggestions for "The Firm of Girdlestone."

Compiled by S. M. Berg

Released by The Greater Vitagraph.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 49 T "My only wish" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 50 D "John shows Ezra the will" is a description of action.

John Girdlestone, head of "The Firm of Girdlestone" is a conspiring, harsh, hypocritical old man, whose interests center only in his business and son. With bankruptcy staring the firm suddenly in the face, he plans to have his son marry his ward, Kate Harston, who is heiress to a fortune. Kate, secretly engaged to Tom Dimsdale, resents the plan, but he tries to accomplish his end by imprisoning her in a lonely, haunted house. The father and son attempt her murder, and in escaping from the police meet their death. At the close of the picture Kate and Tom are reunited.

Time schedule: 74 minutes (5 reels, about 4,950 feet).

Further inquiries concerning any phase of this work should be addressed to Mr. S. M. Berg, Columbia Theatre Bldg., New York City.

A Plea of an Organist.

By S. M. Berg.

I am in receipt of a very interesting letter from Mr. Percy S. Barrastan of The Dominion Theater Vancouver, B. C. He mentions many things that may have happened to other musicians playing the organ that I am going to discuss in the following paragraphs. I will quote a few excerpts from his letter and will then endeavor to answer some of his inquiries.

Dear Sir: It is with great satisfaction I noticed your series of articles on the organ and would like to call the attention of piano and church organists who contemplate entering the field of film organists to the fact that this instrument is getting to be, if it isn't already the dominating factor in picture music. Your articles are concise, and put in such simple form that those who have a little organ tuition can readily understand them.

This series of articles applied to the knowledge gained from a theoretical teacher would become almost invaluable and with constant practise ought to supply the long-needed want, in other words, your series of articles are almost a correspondence course. I have often wondered why our great musical colleges did not take up this branch of commercial art, for the organ in moving picture houses is coming to stay. This brings me to the main object of my letter, and that is to musical scores. For the past few months I have been using the especially compiled scores for a well-known brand of pictures, and as I play the organ alone, I have found the piano part far from satisfactory. Those compilers don't realize that the orchestra is not the dominating factor in picture music and that organs alone are in the majority, especially in the West and Middle West, where a crying need is for an organ solo part for the organ. Also do not repeat so much. Bear in mind the fact that in the West we do not always get the pictures in rotation as released, and consequently the repeating becomes noticeable and depreciates the score 20 per cent.

Introduce musical selections from musical comedies, light operettas, etc. I am firmly convinced that the majority of the picture patrons who take any notice of music are in favor of less trying to imitate the picture and appreciate a good program of music which is not discontinued and which does not jump in here and there. Of course I realize there are exceptions. The written score is not going to be a success for organ users unless there is a radical change in the arrangement.

The above suggestions are not given in any bantering way, but as the result of careful study. I remain,

Yours very truly,
PERCY S. BARRASTAN.

In reply to this correspondent's letter, I have personally always taken one stand on anything that is attempted to raise the standard of music for the film, and believe it should be treated with a great deal of leniency, because even the best of us are really in the dark as to what the solution of film music is going to be.

One thing that readers possibly cannot realize is the unfortunate conditions under which scores are made. Every branch connected with the film industry seems to be able to do their preparatory work before the picture is assembled, excepting the musical question. Very little can be done in the way of preparation until the picture is absolutely completed, titled, assembled and cut. Then again, the picture may be made at the Coast, and the print may not be available for viewing until the very last minute. Such obstacles as these must reflect on the finished score.

Then with regard to repetition of the music, the difficulty as to copyrights are almost insurmountable. Scores which the writer speaks of are put out by a well-known publishing house who expect to make a profit on their investment. These scores are then supplied to the film exchanges, who in renting them to theaters expect to make a profit for handling them, which means this: The man making the score has to be paid. The music house who prints them expects some royalty on their copyrights and profit for their investment and a profit on the printing, while the producers of the film, themselves, expend not one penny in this service, which is the root of the trouble. A company spending $25,000 in a production of an ordinary feature, and a further expenditure of $10,000 in publicity and preparing paper advertising, etc., should spend a further 5 per cent on the score, and then a nominal rental could be charged for the use of the same instead of the prices now asked. It is strange that in anything connected indirectly with theatrical enterprises, there is a considerable amount of petty jealousy and very little of good feeling extended. I am sorry to say the music publishing business is in this category.

I am afraid the day is far distant when we shall have the compiled score contain two or more competitive publishers' music. This answers our correspondent's request for operatic selections blended in. The whole of such conditions are the exclusive copyrights of different houses, and if you should ask permission to reproduce any part of one of their numbers in the score, they would possibly give their consent, providing you paid a royalty on each number that you printed.

The solution of all these problems is going to be when the man that arranges the score is the servant of the film producers and after selecting his music, assembles the same. In the event of using copyrights, he will then agree with the different publishers to get an estimate for printing just the same as any other department of a film company.

To sum up, the day is surely far off when a part of the expenditures for producing the picture will be apportioned to the music instead of the companies' present methods of expecting a music publishing house to provide the scores for their films and then expect their exchanges to make a profit in handling the same to their exhibitors.

RAYMOND McKEE AGAIN WITH METRO.

Raymond McKee has been engaged as Mabel Taliaferro's leading man for her next two Metro-Rolfe five-act feature photoplays. The first of these will be "The Sunbeam," by Shannon Fife, adapted by June Mathis. In "The Sunbeam," Mr. McKee plays the part of Danny, the youthful sweetheart of Prue, played by the star. The following play is as yet unnamed.

After finishing his work with Emily Stevens recently in "The Wheel of the Law," another Metro-Rolfe production, in which the young actor appears as "Tommy Mainard," he went to Jacksonville for the purpose of giving his mother the pleasure of a Florida winter, which she has never yet enjoyed. A stock company engagement made the trip possible from a practical point of view. But when the offer came from the Rolfe studio, for Mr. McKee to return North to appear in Miss Taliaferro's support, his mother at once urged him not to miss the opportunity, even though it meant the abandonment of a cherished plan. Mrs. McKee and her son have taken an apartment on Columbia Heights, and will remain in New York all winter.

Raymond McKee played juveniles and light comedy parts for four years for Lubin, later going to Edison. His first stage experience was gained in a played called "Grit, the Newsboy," in which he had the leading part. He played Young Parmalee with Robert Hilliard in "A Fool There Was," and appeared in a number of musical comedies, notably "The Golden Girl," under the management of Mort H. Singer. He played in stock in Chicago and Atlanta. He was born in Chicago in 1892.

TEITEL LEAVES IDEAL STUDIOS.

Albert Teitel has resigned as president and sold his interest in the Ideal Film Studios and Laboratory at Hudson Heights, N. J., to W. G. Bumstead of Jersey City. Mr. Teitel will leave in a few weeks for Chicago, where he intends to promote a big moving picture enterprise, consisting of three manufacturers to produce under one roof in the most conspicuous and well equipped studio which will be built in a selected spot of Chicago.

Overproduction Not Feared

"Too Many Mediocre Pictures of All Lengths—But Kalem Isn't Worrying," Says William Wright.

THE cry of overproduction doesn't worry Kalem in the least," declared William Wright of that company to a World representative last week. "In the main I am inclined to agree with those film men who lay emphasis on the fact that it is mediocrity that is overproduced, but there is too little of real quality. If this is true of multiple reel productions it is to an equal extent the fact in the short pictures. The film manufacturer who will put big stars, real stories and top-notch productions into the short length field can laugh at overproduction. His market is more clear and open than it would be if the number of manufacturers in the country were cut in half.

"It is a peculiar fact that, while close observers of film conditions are noticing more and more a tendency on the part of exhibitors to return to the varied program for certain days of the week to offset the high rentals and monotony of the multiple reelers, so many manufacturers are blindly disregarding this opportunity. Many are reducing their output of short pictures, while others are weakening the quality by the withdrawal of stars and by routine and hackneyed productions. Perhaps this will be found to be one of the greatest reasons for the wonderfully increasing General Film business, until now its officers are actually serving six thousand customers.

"Of course, it is a fact that the production of quality short pictures involves much greater expenditures proportionately than the average five-reeler. Prominent stars cost just as much whether they are presented in five-reelers or one-reelers, stories by real authors with original ideas and logical plots cost as much and production cost is, per foot, many times greater. This is the case with our 'Grant, Police Reporter,' series. We are giving two stars, George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby. We have engaged Robert Welles Ritchie, one of the most prominent of fiction writers and newspaper men, to write the stories.

"It takes considerable courage to plan on this scale for a one-reel series, but—and here is the principal point—it also means that you needn't worry about overproduction, you have stepped outside the circle of competition.

"One of the most frequently recurring sentences in all the correspondence Kalem receives from exhibitors is 'Why don't all the manufacturers give us stars in their short pictures? When we get short pictures that we can advertise and boost the result is little different than with long pictures.'

"As all manufacturing success must be based on a study of the market and desires of the buyers Kalem has taken this attitude as a guide and it is responsible for our consistent policy. We have never turned out pictures that were merely 'short pictures;' we have aimed to give good short pictures plus advertising value. 'The Girl From Frisco,' 'The Hazards of Helen,' 'Ham Comedies,' are all the result and proof of this policy and their consistent, steady success is the answer to the cry of overproduction.

"The manufacturer aiming at quality isn't worrying about overproduction; the manufacturer producing without a definite policy or with an idea of cheapness will continue to find the market glutted and overstocked with his type of production. And, following the same line of reason, the exhibitor who books his programme without a thorough search for the quality of the field and without a definite policy of keeping his week's rental cost less than his week's receipts will continue to look for new alibis for poor business."

CAMDEN THEATER, PARKERSBURG, W. VA., REMODELED.

The Camden Theater, at Parkersburg, W. Va., was recently remodeled and redecorated, and, from the reports that have been received from F. Fayette Smoot, since then business has been steadily increasing. The management has also installed a number of new house features that have created favorable comment.

NEW MANAGER FOR ATLANTA THEATER.

George E. Schmidt has been appointed manager for the Alamo No. 2 Theater, Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Schmidt formerly managed the Prince Theater at Jacksonville, Fla., and the Strand Theater at Spartansburg, S. C., and is one of the best known theater managers in the South, having had a wonderfully successful career in theater management in a number of Southern cities.

FRANK DOWLER VISITS NEW YORK.

Frank Dowler, Jr., of Chattanooga, Tenn., vice president of the Signal Amusement Company, returned to his home after a short visit in New York, where he held a number of conferences with Paramount officials and department heads.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS

"THE MOVIE MENACE."

WE are indebted to the manager of a western branch picture company for calling our attention to an article published in "Association Men," the official organ of the Y. M. C. A. in the United States and Canada. Believing the article is of such value we agree with our correspondent that parts of it are of sufficient importance to repeat here, while other parts of it are omitted because we have at a very recent period used similar matter.

It appears that the liquor interests in looking about for a reason for the constantly decreasing sale of liquors, besides a decline in the number of cheap hotels and saloons, published in one of their leading trade papers the following answer and decision to their enquiries:

"It is the 'MOVIE MENACE' in capital letters. It is the subtle, insidious, back-door gossip of the industry, it has made a—million hammers but not a solitary horn for the liquor business."

This attack is a strange combination of the truth and the falsehood. The moving picture is neither "subtle" or "insidious," yet it does make "hammers"—rather than "horns" for the liquor trade.

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures have recently sent to manufacturers and directors of motion pictures an admonition concerning the use of liquor in pictures generally. It is as follows:

A great deal of promiscuous drinking is now shown in motion pictures, when entirely unnecessary for any dramatic purpose. For example, if two men meet on the street, they dash into a cafe for a drink; if a man enters his library, he at once rushes to his decanter for a drink; in a club room scene the principal occupation of the club members appears to be constant drinking. Advices reaching the National Board's office indicate serious objection to the constant drinking shown in motion pictures. This frequently lays open to criticism pictures which are otherwise of a high character. This constant repetition of unnecessary drinking merely indicates the limitations of the director in charge. We urge you to eliminate all unnecessary drinking incidents.

What Authorities Say.

In support of the advice given to manufacturers as above quoted, the National Board has secured from newspapers, social workers, police and magistrates alike the following agreed upon opinion: "Motion pictures have greatly decreased the business done by saloons, diminished the profits of liquor dealers, and lessened the number of arrests." On the side of the liquor interests the "Washington Post," Seattle, says: "The liquor interests, finding the movie pictures their chief enemies, are combining to oppose them." Interesting figures are given by Magistrate Leach of Queens Borough, New York. In his district in 1907, with a population of 1,755,000, there were 16,000 arraignments for intoxication. Last year in the same district with a population of 2,267,625, there were only 8,382 cases. Every magistrate in the city is commenting upon the decrease in intoxication and refer to three causes as being responsible for this beneficent change: increased education, employment refused to drinking men and the moving pictures. In further particular places are named where drinking places have been closed by the better of moving picture houses.

"THE PEOPLE'S UNIVERSITY."

It is not very long since the moving picture house was called "the poor man's theater." This was a very welcome title and for a long time aptly applied to the fact that the poor man with his family was enjoying those plays and pleasures which had previously been beyond his reach. The moving picture is, however, most progressive and now that it has become such a recognized leader and teacher, with its ever widening scope of educating pictures it could not be otherwise when it is considered upward of 20,000,000 persons attend the picture houses of America every 48 hours.

If evil existed in the pictures with such an attendance as this it would not be very long before the country was overrun with crime. As it is now testified that the contrary is the case it is most readily conceded that the moving picture is a great moral force, a greater educational power, therefore justly called the people's educator.

RECENT EDUCATIONAL PICTURES.

A Sea of Clouds.

Among the recent Travelogues at the Strand (New York) was one by Burton Holmes "Climbing the Austrian Alps." The title and author are in themselves sufficient guarantee for both their attractiveness and quality. While full of interest in every part, there is one scene which calls for special notice, as much for its beauty as for its unusual character. This particular scene taken at a height of many thousand feet is above the clouds, and one looks down upon a perfect sea of clouds as upon ocean billows. The scene is of new and entrancing interest. and the far stretching ripples of cloud waves having the appearance of foaming water, is most pleasing.

The Salmon Industry.

A recent industrial and educational picture of great interest is that showing the salmon industry along the Columbia River. This is one of those splendidly completed pictures in which you are taken in a state of knowing nothing and given a most complete and thorough knowledge of the given subject in the course of fifteen minutes. How many know that the salmon lives in the open sea for several seasons, goes up stream, spawns once and dies. This is one of the numerous facts taught so quickly. The gathering of the spawn, the securing of thousands of eggs, the hatching, the care of the young, the shipping of thousands of living fishes by rail for the supplying of other waters, are all part of a widespreading business. The knowledge of how to drive the school of fishes upstream for breeding purposes and all the known habits of this favorite are part of the industry, which is very interesting to become acquainted with.

Pictures to Elect President.

The honor of electing the next President has been committed very largely to the influence of the moving picture. This is the nature of a national tribute to the widespread powers and influences of the use of the picture both to reach the people and to impart knowledge. A scrutiny of the field showed that the pictures reach more people than the newspapers, while the universal use of them made it possible to convey a unified idea in all parts of the country at once. Both of the two great parties are striving to get the best possible results, and in addition to picturing the leading persons taking part in the contest, they are going so far as to have scenarios written, the more thoroughly to secure that which they respectfully desire the public to know, surely this must be educational politics.

Use of War Pictures.

The use of the war pictures at first so welcome in that they gave the world an idea of the terrors and sacrifices through which so many had to pass, and were considered an education in themselves to those at home, are now causing quite a discussion as to the wisdom of their widespread use. Prominent English Church authorities are protesting that pictures now taken at the front are not suitable for general exhibition purposes. It is true that pictures of murders and other most horrible crimes committed under ordinary circumstances would not be permitted. How then shall we act towards these same crimes committed under the so-called legitimate usages of war? It would seem that general pictures of battle scenes could not be protested against. Although there may be some to whom their repulsiveness might be offensive, unnecessary, gruesome details can easily be omitted. It would rather seem that in general the pictures are acceptable and can be made to serve a useful and educational purpose, and as with other pictures certain details may at the discretion of the makers be omitted. From the historical standpoint at least the war pictures are valuable to say nothing of other minor uses and the question of good taste is secondary.

Bluebirds for Happiness

No, This Is Not a Film Advertisement, But a Suggestion Taken from M. H. Hoffman's Booklet, That Will Bring Ease of Mind to a Tired Business.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

PRACTICALLY every phase of the amusement business must go through the star stage, and from side shows to grand opera the argument holds good. Old-timers can remember past the day of stars at the Metropolitan, when good singers made up the casts and none got more than they were worth as artists. Then can remember when vaudeville was just the old-time variety, and when the stage stars of today were merely featured—when John Drew was a member of the Daly stock and Miss Maude Adams was playing in a Hoyt farce. And after the rush of grand opera stars there came an era of comparative sanity. After variety became vaudeville, managers stopped paying fancy salaries to people with names and past reputations. After an era of all stars we are again approaching the "feature" stage, in which plays are presented "with" certain well-known players, instead of having announcement made of stars "in" certain plays. If you can hark back thirty years, you can trace the complete cycle, the full swing of the pendulum.

When an individual is "run down" he takes a tonic. When he is built up, he discontiues it. Looking back of the cycles it can clearly be discerned that the star system has ever been a tonic for a sick show business. Because the motion picture business is so young, it experiences much in a short time, and already we have come to the end of the first cycle. In the beginning the play was the thing. It is less than eight years since the first photoplayer became known, by name, to the patrons, and it was some time later before these favorites became stars;before people went to see this or that favorite "in" instead of this good play or that "with" certain players. Then came the time—and it always does come—when managers went to the variety stage for the old argument that if a little sugar is sweet a larger lump was sweeter. The photoplay stars were becoming commonplace. New names must be had. The process of star-manufacture was slow. They must be had ready-made. The dramatic and operatic stage were turned to.

It worked for a time. People to whom motion pictures were still "the movies" were first startled and then interested when their favorites of the stage were announced. They went to see—and pity. In those early days it paid to part with several thousand dollars weekly to someone who in their regular profession could command no more than as many hundreds. And because it paid—then—everyone jumped for the stars.

And the natural consequence followed. Instead of plays "with" stars, we got stars "in" plays, and mostly plays fixed up—gypped, if you will—like a decrepit horse—to give it all to the star. No matter how good the story might have been originally, it was tortured and twisted to fit the star.

In vaudeville, in the early days of stardom, people went to see a favorite and remained to enjoy the antics of the variety actors. When they got the habit of going and star salaries became prohibitive, the managements cut off such stars as could not offer both box-office pull and entertainment value. Now vaudeville is less feverish and more profitable.

It must be the same way in motion pictures. The day of the usefulness of the stage star is passed. They have brought to the theaters all who may be attracted. Now they will drive from those same houses the very persons whom they brought in unless there comes a change and the play is given precedence over the player. For a time it was said that as soon as someone broke the ice the others would follow, but already the Bluebird section of the Universal has broken the ice, and not only has it broken the ice, but it is spending money to educate the public.

Supplementing his advertising in the national press, M. H. Hoffman has brought out a little book for the guidance of his film salesmen. It is primarily an instruction to film sellers, but in it he condenses so interestingly his national advertising that a few passages are worth quoting. For example, he says:

> Bluebird invests in stories—that will hold your audience, satisfy it, and bring it back in greater numbers—not in stars who brighten, glimmer and fade * * * they draw, but quite often disappoint. * * * Our principal object in doing away with the star is to make use of the money; to put it into the story. The story is 90 per cent. of the play.

This may seem a decidedly radical statement and it probably is a bit too strong, but the play is the thing. If we could have access to the books of the late Charles Frohman for the past twenty years, these accounts would tell the story. What, for example, would be the profits of the Maude Adams tour the years she played "Peter Pan" or "The Little Minister," as opposed to "L'Aiglon" or "Chanteclair"? We have had no revivals of the latter plays. Most surely the play is the thing, but on the other hand, we will confess to a preference for Forbes Robertson in "Hamlet," rather than Corse Payton. The play is the thing, but it must be played. For that matter Bluebird itself pays very considerable attention to its casts and draws from the favorite players of the Universal for its presentations. Mr. Hoffman does not mean that a good play can save bad actors any more than that good acting can do much for a poor play. He does mean that with the abolition of the star system it is found possible to make a wholly good production of a good play and not spoil the play by fitting it to the personality of the star.

Most of us can remember back to the time, seven or eight years ago, when "Pathe Nights" and "Pathe Weeks" were popular. Later on it was "Biograph Nights" or weeks, and so it went. The favor went to the companies that produced the best plays in the best manner, and the profits went with the favor, though under the old arrangements it was not possible to realize proportionately upon the advantage gained, because of the standing order system.

Just now a number of business men are looking about them to see what can be done to cut down expenses and build up income. Mr. Hoffman's little blue book on Bluebirds contains the solution of the problem between its covers. Time was when patrons went to see a Vitagraph or a Biograph because they felt certain of good entertainment. That time must come again, and it will be profitable to speed its coming instead of seeking to bolster up a sick star business with more stars. Get good stories well played and the production can be made the feature, and if the players go somewhere else, others as good can be had without detriment to the bank roll or the business done, but the longer you hold a star the more of a slave you become. Break the bonds and build a real business, and we will all prosper in proportion.

GAUMONT SECURES EDITOR FOR "REEL LIFE."

The popularity of the latest Gaumont single-reel "Reel-Life" has made it necessary to secure an editor who will devote his entire time to this highly entertaining release. For this position the Gaumont Company has secured Paul M. Bryan, already well known as a writer of scenarios. In addition to his work in this field, he will also pass as a specialist upon the title for all Gaumont single-reel releases and photoplays.

Mr. Bryan, who has had an interesting and successful career as a newspaper man and in Government service, is one of the most popular writers who have contributed photoplays to the screen through Gaumont. Among his leading successes are "The Card Players" in which Gaumont presented William Roselle, "Lessons in Love" with Hal Forde, and "The Isle of Love" with Gertrude McCoy. The new editor has assumed his duties at the Flushing studio, where the Gaumont laboratories are also located. Mr. Bryan, who has been living in Denver for some time, will move his family to Flushing within a few weeks.

INTERNATIONAL NOW OCCUPIES TWO FLOORS.

The International, in order to concentrate its offices, has leased and furnished the entire fifteenth floor of the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh Avenue and has moved the departments that have been located on the eighth floor to the fifteenth. The executive offices will continue on the sixteenth floor. The new arrangement gives the International two entire floors adjoining, the fifteenth and sixteenth.

Increasing business has necessitated enlarging the animated cartoon department which will be located on the fifteenth floor, as will the New York Exchange and the business department. On this floor the International has constructed one of the largest and most beautiful projection rooms in the country. It will seat approximately fifty persons and is furnished in the Adam style. It will be used exclusively for showing exhibitors the new International releases.

The sixteenth floor will, as heretofore, house the executives. On this floor there will be another large projection room, which will be devoted wholly to the use of the executives.

NEWS AND VIEWS OF PHOTOPLAY HOUSES EVERYWHERE

T. & D. THEATER, PORTLAND, OREGON.

Largest Picture Palace Controlled by Turner & Dahnken—Exterior Is Magnificently Illuminated With Pretentious Electrical Display—Managed by M. O. Leonhart.

THE T. & D. Theater, Portland, Oregon, operated by the Turner and Dahnken Circuit, of San Francisco, is the largest theater controlled by the company and the largest exclusive photoplay theater in Portland. It is located on Broadway, a hundred feet off Washington street, this location being one of the most central in the city.

The electrical display in front of the T. & D. is undoubtedly the most magnificent in Portland, and it is reputed to be the most pretentious west of Chicago. It consists of a large arrow sign extending across Broadway, a large fan with the words "T. & D." on it topping a four line changeable board and changeable marquee border signs. The entire display is fitted with mechanical breakers which make it very effective. The whole front of the theater is set with stationary lights in profusion, and at night the T. & D. is one of the brightest spots in Portland.

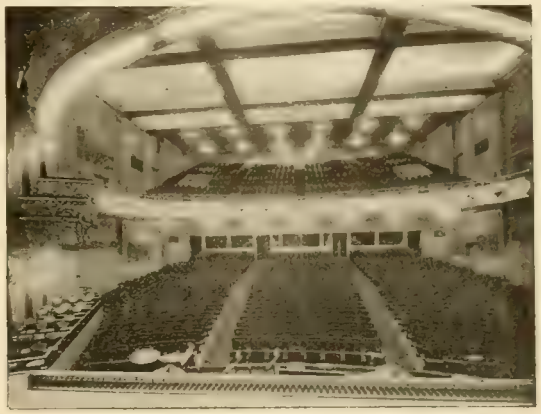
The house is one of Portland's newest theater buildings. It was erected in 1913 by the Blodgett Company, Ltd., on the site of the city's former public library. The Condon-Noonan Company had intended to open it as an independent theater but before it was completed Sullivan and Considine took a lease on the premises and finished the construction. When completed, it was the home of Portland's Orpheum shows. Tom Conlon, who now manages the Hippodrome in Spokane, was the theater's first active manager. Sullivan and Considine afterwards moved the Orpheum shows to a theater further up Broadway, transferring S. & C. vaudeville to the former Orpheum and changing the name to the Empress. As the Empress the theater was operated until the Sullivan and Considine circuit left the field in May of this year, when Turner and Dahnken leased the house from Ackerman & Harris, of San Francisco, who fell heir to the S. & C. business here.

Tom Conlon successfully initiated the house to pictures during the summer of 1915. Since that time, however, the projection booth has been enlarged and modern photoplay theater equippment installed. Turner & Dahnken opened the theater May 14 of this year. They renovated the interior, made considerable alterations and added the electrical display and organ. They spent approximately $50,000 in improvements. The building covers ground 100 by 200 ft. The auditorium has 2,300 seats, of which 1,400 are on the lower floor. The seats are leather upholstered throughout the house. There are 15 exits opening to three streets.



Interior of T. & D. Theater, Portland, Ore.

The interior of the theater is finished artistically. The walls are decorated with paintings of autumn scenes and the foyer and aisle entrances are hung with rich portiers. Much of the house lighting is indirect, the globes being concealed in coves in the beamed ceiling. The large foyer is separated from the auditorium proper by plate glass. A tastefully decorated mezzanine floor is reached by interior stairways and it is used to accommodate overflow crowds. Two women's rest rooms are provided off the mezzanine.

Although not being indicative of the size of the theater, the front is nevertheless imposing and a spacious lobby provides plenty of room for advertising display without crowding.

Beautiful Mezzanine of the T. & D. Theater, Portland, Ore.

The ticket seller's booth and treasurer's office are located to one side of the lobby.

The theater opened with orchestra music but this was soon replaced with a Hope-Jones Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra and the pipes from the organ form the stage setting. The unit orchestra is the only one of its kind in the city. The projection is furnished by two Power's machines, throwing an 18 by 24 picture at 135 feet. The ventilation system is of the largest type for theaters.

The manager of the T. & D. is M. O. Leonhart, who came from the Turner and Dahnken theater at Berkeley, Cal., to manage the Portland house. Mr. Leonhart is rapidly building up a high class patronage, and it is not uncommon to see a sprinkling of full dress suits in the house any night in the week. While the administrative affairs of the theater are mostly handled from the San Francisco office, Mr. Leonhart has been given opportunities to introduce several successful innovations.

MAJESTIC THEATER, TRENTON, MO.

Trenton, Mo. has a splendid moving picture theater in the Majestic. It is owned and managed by Byron Sherwood, and was opened on August 14, last. The front is of terra cotta, and the four big arches forming the entrance add dignity to its frontal effect. The exterior is well illuminated, and the semi-indirect lighting system is used in the interior. The structure, which stands on a plot of ground 65 by 125 feet, represents an investment of $35,000. It has a seating capacity of 500. The interior decorations are buff and allied tints trimmed in gold. The walls are broken by pilasters at regular intervals. The ceiling is beamed, and the beams rest on the pilasters. The screen is set a little ways back on the stage so as to give correct perspective of the picture from the front row of seats. There is a shadow box of black around the screen, at each end of which is an arched passage way made of trellis work and decorated in flowers. An orchestra of five pieces is employed to render the musical accompaniment to the pictures. The operating room contains two Power's 6a motor driven projectors, a spot light and a dimmer which operates on the house lights. E. Smith is the director of the orchestra.

STRAND THEATER, TOOLE CITY, UTAH.

The opening of the Strand theater in Toole City, Utah, took place on Independence Day, last, and the enthusiasm which the populace displayed over the dedication of this handsome little photoplay institution is still as fervent as ever. H. H. Johnston, the manager, is particularly well pleased with the amount of business done so far. The structure seats 500, and there are a sufficient number of exits and aisles. The seats are of the opera chair variety, and there is enough room between each row to prevent those seated from twisting and squirming to allow a person to either go to a seat or leave one. The Strand runs an all feature program which is changed daily. The operating room is in first class condition and is built of fireproof material. Among the equipment is a motor generator set and two Power's 6a machines. The admission price is 10 cents.

TREMONT THEATER, BOSTON, MASS.

Famous Playhouse, Which Was All But Destroyed by Fire in March, Has Been Rehabilitated—Many Improvements Made in Reconstruction—Gave Special Showing of "Civilization" to Enthusiastic Congregation of Clergymen.

JOHN B. SCHOEFFEL, manager of the new Tremont theater, Boston Mass., has received a host of congratulations on the appearance and equipment of this famous playhouse, which was practically destroyed by fire in March of this year. The interior of the theater is almost all new. The old lines of the balconies and proscenium arch have been retained, but in every other respect the inside of the house is different. The interior is done in the style of the English Renaissance of the period of 1700. Green and ivory white are the prevailing colors of the auditorium, but as beautiful and complete as are the changes and improvements of the body of the house, it is on the stage that the radical innovations have been installed.

The stage is all of concrete and steel construction, and as fireproof as modern devices can make it. The traps are so arranged that the entire stage is movable. These traps vary in width from one foot to the entire width of the stage. The new switchboard is worked differently from any others in that practically everything in the entire house can be controlled by it. This applies to both the stage and the auditorium; but a secondary switchboard, located in the main lobby, controls the lighting of the front of the house exclusively. As to the general lighting it is of interest that the auditorium can be flooded with light, all concealed, so that there is not the slightest glare from any section of the house. The old chandelier has been done away with. There is an auxilliary service so that in case of any defect in the system which might put out the lights, another service can be immediately put into use, this through a connection with the Edison plant, which is practically next door to the theater. New chandeliers have been placed in the foyer and lobby, which will add greatly to the general effect.

Another innovation on the stage is the installation of three floor pockets, instead of the usual two, which always have been for the arc and incandescent lights. The third is for the dimmers and is entirely independent from the other two so far as operation is concerned. Throughout the building a new system of ventilation has been installed, and this applies not alone to the stage and to the auditorium, but to the dressing rooms, the women's retiring rooms and the men's smoking rooms. There is also a new vacuum cleaning plant in the theater.

At the sides there are short run-ways, instead of steps, which formerly were the means of descending to the lower level of the auditorium. This, too, will be found to be a great improvement. The entire body of the house has been carpeted in two shades of green, and 2,000 yards of floor covering has been used. In the lobby a new and beautiful mosaic flooring has been laid and the entrance way has been done in black and gold, which is particularly effective.

Probably the most effective of the fire protective appliances is the new Regan water curtain, which is the design of Chief Regan of the Boston Fire Department. The nozzle of this curtain is located at a convenient point at the front of the stage and it can be operated either by firemen on the outside of the building or by the watchman on the inside. By the mere turning of a lever the whole front of the stage can be sprayed fan-like at a moment's notice. Several new dressing rooms have been installed under the auditorium.

More than five hundred clergymen from Boston and other parts of New England were present at a special exhibition of "Civilization," given one morning recently at the Tremont. The clergymen sat through the entire show in rapt attention, and when it was over numbers of them sought the manager and enthusiastically commended the spectacle. Several of them declared that they would make the film a topic of one of their sermons.

Davison Brings Over English Films

By George Blaisdell

London Open Market Specialist Talks About Motion Picture Conditions in the Home of John Bull

IN SPITE of the fact that a thousand moving picture houses have been closed in the British Isles as the result of war conditions the market for films in London is fairly good at the present time, declares Thomas H. Davison of the Davison Film Sales Agency, Limited, of 151-153 Wardour street, London. Mr. Davison, who is a specialist on the open market, arrived in New York last week to remain until October 26. He brought with him three five-reelers, which soon will be shown to the trade. They are "Jimmy," by John Strange Winter, author of among others "Bootle's Baby"; "Fatal Fingers," by William Le Queux, author of twenty-three books, and "Kent, the Fighting Man," a drama in which the lead is played by Bombadier Wells.

Mr. Davison said the three subjects he brought over would soon be followed by other productions of British manufacture, among which are two adaptations of Marie Corelli, "Temporal Power" and "The Treasures of Heaven." Others are Charles Garvice's "Diana's Destiny" and W. J. Locke's "Derelicts," and also "Tom Brown's School Days."

Vampire or sex stories are not popular in England these days, the visitor asserted. Clean, high-class heart-interest dramas and strong comedies are in demand. For the supplying of the 4,800 theaters there is keen competition among the renters.

Thomas H. Davison.

"One thing that has upset conditions in the exhibition of pictures is the tax on tickets, ranging from 25 per cent. down," said Mr. Davison. "Of course, this situation does not exist among the big West End theaters—the managers of these houses do not care a rap about the tax. It is in the manufacturing towns and villages where the impost is most felt. Then, again, the darkened streets are not, of course, conducive to big business. The absence of illumination, as you know, is due to the fear of tipping off the Zeppelin crews as to the location of the towns. The only outward indication of the presence of a theater is a small dim colored lamp.

"Then again, the export business is handicapped to some degree by the necessity of procuring a license for each film before it can be sent out of the country. Not only is it an expense, but the transaction involves time. But film men as well as men in other lines of industry bow to the rules imposed upon merchants. It is a grim war we are fighting over there, and every one is doing his bit to help those in authority."

Mr. Davison was asked as to the situation in England in regard to censorship. "There has been discussion as to the advisability of placing women in a position of authority in censoring," was the reply. "In fact, there has been considerable talk about the whole question of censorship. As it stands now our official censor may pass a subject and the police authority, the chief constable, for instance, in any community, may decree that that subject cannot be exhibited within the limits of his jurisdiction. There's no appeal from the decision. A man in London buying a film for a certain territory may have no means of knowing in advance what the action of the authorities in his section will be regarding it. If in the subject there may be anything on which there may be a difference of opinion the buyer will hesitate.

"It is this condition that has caused many film men to come out in advocacy of a central censoring power whose decisions could not be disputed anywhere in the islands. You see, the Home Office has jurisdiction over the police, and any edict of a duly authorized official would be respected all over. It is believed by many that until something of the sort indicated is done there will be an absence of real stability in the business of buying and renting films in Great Britain."

Mr. Davison was asked if the absence of so many men in the army had tended to interfere with the efficient operation of the theaters. He said in reply that many women were now working as operators, and that as a natural result in many cases where these were acquiring the skill necessary to run a projection machine much film was damaged. "Yes, there are some cases, too, where women are managing theaters. We also have a renting concern managed by a woman, Mrs. Renton of the Standard Feature Film Company. She is a real manager, too."

The visiting film man said the high price of chemicals was one of the handicaps of the manufacturer, the advance in many cases being from two to three hundred per cent. Several firms have closed their studios for the duration of the war.

Eugene Strong

EUGENE STRONG, who is cast as Robert Clayton, the artist, in the sixteen episode super-serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery," by Consolidated Film Corporation, is one of the most popular matinee idols of stage or screen. Mr. Strong has an enviable record on the stage, where he became a favorite through the portrayal of juvenile parts. For six years he was in stock in the west, and then appeared for two years in the leading role of "The Virginian."

He appeared in the Paul Armstrong sketch, "To Save One Girl," on a forty weeks' vaudeville tour supporting Catherine Calverty, Mr. Armstrong's wife. His first big success in motion pictures was as the juvenile in "The Man Inside," in which he supported Edwin Stevens. Mr. Strong is tall, handsome and athletic and a perfect type of matinee idol. In "The Crimson Stain Mystery," as the artist, he will be seen in many powerful scenes with Olga Olonova, the latest Russian vampire find. The studio scenes in "The Crimson Stain Mystery" are the most daring yet attempted on the screen, and they give Mr. Strong an opportunity to put into full play his magnificent talents as an actor.

FILM ASSOCIATION EXPANDS.

The Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association has moved into its new headquarters in the T. & D. Theater building. A large room has been secured in the building, which is one of the most prominent corners of the city, and its central location will undoubtedly make it popular with exhibitors. The boys are furnishing their new quarters in fine style.

The co-operative spirit among the city's film fraternity created by the organization is such as has never before existed among the film men here. Few out-town exhibitors are now members, but an effort will be made to have the name of every film man in the state on the membership roll. The many matters now confronting Oregon's exhibitors demand a strong organization.

FILM STAR GIVEN OVATION.

Miss Edith Story Learns What It Means to Be Shut Up in a Prison Cell, With Both Hands Locked to the Bars.

MISS EDITH STORY, the well-known picture star, arrived in Chicago Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 3, and left for St. Louis the following day at midnight. During her brief stay every hour was as full of action as if she had been engaged in the most strenuous scenes in which she has appeared during her moving picture experience.

Tuesday evening she and her mother were the guests of S. E. Abel at a dinner given in her honor in the College Inn, in the Hotel Sherman. The cafe was decorated with photographs of Miss Story, and every table was also adorned with a beautiful autographed photo of the screen favorite. Around the large table were seated a number of Chicago's most prominent exhibitors.

Tuesday night she visited, among others, the Pine Grove and Albany Park theaters on the North Side, and the Harvard, Harper, Vista and Frolic on the South Side, where she was received in the most enthusiastic manner by thousands of fans who have closely followed her successful career.

At 9 o'clock Wednesday morning Miss Story and her mother, escorted by a large party of exhibitors and others in the trade, left for Joliet, where special arrangements had been made for giving the inmates of the Illinois State Penitentiary an opportunity to meet one of their favorite stars. The party was made up at the special invitation of the Warden, who postponed a business trip in order to attend personally to the reception of Miss Story. The tour through the penitentiary was personally conducted by Deputy Warden Waters, and Miss Story was very much interested in the welfare of the prisoners.

"I am so glad to see that the prisoners are so well treated," she said to the deputy. "Although I do not envy them their lot, the cruelty and dirt that I had expected to find amid their surroundings does not exist. In fact, the men seem to be perfectly contented, if that could be possible."

At lunch time the party was conducted to the dining room, where Miss Story was the center of 1,400 pairs of eyes, which were riveted on her so persistently that the possessors neglected their food.

Thinking that she might be able to be of some assistance to the less fortunate members of her sex, Miss Story insisted upon going through the women's quarters, where she made a very interesting address and promised to do whatever she could to add to their amusement and well being. Miss Grace Fuller, the matron, made known to Miss Story that she hoped soon to have a projecting machine, so that the women inmates, who are very much interested in moving pictures, may be able to keep in touch with the outside world. "When we do have the proper facilities, we should like very much to have one of the films which contributed to your success shown on the screen here," said Miss Fuller.

L. M. Reubens, who controls several of the largest theaters in Joliet, was a very cordial host and director of the party during their stay in that city. After Miss Story had made the rounds of the penitentiary, he introduced her, in several of his largest theaters, to thousands of people who had gathered to greet her.

On returning to Chicago, while narrating her experiences, Miss Story said that she had enjoyed the day immensely, except when she was shut up in a cell, in the penitentiary, with both hands locked to the bars. "Then I couldn't help feeling dreadfully sorry for the poor unfortunate creatures who are frequently placed in the same position for hours at a time, with only bread and water," she said, commiseratingly.

On Wednesday evening Miss Story visited a number of Chicago picture theaters, during which she spoke to over [illegible] people.

From St. Louis Miss Story will proceed to Los Angeles, where she will be engaged for some time in two prominent Vitagraph productions, at Vitagraph's Hollywood studio.

Miss Story's next picture will be "An Enemy to the King," in which she will be a co-star of E. H. Sothern, the eminent dramatic actor.

Charles F. McKiel was appointed manager of the Parkway theater, North Clark street and Diversey Boulevard, on September 25. "Charlie" is a young and promising man who has been connected with the Parkway since it was opened as a vaudeville house in 1910. He began as an usher and soon rose to the position of head usher, and then became stage manager of the vaudeville programs. "Charlie" has also been connected with the Parkway since its first moving picture program was offered, and is known and liked by every patron of the house. He owes his advancement by strict attention to his duties and by his uniform and genial courtesy to everyone with whom he came in contact. He announces that his policy at the Parkway, henceforth, will mean the best moving picture programs possible for his patrons.

J. B. Reisman, manager of the Dale theater, St. Paul, made a pleasant call at the Chicago office Wednesday, October 4. The object of Mr. Reisman's Chicago visit was for business and pleasure combined. He took a run out to the Essanay plant while here, accompanied by W. R. Scates, manager of the G. F. Company's Chicago office, and also called on the heads of various branches of the trade and at exhibitors' headquarters in the Masonic Temple. Mr. Reisman reported good business, generally, in St. Paul, and stated that business is improving rapidly after the extreme hot summer. Mr. Reisman left for his home city Thursday evening.

The Bismarck Garden, Chicago's largest and most popular outdoor musical resort, located on Broadway and Grace street, will use moving pictures henceforth to vary the musical program and dancing. An up-to-date operating room and equipment have been installed in the new Marigold room, where the Pathe News Weekly, and educational pictures of the George Kleine brand will be shown nightly. The operating equipment consists of Simplex machines, a Martin rotary converter, arc rectifiers, etc. It was installed by the Mid-West Theater Supply Company, this city, of which Jack Williams is manager. Karl Eitel, president of the Bismarck Garden Company, has subscribed for The Moving Picture World to keep him posted on the moving picture business in general.

Fred R. Martin, traveling representative of Metro, for the Des Moines office, Iowa, has written that he recently attended the opening of the Grand theater in Estherville, Iowa, a town of 4,500 inhabitants. This house has just been completed by F. H. Graaf, at a cost of $75,000. The Grand programs will consist of the regular Metro releases, Metro-Drew comedies and the Metro travelogues. Paramount, World-Brady and the Triangle pictures will also be shown. "The Crimson Stain Mystery" serial was started the first week in October. The Grand seats 1,000 people, and an admission of 15 cents is charged for downstairs seats and 10 cents for the balcony. The house will also be used for the presentation of super films, when higher prices will be charged. A full description of the house, with cut, will appear later in another department of The Moving Picture World.

It seems that the Ohio Board of Censorship has become ultra critical recently in some of its actions. One of the latest was the cutting out of pictures of girls in bathing suits from two recent numbers of the Selig-Tribune. It may be stated that the bathing suits worn by the maidens in these news scenes were approved by the bathing-suit censors of Chicago and elsewhere.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have contracted with the Triangle Film Corporation for the initial release of that product on Monday and Tuesday every week, at the Orpheum theater, on State street. "Old Folks at Home," with Sir Herbert Tree, will be the first of these initial releases, and will be made October 9. The new arrangement means that the Orpheum will present Triangle films for their initial showing within the "Loop."

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ince, accompanied by Mack Sennett, spent a few hours in the city Saturday, September 30, on their way from New York to Los Angeles. Miss Edith Bennett, who played with Otis Skinner last season, has been secured by Mr. Ince as leading woman for a big new feature on which work will be started shortly.

Aaron J. Jones announces that the Central Film Corporation has arranged with the Saxe Brothers, of Milwaukee, to take over the Orpheum theater in that city for the week beginning Sunday, October 8, to present Clara Kimball Young's picture, "The Common Law." Norman E. Field, manager of the Colonial, Chicago, will have charge of the Orpheum, Milwaukee, for that time. This feature film had great success for its run of sixteen days at the Studebaker, in Chicago.

The Ascher Brothers have leased the theater in the new Fuchs Building, Halsted and Grace streets, this city, for ten years, at a term rental of $175,000. This theater has not yet been named. It has a seating capacity of 2,500, and, it is said, will cost, when completed, $200,000. It will be the largest theater outside of the "Loop." It is the intention to offer moving pictures of the highest class in this house, with a full orchestra.

David W. Griffith stopped over in the city Sunday, October 1, on his way from New York to Los Angeles, where he will arrange for the presentation of "Intolerance." J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the Epoch Producing Company, who arranged for the revival of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial, here, accompanied him to the Coast. In an interview with Louella O. Parsons, photoplay critic of the Chicago Herald, Mr. Griffith said, in part: "I haven't seen a Triangle picture in four months. I have never produced a Fine Arts production, and the words 'supervised by David W. Griffith' were put on the screen without my knowledge. My time has been spent making 'Intolerance,' which has occupied all my waking hours. It has been well received in New York by people of every nationality and of every creed."

George Fawcett, who has scored artistic triumphs in "The Crisis" and "The Country that God Forgot," arrived in Chicago from Los Angeles Monday, October 2. He left the same evening for New York, where he will spend a short vacation with his family before resuming work for the Selig Company. Mr. Fawcett had just finished his work in "The Light of Western Stars," before leaving Los Angeles. This story was written by Zane Gray, and features Miss Bessie Eyton and Tom Mix as co-stars, for the first time.

Judging from reports received at the Selig offices, this city, from exhibitors, "The Country That God Forgot" is proving very popular. Reports from the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay exchanges stated that in many cities this feature has been booked for runs of from three days to a week. The critic of the Cleveland Plain-Dealer writes that this film "has never been surpassed in Western drama."

News of the marriage of Clark Coffy, a wealthy young attorney of Vicksburg, and Miss Bessie Eyton, has been received by friends in Chicago. Miss Eyton appears as Virginia Carvel in "The Crisis," and she accompanied the Selig company to Vicksburg. There, so the story goes, she met Mr. Coffy, who is a member of an old Southern family. It was a case of love at first sight.

It is said that when Miss Eyton left Vicksburg she took the heart of Mr. Coffy along with her, and when she returned to Los Angeles to become co-star with Tom Mix in "The Light of Western Stars," Mr. Coffy followed her to press his suit for her hand and heart.

Miss Eyton (that was) has never appeared on the stage and was never connected with any moving picture company other than the Selig Polyscope Company. She scored her first success in "The Spoilers" and repeated in "The Cycle of Fate," "The Prince Chap" and other Selig productions. The greatest acting of her career, thus far in moving pictures, according to critics, is in the role of Virginia Carvel, in "The Crisis."

Sam Spedon, the well-known publicity director, was in Chicago last week. He is promoting the interests of a one-reel picture, "The Government in Action," an invitation showing of which will be made soon in a Chicago theater. The picture was produced by the Motion Picture Forum, and it is given out that the Democratic National Committee will use the picture in campaign work.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the ensuing week:

Studebaker—Jules Verne's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" (Universal). This feature has been made possible by an ingenious invention of the Williamson Brothers, who made "Neptune's Daughter," in which Annette Kellerman scored a great triumph.

Ziegfeld—Anita Stewart in "The Combat" and Earle Williams in the serial, "The Scarlet Runner." This theater has resumed its old name, since the disbandment of V-L-S-E, Inc.

Colonial—"The Birth of a Nation" (D. W. Griffith). The revival of the big Griffith spectacle has been received with popular acclaim in Chicago, judging from the crowds that have thronged the theater since the opening, Thursday evening, September 28.

Every reader of the October 14th issue of this publication could not fail to have had his attention attracted by the highly artistic and happily conceived plan of the two-page advertisement of "The Crisis." All credit is due Wm. Lord Wright, Selig's publicity director, for this work.

FRANK LOSEE RENEWS CONTRACT WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS.

This is the open season for renewal of contracts with the Famous Players Film Company. With Pauline Frederick and Marguerite Clark successively placing their signatures on the dotted lines set apart for that purpose, there is now a third line bearing the well known signature of Frank Losee. Mr. Losee, who is one of the best known character actors on the motion picture screen and has an enviable stage record as a basis of his celluloid achievement, will continue on the Paramount program in Famous Players productions.

WORLD FILM'S LARGE STUDIO PROJECT.

The World Film Corporation has secured a final option upon a tract of approximately 8,000 acres not far from Poughkeepsie, with a view to building a large studio and general production plant. Architects and builders have already been consulted, and active construction operations will begin as soon as the numerous titles have been formally passed to the realty concern which has been engaged in assembling this extensive property.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

FIRE DESTROYS PACIFIC LABORATORIES.

Early Morning Blaze Demolishes Two Story Plant—Cause Unknown.

FIRE of unknown origin early on the morning of September 19 demolished the plant of the Pacific Film Laboratories at 5813 Santa Monica Boulevard. Luckily for the owners of this firm, and those whose films were there for printing and development, the storage vaults were located in a fireproof storage building. The fire started somewhere in the main laboratory and rapidly ate its way to the offices and projection and drying rooms. Several fire companies were required to hold the blaze from razing the studio at present occupied by the Continental Film Producing Company, makers of the feature film, "The Spirit of '76."

The firm is under the management of H. T. Brookmiller, while the owner is W. H. Faust. The building and contents were insured for practically the full value, but as yet no definite estimate can be made of the film loss, because of the amount of footage that was stored in the vaults. Mr. Brookmiller said that they would immediately start rebuilding, as business had been very good, and the future looked promising.

A peculiar coincidence of this fire is that the Rolin Film Co., managed by Dwight Whiting, had recently moved from this studio to their new one in the downtown section of Los Angeles. The morning before the activities at their studio began a fire also of unknown origin broke out and a part of the main building was damaged. Little damage was done at the Rolin plant and no one was injured.

UNIVERSAL EXPANDING.

H. O. Davis Inaugurates Many Things—Newest a Real Art Studio.

Every day finds some improvement at Universal City. Now it's an addition to the art and ornamental department in the form of a clay modeling and moulding studio.

Perfect detail in the making of pictures is a hobby with Vice-President Davis and when he was unable to purchase the properties required for the features he decided to make his own.

In San Diego, where he was director-general of the exposition and its builder, he had in his employ H. R. Schmohl, who was in charge of the ornamental and cement work.

Art Department, Universal City.

Schmohl was secured to take charge of the new department at Universal City. He had already been connected with nearly all of the big expositions.

Since its inauguration the department has worked twenty-five men making the various accessories required for productions, and here clay modeling, papier mache and composition work are done. Wonderful statues are turned out in a remarkably short space of time. Papier mache butterflies, goblins and all sorts of reptiles and insects are made by the artists of this busy department.

Mr. Davis also secured the services of Richard Zeitner, who for thirty years has been adding to the art of this country in clay models. Zeitner was educated in Berlin and is said to be one of the best figurists in the United States. He is working, from life, on some figures and tablets for a coming Universal allegorical production.

The process of making models from clay is to first provide the frame to which is attached the clay, which then is moulded into the desired form by the hand of the artist. From this clay model a glue mould is made and into this eventually is poured plaster of paris, from which when dry the glue is removed leaving the cast as desired.

Included in this work at Universal City is the making of dishes, ornaments and any large or small article needed by the directors for the making of pictures.

THE TOLL OF THE SCREEN.

Moving Picture Workers Killed, Injured and Bruised.

Harry Richards, a stage carpenter employed on the night shift at Universal City, was instantly killed one morning this week when he plunged twenty feet into a pit on the main stage.

Richards had finished work and was about to depart, when he backed over the edge of the stage floor into the pit, which is used to represent a cellar.

Going beyond what was requested by the scenario, a street car jammed into a setting erected at Second street and Redondo avenue by the Fox Film Company and injured five people, of whom Frank Dolan was the most seriously hurt.

In Glendale Marin Sais, Kelem star, met with a peculiar accident the other day when riding horseback. In an exciting moment in a scenario the bridle slipped off her horse and struck her in the face with force sufficient to break her nose.

Suffering from a fracture of her right wrist, Lillian Peacock is confined to the hospital at Universal City. Miss Peacock was working in a scene before the camera in La Brea boulevard and at the time was wearing a man's suit of clothes. She was supposed to jump to the street from an automobile running past the camera when her foot slipped and she fell to the ground.

When a bicycle which she was riding in a film comedy broke in two, Gale Henry, Universal comedy woman, was injured. She was taken to the hospital at the film plant, where Dr. Lloyd Mace attended her injuries.

Herbert Rawlinson is hobbling around Universal City on crutches, while his muscles are cementing to the knee cap.

NEW LIGHT EFFECTS.

Marking a big advance in the use of artificial light in making photoplays, the Motion Picture Electric and Equipment Corporation succeeded this week in its initial undertaking, providing illumination for scenes taken at the San Diego Fair and the Hotel Coronado ball by Pollard Picture Plays, Inc.

The company, which was formed and financed by Willis & Inglis, is making a close study of possible improvements in studio and location lighting. Experiments also are being made in new and novel light effects.

Among other accessories the corporation has equipped a six and one-half-ton motor truck with generator, gas engine, switchboard, etc., which provide electrical power for lighting exterior night scenes, caves, shipboard interiors, railroad cars, halls and theater interiors, and the like. The truck weighs more than nine tons with its equipment, but can be taken almost anywhere. Winfield-Kerner lamps are being used and the corporation has purchased a large number of them.

The business of the company covers the rental and sale of lamps, the suggestion and installation of new effects, and the manufacture of studio equipment. Harry D. Brown, the head electrician, has made a lifelong study of the science of light and is conducting the experiments at the company's well equipped plant in Hollywood. Demonstration of the company's facilities for lighting will be given from time to time at the motion picture studios in the vicinity.

The firm of Willis & Inglis is the sole agent for the corporation, and through its efforts the "moving power house," as the truck has been named, has been engaged far in advance. With the coming of the rainy season it will prove a big benefit to the picture manufacturers of Southern California.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

At Selig's a fight that was a real fight took place during the filming of one of the scenes for "The Garden of Allah," with the result that all the participants are still carrying marks of the conflict. Director Campbell merely requested a realistic fight scene, and the actors entered into the spirit of the scenes so enthusiastically that scarcely one came off without some bruise, black eye or other injury, with each one of them swearing vengeance on his particular assailant in case of a retake. The immense street sets erected for this picture are exact duplicates of Algerian city scenes. Many of the mobs were composed of real Arabs, and professional Arabian dancers were secured for the cafe scenes.

Mae Murray, who has just arrived from New York, is the latest member of the Lasky "Never-again" Club. This organization is composed of members of the Lasky Company formerly residents of New York, who came to Los Angeles, went back to the great metropolis—returned to the west vowing that they never wanted to see the white lights again. Cecil B. De Mille, director general, is the charter member; William C. De Mille is next. Others in the organization are Frank Reicher, Fannie Ward, Marie Doro, Elliot Dexter, Jack Dean, Blanche Sweet, Kenneth McGaffey, and now Mae Murray.

Stage fans who saw the successful play, "On Trial," will remember the character of the man who was killed before the play began, but who appears in each of the four acts. This may sound like a paradox, but the play is responsible. All of which to say that "Billy" Garwood, who is making an excursion from the screen to the stage, is to play this character in a Morosco production of "On Trial" in Los Angeles. Garwood is much missed at Universal, where he directed and played his own leads.

Two of Mack Sennett's chief comedians at the Keystone plant are back on the job after a three weeks' vacation. They are Ford Sterling and Harry Gribbon.

Sterling's chief hobby is amateur photography and the greater part of his time while at leisure was spent motoring about the mountains and canyons of Southern California. He returned with a splendid collection of pictures.

Gribbon cares less for the picturesqueness of the great "out of doors." His holidays were consumed by a trip to San Francisco, where he sojourned for several days.

William E. Wing is author of a series of six two reel comedies now in production by Director Al Christie at the latter's Hollywood Studio, each member of the Christie Company to have a part in this comedy series. The subjects will be widely different and individual, and the production will carry out the Christie idea of "A Better Comedy," which is the motto of this studio.

The ten-reel western feature "The Light of the Western Stars" is fast nearing completion at the Selig studios under the direction of E. A. Martin. In it are co-starred for the first time Bessie Eyton and Tom Mix, and the supporting cast includes George Fawcett, Frank Campeau, Charles Gerrard, Victoria Forde, and others.

A letter from J. P. McGowan, directing the Signal Company now "en tour de location," says that "After wandering about the northern part of California for more than a week in search of a place with the proper topographical and climatic conditions necessary to the completion of the serial, 'The Lass of the Lumberlands,' the Helen Holmes company has at length established itself at the Hotel del Portal at El Portal, at the entrance of Yosemite valley. With an equal amount of sunshine to that common to the Los Angeles vicinity and with some of the most superb locations ever used in the production of a photoplay, there is small doubt but that the company will remain at their present quarters until snow flies."

Upon leaving Arcata, the company went direct to Hume, Cal., but they were forced to leave there without making a scene, because of the widely different methods of logging there as compared with those of the northern part of the state. They returned to Fresno and from there motored to Merced, where they remained a day, making exterior scenes in the city streets and in front of various of the important buildings of that place.

It is Mr. McGowan's intention to make all possible exteriors in and around the valley, and when railroad "stuff" is necessary, to charter a train, run it toward Merced, making pictures along the way, remain in Merced over night to get any city exteriors necessary, and return to El Portal the following day. With these facilities at his command, he will be able to get practically every type of scene known to pictures within a comparatively small radius.

So far as can be learned, this is the first time a picture company has invaded the Yosemite district for the purpose of making anything but educational and travelogue pictures.

After a lingering illness, the wife of George Seigman, Fine Arts director, has passed away at her home in Hollwood.

Funeral services were largely attended by representative motion picture people of the Southern California film colony.

There were a great many beautiful floral offerings from many friends.

Scores of letters and telegrams were received by Mr. Seigman, offering sympathy and consolation in his grief, giving ample testimony of the esteem in which he is held by his associates.

Mr. Seligman has left for New York.

At the Ince studios Frank Keenan and Enid Markey, who have had many successes in the past under the Triangle Kay-Bee banner, soon will be seen as co-stars, when they are presented by Thomas H. Ince in "Jim Grimby's Boy," from the pen of Lanier Bartlett. This is the first story by this author to be produced in Culver City, and is said to be one of the most picturesque ever made at the plant.

E. Mason Hopper has arrived at the Morosco-Pallas studios and is busy directing Vivian Martin in a big picture, "The Wax Model." Kathlyn Williams is appearing in "Redeeming Love," under the direction of Wm. Taylor. Thomas Holding, who recently arrived in the west is co-starring.

Lois Wilson, the well remembered Alabama beauty, is appearing in a Universal feature "For Value Received," under the direction of Donald MacDonald. Lee Hill appears opposite the pretty southern beauty. Roberta Wilson, her sister, who is now a full fledged leading woman, is being filmed in a big picture, "The Emerald Pin," under the direction of Burton George.

Hereafter all prints will be finished on the Christie lot, where the two brothers' film company is turning out comedies by the rod. A complete laboratory is now under course of construction and in a short time will be in full operation.

Myrtle Gonzalez, who has been making quite an inroad on Bluebird feature release dates with her big pictures made under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, has departed for San Diego, where she will vacate for a week. This is her first vacation in two years.

Max Dill, known more as Kolb and Dill, celebrated comedian, and now with the American, was wedded this week to a San Francisco actress, Miss Josephine Clark.

William Worthington at the Universal is directing a five-reeler, "In Love," with Claire McDowell as the heavy leading woman playing with Franklyn Farnum. Worthington is putting some fine pieces of photoplay in this picture.

Richard Stanton, the Fox director, is home from El Paso, whither he went with his company headed by Gretchen Hartman and Alan Hale. Dick used a lot of army men in this big picture down near the border.

Helene Rosson, of the American, is on a vacation to nobody knows where and where nobody will know where, for she's away from the pictures for sure, she said before she went.

Al Christie, at the studio which bears his name, is doing his first two reeler featuring Billie Rhodes. It has a crackerjack title, "Bride and Gloom," and is filled with a variety of new stuff, such as only Al Christie himself can inject into a two thousand foot laugh film. Harry Ham is the other lead in the film, but he is not "gloomy" by any means.

William Farnum and Oscar Apfel, of the local Fox plant, have finished their ninth picture. Big Bill is on a fishing vacation and Apfel is putting his time toward finding a suitable story to start next.

Dustin Farnum in his big new car has departed for a few days' drive across the desert into Arizona. It is not for his health by any means.

Reginald Barker, of the Ince forces, has gone on a vacation by motor to the depths and wilds of the Yosemite valley in this state. Bessie Barriscale has gone on a similar trip, only to New York.

Henry Murdoch, who appears in Ham comedies for Kalem, is suffering with a badly sprained wrist. He fell off of a star one day this week. Not a real star, but a hanging star under the diffusers, which was being used in a big comedy set.

For "His Slave," the newest Frank Keenan-Ince picture being made at Culver City, Director Walter Edwards is building the interior of an old Mississippi river steamboat with gambling rooms, ballroom, and buffet. This is quite a large set and will register well in the picture.

Raymond Gallager, ex-leading man with Universal and later juvenile player with the Christie comedy players, has retired from active work in pictures. He has amassed quite a fortune and is now happily at home in a big beach bungalow at Santa Monica. We hated to see this promising youth forsake the screen.

Daddy Wood, for a long time one of the popular actors with the Signal Film Co., passed away at his Glendale home last week. He is survived by a widow. He has appeared in "The Girl and the Game," "Whispering Smith" and many other big pictures under the direction of J. P. McGowan.

For "The Garden of Allah," being filmed by Selig under the direction of Mr. Martin, over three hundred extras were used in some of the big street scenes. These scenes were most gorgeous and it is only too bad that the modern cameras cannot register the true colorings as they appear in real life.

Quirk Again Heads Screen Club.

At Annual Election Progressives Defeat the Bulk of the Official Ticket.

AT THE annual election of the Screen Club, held on October 7, Billy Quirk was re-elected president. The votes were cast in the new home of the club, 117 West 45th street. While Mr. Quirk was named on the official ticket he actually was the nominee of the opponents of the faction which heretofore has dominated the affairs of the Screen Club—and be it admitted with some considerable degree of success. At 1 o'clock there appeared at the club a list of candidates printed on yellow paper. These were culled from the several eligible tickets. Before the polls were opened, two hours later, some one had dubbed the list as "The Yellow Menace." With two or three exceptions it was elected.

The other officers were: First vice-president, Edwin Carewe; second vice-president, Paul Scardon; third vice-president, Oscar Eagle; corresponding secretary, Anthony P. Kelly; recording secretary, Robert Welsh; treasurer, Will C. Smith; board of governors, two years, E. K. Lincoln, Frank Carroll, William Haddock and Harry Solter.

Of the foregoing Messrs. Scardon, Kelly, Welsh and Lincoln were named on the official list.

Strand Shows Administration Film.

Single Reel Showing President Wilson and the Members of His Cabinet Is Artistic and Dignified.

THE first motion picture of the Democratic National Committee was shown at the Strand theater in New York on Sunday, October 8. It was entitled "The United States in Action." The subject matter were intimate portraits of President Wilson and the members of his cabinet, all seated at their respective desks and represented as in serious conversation with an unseen caller. The pictures, which were produced by Charles R. Macauley, of the Kineticartoon Corporation and the Motion Picture Forum, were dignified, artistic and in every way worthy of the distinguished men portrayed.

The initial presentation was attended by a large number of prominent Democrats. Special invitations had been issued. The guests were greeted by "Doc" Wilson, of the theater staff, and T. M. Alexander at the 47th street entrance and by Manager Harold Edell in the lobby. Present were Colonel E. M. House, the confidant of the President; Secretary McAdoo, Secretary Redfield, Vance McCormick, Norman E. Mack, Henry Morgenthau and Norman Hapgood.

The showing of the film was attended by steady applause all the way, it being especially marked while the President was on the screen.

The subject shown at the Strand is one of 125 prints to be exhibited in New York City. Samuel Spedon is now in Chicago making arrangements for the distribution and showing of 35 prints in the lake territory.

Paramount Pictures

Two Famous Players' Productions Head Paramount Program for Week of October 23—Many Other Exceptional Features.

THE Paramount Program for the week of October 23 will contain two of the most exceptional features ever produced by the Famous Players and of the highest standard that have ever been distributed by this organization, in "The Rainbow Princess," a fascinating photoplay of circus life by Shannon Fife, in which Ann Pennington of Ziegfeld "Follies" fame is starred, and "Seventeen" Booth Tarkington's latest novel, in which Louise Huff and Jack Pickford co-star.

This is Ann Pennington's second screen appearance, and it is being looked forward to with keen interest by the exhibitors, since she scored so big a success in "Susie Snowflake." In this production, Miss Pennington makes a balloon flight and parachute descent, and also appears in the lion's cage in a number of scenes. The celebrated Hula Hula dance in which Miss Pennington created a sensation on the stage is introduced in this picture with the famous Hawaiian orchestra from the Ziegfeld Follies accompanying her, precisely the same as it is being shown seven times each week in New York City. This production was staged under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, and the supporting cast includes William Courtleigh, Jr., Clifford Gray, Augusta Anderson, Grant Stewart, Charles Sutton, Harry Lee, Edwin Sturgis, Walter D. Mealand, Herbert Rice, Queen Pearl, Ann Manning and Carl Gordon.

"Seventeen" offers wonderful opportunities for Louise Huff and Jack Pickford, which delightful comedy was staged under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. Mr. Pickford plays the role of William Sylvanus Baxter, one of the greatest characters ever conceived by Booth Tarkington. Lola Pratt is portrayed by Miss Huff, and the couple are surrounded by an all-star Famous Players cast, making it one of the most noteworthy productions this company has ever presented on the Paramount Program.

During this same week, Paramount will release a number of exceptional "little features," included in which are the 37th edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the 38th weekly, "Trips-Around-the-World," with Burton Holmes, in which a visit is made to the Island of Capri, and the Paramount-Bray Cartoon, "Bobby Bumps Helps Out a Book Agent," drawn by Earl Hurd.

The four leading subjects in the Paramount Pictographs are "Bubbles Worth While," "A School for Heroes," "Land Battleships in Private Life," and "The Hague of Dogdom."

In "Bubbles Worth While" there is pictured the wonderful accomplishment of the glass-blowing industry, showing in an interesting way how flint glass is made from a mixture of sand, red lead, and potash, moulded at a temperature of 240 degrees, and then blown by workmen into the most unusual shapes. These pictures were taken in the plant where the glassware service was made for Presidents Lincoln and Harrison.

"The School for Heroes" pictures the gruelling curriculum through which a pupil must go in the school for gridiron heroes, showing that the strategy used in the training camps for the football squad of the Princeton University Football Team, is very similar to that used by the field marshals in Europe who are mapping out their daily campaigns for their subalterns in the war of the nations.

A very interesting subject is pictured in the "Land Battleships" or caterpillar tractors, which are being used by a Wall Street firm, who have taken up farming as a side line, on a 16,000 acre strip of swamp land, and which they have turned into smooth, fertile farm lands, and operating it upon the most modern basis by means of this most modern mechanical device.

The closing subject of the magazine-on-the-screen shows the first peace tribunal that has ever been held by the dog delegates from every country including English and French bulls and Imperial dachshunds.

Burton Holmes' travels, which he is conducting for Paramount, are becoming more and more interesting, for he is at the present time taking American theater goers through those countries which are now in the war of nations, where it is particularly interesting to study these people, their habits and their modes of living.

Earl Hurd, the well known cartoonist is responsible for the laugh-provoking "Bobby Bumps," which animated character has become one of the most delightful in the theatrical world. His work in the Paramount-Bray cartoons has been greeted everywhere with enthusiasm, and in the release of October 23, where "Bobby Bumps Helps Out a Book Agent," he has the youngster creating a great many new antics, the majority of which are perpetrated upon Bobby's father. Bobby in this story puts roller skates on his Dad and makes him take all sorts of bumps and knocks, only to find Bobby getting a complete spanking for his trickery.

The third Paramount comedy to be released by Paramount will be "A Troublesome Trip," produced by the United States Motion Picture Corporation, and which will be issued October 30. This comedy is filled with side-splitting situations, and the wonderful amount of clever trick photography, which is so materially added in making this "little feature" one of the best sellers in the market.

Mary Pickford Opening

Popular Star's First Production Under Artcraft Banner Will Appear November 6 in Eighty Theaters.

NOVEMBER 6 has been set by Artcraft Pictures Corporation as the release date for Mary Pickford's first superior production, "Less Than the Dust." On that day eighty theaters in the United States will show this picture simultaneously. This is believed to set a record for a feature of the length of "Less Than the Dust." The list, which is nearly completed, promises to be a formidable one and includes practically all the most prominent circuits in the country. A conservative estimate of the number of people who will see Mary Pickford in her first appearance as an independent star at the head of her own producing company places the total at 300,000.

Among the notable additions made recently to the number of theaters which have booked the new Artcraft productions are the circuits of S. Katz, Ascher Bros. and Lubliner & Trinz of Chicago. Max Goldstein, manager of the Chicago exchange, has already booked Mary Pickford productions in more than thirty theaters in Chicago for exactly 100 days. Jones, Linnick & Schaeffer's Colonial and the Bijou Dream have signed for two weeks for each picture. The Alhambra in Milwaukee is another prominent first run house and Mr. Goldstine's list includes the most progressive exhibitors in Illinois, southern Wisconsin and eastern Iowa.

Arthur G. Whyte in the New York exchange has put on the Academy of Music as a companion of the Strand and reports that negotiations for other large and popular houses are approaching a satisfactory conclusion. Every State in New England is well represented in the business obtained by the Boston exchange. Cincinnati, Cleveland, Washington, Baltimore, St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Denver, Butte, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle are centers which are to have Artcraft service for long runs in numerous theaters.

One of the most remarkable examples of enterprise that has yet come to the notice of Artcraft is that displayed by the Majestic theater in Dayton, Ohio. Gerber & Haas, managers of the Majestic, have ordered thirty-one 24-sheet stands of Mary Pickford, which they will cover two weeks before showing with the special printing prepared for "Less Than the Dust." Their campaign will cover twenty-one towns adjacent to Dayton and seventeen newspapers in that territory will carry advertising of the new Mary Pickford productions.

MAYER GETS TRIANGLE BOSTON FRANCHISE.

Readjustment of the distributing plan of the Triangle Film Corporation on the basis announced last week, continues. Following the statement that Alfred Weiss had purchased a 50 per cent. interest in the New York branch office controlling the New York territory, the announcement is now made that Louis B. Mayer, one of the most prominent exchange men of Boston, Mass., has purchased a similar interest in the New England territory with headquarters in Boston.

Motion picture men throughout the country know Mr. Mayer well, as he has occupied a position of prominence in the film world during some years. His appearance in the Triangle co-operative plan is looked upon by the officials of that company as a distinct asset. In the arrangement by which Mr. Mayer takes over the New England Triangle territory on the plan described a redistribution of territory has been made. Hitherto the State of Connecticut has been included in the New York district, but with the advent of Mr. Mayer it is sliced off New York and attached to the New England district. Some readjustment of accounts will be necessary, and is in fact now in process.

MONMOUTH ENGAGES EDITOR.

The Monmouth Film Corporation has engaged the services of Miss Mildred Considine to edit, adapt and write scenarios. Miss Considine has just arrived from Chicago and has taken up her work of completing the screen version of the "Jimmie Dale" series, written by Frank L. Packard.

Ince Visits Shadow Lawn

Producers of "Civilization" Complimented by President Wilson, Who Shows Deep Interest in Motion Pictures.

PRESIDENT WILSON has shown himself during his term of office, a liberal patron of the arts. This might be expected from a man of his scholastic antecedents, achievements and inclinations. As a student of and exponent of literature, as a college president, he is eminently fitted to appreciate the educational advantages of the screen. It might be said of him that what politics have gained in the past four years, literature and learning have lost. The President indeed, appears to be exceptionally well inclined towards the motion picture. By his acts he has shown that he is personally interested in motion pictures. He has appeared in them scores of times, and film men will recall with peculiar pleasure that on the occasion of the first dinner of the Motion Picture Board of Trade at the Biltmore, several months ago, President Wilson made a felicitous speech which showed that he understood the aspirations of the art and industry.

President Wilson and Thomas H. Ince at Shadow Lawn.

President Wilson has more than once shown himself an intimate student of picture progress. He has patronized the great productions as they came along. Of recent motion picture spectacles, "Civilization" has attracted the President and recently he invited Mr. Ince, the producer of "Civilization" to call on him at Shadow Lawn.

Mr. Ince describes his reception by the President as exceedingly cordial. Mr. Wilson showed that he had an intimate knowledge of the picture "Civilization" and personally congratulated Mr. Ince on his achievement. More than that he revealed that he was interested in the technique of the work because he asked many questions with regard to the actual making of motion pictures.

When seen on the subject of his interview with the President, Mr. Ince said: "I found Mr. Wilson courtesy and affability personified. A more cordial reception I could not possibly have had."

Besides Mr. Ince, Mr. J. Parker Read, Jr., Mr. Ince's business representative, was present at Shadow Lawn and appears in some of the still pictures. These photographs are being reproduced in the newspapers throughout the United States.

Lecture Tour Planned

Mary Gray Peck to Address Women's Clubs on Motion Picture Problems.

ARRANGEMENTS are being completed by the National Committee on Films for Young People (affiliated with the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures), in co-operation with the Motion Picture Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, for a series of addresses to be given by Miss Mary Gray Peck in October and November through the middle west. Miss Peck has just been made a member of this committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. She will speak under the auspices of the women's clubs in the leading cities of this section of the United States regarding the motion picture and its problems. She will also meet groups of exhibitors in these sections with a view to stimulating their interest in the matter of better films. Many women's clubs, in seeking to meet the problem presented by the interest of children in motion pictures, have been responsible for censorship methods which have not proved successful from any point of view. Their aims have suffered for lack of proper direction. Miss Peck will seek to aid them by showing how they can be constructive rather than destructive in their methods. Her work will be broadly constructive.

Miss Peck's alma mater is Elmira College. She studied music in New York and going west to teach it, took post graduate work in philology in the University of Minnesota. She was engaged to teach English in the English department of the State University of Minnesota, and after taking other post graduate work in Cambridge University, England, she became assistant professor of English in the University of Minnesota. Resigning her professorship she became interested in the work of women's organizations and was invited to do special investigation work for the National Women's Trade Union League. In 1915 she was the chairman of the Speakers' Bureau of the New York Suffrage Campaign. She has been a member of the educational committee of the Drama League and is chairman of the drama committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

She is a very effective speaker, a clear thinker, and knows how to marshal her facts and arguments in such a way as to make her point. She has been deeply interested in the motion picture question for a long time and it is due to this fact that the General Federation of Women's Clubs have given her this important work in their nation-wide effort for the improvement of films.

Charlotte Walker Joins Thanhouser

CHARLOTTE WALKER, famous for her successes as a star on the screen as well as upon the speaking stage, has joined the Thanhouser Film Corporation and will begin work immediately upon a five-reel feature by Lloyd Lonergan, to be released through the Pathe exchanges.

O. A. C. Lund, who has directed such players as Gladys Hulette, Robert Warwick, Lionel Barrymore and Barbara Tennant, will be Miss Walker's Thanhouser director.

Charlotte Walker.

It is Edwin Thanhouser's policy to sign for his plays actors particularly suited to the parts and the list of Thanhouser artists now includes Miss Walker, Vincent Serrano, Jeanne Eagels, and Valkyrien added, of course, to Florence La Badie, Frederick Warde, Gladys Hulette, Doris Grey and Wayne Arey, who for some time have been firmly established as stars in Thanhouser features.

In her first Thanhouser feature Miss Walker will play the part of a girl convicted of murder, who escapes and marries, concealing her secret from her husband. The story is crowded with exciting scenes, including a train wreck in which the heroine, on her way to prison, makes her escape.

In the last hundred feet of film comes a startling denouement, one of those unexpected twists which are so popular with film fans and which straighten everything out after the spectators have begun to fear that the heroine is doomed to despair and death.

Before joining Thanhouser her motion picture experience included starring engagements with Lasky and McClure.

LEAVES WORLD TO JOIN UNIVERSAL.

D. L. Segal, who, up to last Saturday, held the proud distinction of being the oldest employee of the World Film Corporation, in point of service, has resigned to accept a position with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

During the past three years, Mr. Segal has been manager of both the Film and Poster departments, where he formed a large acquaintance with New York exhibitors. At the Universal he will be assistant to the manager of the contract department. He leaves the World Film Corporation with the best wishes of his comrades for his success in his new undertaking.

Who's Who in Sherman-Elliott

Sketch of the Two Young Men Who Are Doing Real Big Things in Exploiting Motion Pictures.

Out in the Middle West come two young men who in an exceedingly short time have gone far in the way of making a name for themselves in the exhibition of large pictures on a large scale. Incidentally they are reported to have been unusually successful financially. Harry A. Sherman and John Elliott, whose firm name is Sherman-Elliott, Inc., have opened temporary offices in the Candler Building, where Mr. Sherman is now discussing with state right buyers terms for disposing of "The Crisis," of which production Sherman-Elliott are the owners for the United States. The firm already controls seventeen states for "The Birth of a Nation" and "Ramona." Larger and permanent quarters in New York are now being sought.

Harry A. Sherman.

Mr. Sherman was born in Boston thirty-two years ago. He has been in the theatrical business nine years, the last seven of which have been in the picture division. He was the first secretary of the Minnesota Exhibitors' League. In 1911 he opened the Park theater in Minneapolis, in 1913 he organized the Sherman Feature Film Company, and later he became president of the Alco Corporation of Minnesota. The latter venture was not successful, but Mr. Sherman laid the foundation for his present success through his acquisition of the rights for Minnesota of "The Christian."

Mr. Elliott is five years older than his partner and hails from London, Ontario. His first experience before the public was when, as a high diver, he joined the W. J. Main show. Later he became a member of the aquatic outfit of Dr. Carver. In 1900 he was doing balloon jumps with Sam Ellis' Daredevils, and a year later he became manager of the People's Theater in Seattle for Sullivan & Considine. In 1904 he took over the management of the Unique, Minneapolis, another S. & C. house, and there he remained until he joined forces with Mr. Sherman.

July 3, 1915, Messrs. Sherman and Elliott, controlling the state rights on Wisconsin for "The Birth of a Nation," began a run of ten weeks of the big feature at the Davidson Theater, Milwaukee. Its success proved to them they had "started something." In October the Minnesota rights to the subject were secured. October 23 it opened in the St. Paul Auditorium, the largest theater building in the West, and a week later saw it at the Shubert, Minneapolis. The firm then took over the rights for fifteen more Western States. Up to date it is said the exploitation of the spectacle has resulted in the bringing into the Sherman-Elliott offices of checks approximating a million dollars. Last spring the firm took over seventeen states for "Ramona." It has also bought three large theaters.

Mr. Sherman, most of whose time is spent in traveling, was in New York a couple of days last week. A World man caught him in his office on his return from Philadelphia and while he was making arrangements for a week-end visit to Chicago. The husky young Bostonian, whose hobby is boxing and who has been known to travel two thousand miles to sit in on a good bout, said that he was receiving offers on "The Crisis" for the territory east of Chicago. The rest of the country he intends to hold for his own firm. In case he does not receive for New York a price commensurate with his own ideas as to its value "The Crisis" will be retained by Sherman-Elliott for that territory.

At present, he said, he has out seven "Birth" companies, three of which are new. On the road, too, and bringing in "the goods" are four "Ramona" companies, each carrying an orchestra of nineteen pieces and a leader. The original "Ramona" score is being used. Mr. Sherman said his firm had eliminated the elaborate staging which marked the presentation of the subject in New York, had cut the picture to about nine reels and had what he and his associates considered a splendid picture.

"I am a believer in showing a picture as a picture," said Mr. Sherman. "I believe in making a picture stand on its own feet, just as I would put a grand opera on its own feet, but I don't sanction the policy of combining the two. I feel if I have got to add forty voices to put over a picture it is not a picture. Don't misunderstand me—I am a strong partisan of good music, in picturesque ushers, and all that. But I don't see a big chorus. We are going to put over 'The Crisis' in the same general way as the two others."

The permanent offices of Sherman-Elliott will be in Chicago. Mr. Sherman said there were several productions, finished or in course of making, the purchase of which his firm had under consideration. "We are open to buy any good productions for the United States," he added. "Our aim is to retain and exploit from our offices all territory west of the Mississippi—and, of course, we want only those subjects that can be shown as road attractions."

Sherrill Gives Views on Open Market

President of Frohman Corporation Decides to Enter It and at the Same Time to Discard the Clock.

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, President of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, talking with a World man last week, gave his interpretation of what is meant by the "open market." Mr. Sherrill had been talking about the success of "The Conquest of Canaan," how it had pleased the reviewers and the buyers, and incidentally referred to the success of the Frohman Company. "I consider it a success," he said, "because we pay our debts and we pay dividends. My friends in the trade tell me that any company able to do that in these times is justified in assuming it is successful."

"What I call the open market," Mr. Sherrill explained, "is disposing of a production to state right buyers, especially when that production is based upon an unusual story and so staged as to attract keen competition among the independent distributors. The Frohman Amusement Corporation intends to continue the policy we initiated with 'The Conquest of Canaan,' of disposing of our subjects literally on merit. We are working on the theory that the picture that is made by the clock cannot possibly be the equal of the one that is made regardless of the clock, where time is taken to do everything properly.

"We had a year's experience in making pictures for programs, and many times we were in the same state of mind as is the man rushing for a train. When we started work on 'Jaffrey' we left the schedule behind. We began making pictures at profitable leisure. Our director, George Irving, was relieved of every care not closely connected with the production of the subject on which he was working. Six weeks and three days were spent on 'Jaffrey,' and the results showed for themselves.

"In 'The Witching Hour,' which up to this time has been in work two weeks, but nine scenes have been shot. For the making of some of these it was believed that music would add materially to the work of the players. Mr. Irving was instructed to 'go to it,' to secure his musicians and get his atmosphere. He got just what he went after. In one situation, again, the one where Clay Whipple is forced to look at the cat's eye pin which so singularly affects him, one of the tremendous situations of the play, Mr. Irving spent sixteen hours rehearsing his cast in order to get just the psychological touch. Under program conditions, as we have been facing them in the past, the thing would have been out of the question.

"Had the Frohman Company been desirous of aligning its brand with a program it could have done so many weeks ago, but we could not 'see' the exaction of sixteen pictures a year at stated intervals. We are not fighting nature, temperaments, emergencies, weather and accidents. We are merchandisers, purely and simply—and will never count the cost of a picture in time consumed."

SYDNEY McKEON LEAVES INTERNATIONAL.

Sydney McKeon, who has successively been editor of the Hearst-Selig, Hearst-Vitagraph, and Hearst International News Pictorial, has severed his connection with the International Film Service. Mr. McKeon is very reticent as to his future plans, but intimates that he is considering the editorship of a topical film to be put out by a company whose name has not as yet been announced.

Edison Rejuvenated

Will Release a Series of Strong Features Through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT of the names of some of the feature productions that will be released in the near future by Edison through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay combination, together with some general information concerning the pictures, has been made from the studios of the company at Bedford Park, N. Y. The first picture to be released by Edison through the new organization is "The Heart of the Hills," which is scheduled for release on October 30. It is impossible, at the present time, to secure the schedule under which the following five-reel features will be released, as the dates have not been fixed as yet. This information, together with the names of additional pictures that have been made at the Edison studios during the past few months and that now are ready for distribution, will be made public in the immediate future.

The pictures have been made during the past few months and in them a number of noted stars of the legitimate stage are featured. Conway Tearle will appear with Mabel Trunnelle in the first release, "The Heart of the Hills." This is a superb production with an Oriental flavor, as its earlier scenes are laid in India. The story centers around a sacred ruby of tremendous value. An absorbing love story, laid partly in London and partly in India, gives the picture a strong romantic interest. Well balanced in every detail, the production is representative of the work done at the Edison studios.

The other pictures announced for release are "A Message to Garcia," "The Ghost of Old Moro," "The Princess from the Poorhouse," "The Cossack Whip," and "The Ladder of Ambition."

"A Message to Garcia" and "The Ghost of Old Moro" both were filmed in Cuba, where the scenes of the stories are laid, the work being done by an Edison company that went to the island in the early part of this year. "A Message to Garcia" is based on the famous preachment of the late Elbert Hubbard. The leading parts in the production are taken by Mabel Trunnelle, who is accorded the distinction of being one of the most capable screen actresses of America, and Robert Conness, long a favorite of the silent drama.

"A Ghost of Old Moro" is the other Cuban production and the same stars who play the leading roles in "A Message to Garcia" appear in the principal parts in this. To a superb story, wonderful settings and capable acting is added the fact that the picture contains a number of scenes taken in the interior of Moro Castle, the grim fortress that for centuries has guarded the entrance to Havana Harbor and within the walls of which so many tragedies were enacted under the Spanish domination of Cuba. A stirring story in which the effect of realism is heightened by the beautiful natural settings, it is a production in which writer, director and actor have co-ordinated their efforts and secured unusually effective results.

Miss Larrimore, whose charming personality impressed itself on Broadway as the result of her appearance last season in "Fair and Warmer," takes the leading part in "The Princess from the Poorhouse," which is described as a fairy tale of real life. Miss Larrimore practically is new to the screen, but this picture proves that she is an artist of high order and her work compares favorably with that of the most renowned stars of her type. The story is one of two children who are inmates of a poorhouse but who leave the institution early in life. The girl is adopted by wealthy folks and the boy runs away because he cannot stand the abuse to which he is subjected. They both grow up, to meet again. There are many scenes in the play that are beautiful for their very simplicity and there are many others that are stern and thrilling. It has a perfection of balance that will make it appeal to all classes of those who patronize the silent drama. Miss Larrimore is supported by a most capable company, including Richard Tucker, Charles Sutton, Herbert Pattee, and William Wadsworth.

James Oppenheim, a deep student of social conditions who has written many books that deal with life as it is lived among the masses, is the author of "The Cossack Whip." As the name implies, the story is one of Russia and Russian intrigue. Many stories of this dreary and half-mysterious land of social darkness have been screened but the majority of them have come far from giving anything like a faithful reflection of actual life in Russia. "The Ladder of Ambition" is a type of story that has a general and strong appeal. It concerns a woman who was influenced to let ambition nearly made a wreck of her life. In the end she finds redemption, but before that came she suffered in full measure for the sufferings that her thoughtlessness and selfishness brought to others about her. In it, Mabel Trunnelle scores a triumph and her splendid work is ably balanced by that of Robert Conness.

It is stated at the Edison studios that the highest ideals in picture production have been adhered to in the making of the five-reel features named above and in others that will be marketed in the future through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay combination. In every case the utmost care has been used in the selection of a story, this being given precedence over any other feature of the production. The casts have been made up of players who possessed the qualifications to best portray the characterizations demanded by the scripts. If it became necessary to enter the domain of the legitimate stage to secure such players, this has been done; if the ranks of the motion picture stars offered the most capable actors for parts, they have been selected from there. Everything has been sacrificed to secure intrinsic merit in the productions and it is asserted the results have more than justified the tireless efforts that have been made at the studios during the past few months.

"Sunsets" Visit the Drews

Famous Organization of Octogenarians Visit Metro Comedy Stars and Play in Pictures.

RECENTLY, in an interview, Sidney Drew said he would rather have untrained people than half-trained actors, since they would at least be natural if perhaps a trifle awkward. He put his theories to the test the other day in the Metro Studios and decidedly proved his point. The Drews accepted for a Thanksgiving release a novel story calling for the appearance of a number of old ladies. Ordinarily this would be harvest time for the "types," but Mrs. Drew bethought herself of the Sunset Club, a famous organization of old ladies who are old enough to take a pride in their years, and she enlisted their interest in the production.

Scene from "Henry's Thanksgiving" (Metro).

The invitation to participate in the picture was accepted with enthusiasm and the club attended in force, spending a couple of most happy days. They were guests of Mrs. Drew at luncheon at one of the really fashionable hotels and at the studio they were followed by a "gallery" of players and newspaper people, who enjoyed to the full the delightful naturalness of the new stars. Mr. Drew directed their work with a gallant courtesy that would have shocked certain megaphone directors, and he did not spoil things by telling them how to act. He told them what he wanted done and let them do it their own way, and the result is a really charming picture, typically Drew in its atmosphere and with real human interest as well as marked comedy.

GEORGE D. BAKER OF METRO OFF FOR VACATION.

George D. Baker, of the Metro-Rolfe staff of directors, has gone to Havana for a brief, well-earned vacation. Mr. Baker has been working almost at top speed for several months, and as the studio schedule did not necessitate his presence for two or three weeks, he decided upon a sea trip as the best form of complete rest and relaxation. However, as Mr. Baker is an indefatigable worker, his rest will undoubtedly take the form of an opportunity to write a new photoplay for Metro's use.

Essanay's Coming

Several New Features on the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service—Essanay-Chaplin Review With General Film.

PRESIDENT GEORGE K. SPOOR of Essanay has scheduled release dates for five forthcoming features to be offered through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. These will be the first group of Essanay plays to be put out through this agency.

"The Return of Eve" is scheduled for October 16. This play is in five acts and features Edna Mayo, supported by Eugene O'Brien. It is built on the theme of a boy and girl raised in the wilderness and suddenly plunged into civilization. Arthur Berthelet directed the play.

On November 6 "The Prince of Graustark" will be released. This is a sequel to George Barr McCutcheon's "Graustark," each among the best-selling novels ever written. Essanay produced "Graustark" and experienced record business with it. It is believed to be a certainty that the new feature will surpass even the great popularity of "Graustark." Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton appear in the leading roles, with Ernest Maupain and Sydney Ainsworth heading the support. Fred E. Wright directed this feature.

"The Chaperone," taken from Maxine Elliott's stage hit, will be offered in five acts on November 20. It features Edna Mayo, supported by Eugene O'Brien, and is being directed by Arthur Berthelet.

"The Breakers," Arthur Stringer's story, which appeared in The Saturday Evening Post, is now being constructed in five acts by Director Wright, with Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig. Ernest Maupain is the heavy lead. This will be offered on December 18.

Henry B. Walthall's superfeature, "The Truant Soul," will be released on December 25. This is taken from Victory Rousseau's story and exteriors are now being filmed in the hill country of Wisconsin. Mary Charleson is playing in support of Mr. Walthall and Harry Beaumont is directing the production.

Chaplin Revue on General Film List.

The date for release of the Essanay-Chaplin Revue of 1916 has been fixed for October 21, through General Film Service. The revue is in five acts, and while it has been compiled from the three great Essanay-Chaplin comedy successes, "The Tramp," "His New Job" and "A Night Out," Mr. Spoor wishes it understood that it is by no means a case of cutting three two-reel pictures into five reels and running one after the other.

The Essanay-Chaplin Revue of 1916 tells a complete story, dove-tailing without a break throughout its length, the whole making a most unique comedy feature. This effect has been obtained by skillful assembling, and Essanay guarantees the revue to supply more laughs in five acts than anything ever attempted in the same length. Edna Purviance, Ben Turpin and Leo White appear in the revue in support of Chaplin.

The story opens with Charlie Chaplin as "The Tramp." He is out of work and leaves the city to wander along the country highways. He rescues a girl from a gang of hoboes who are trying to rob her and is given work on her father's farm. After a series of side-splitting adventures on the farm, which is an entirely unfamiliar place to this city-bred tramp, he is shot while routing some burglars. The girl nurses him back to health and he falls in love with her. When he has recovered the girl's sweetheart returns and he realizes that she is not for him.

Heart-broken, he leaves a note for her and wends his way back to the city, where he hunts work. He gets a job as a motion picture actor and then begins a series of adventures of a day before the camera that will send spectators into gales of laughter over "His New Job."

After a day of arduous toil Chaplin goes out with one of the other studio employes, Ben Turpin, for a night's frolic. The net of misadventures he weaves about himself and his companion would turn the sourest misanthrope into a sunny-tempered optimist. Chaplin finally is plunged into a bathtub of ice-cold water by an irate husband.

The situations follow each other in rapid sequence and there is not an instant's drag in the action.

The Essanay laboratories are now manufacturing prints of the feature, as all film in it will be new.

TRIANGLE-KAY BEE TO FILM "SUDDEN JIM."

Clarence Budington Kelland's "Sudden Jim" the serial which has been attracting wide attention in The Saturday Evening Post, is to be visualized at the Triangle-Kay Bee studios. The screen rights have just been secured. The story of "Sudden Jim" deals with the strenuous and red-blooded life of the lumber country of the Northwest. A rich man's son has been given the choice between accepting fifty thousand cash or taking over the clothespin, wooden bowl and potato masher factory established by his father. The spendthrift has shrewdness enough to realize that the fifty thousand will not go far, and so he decided to devote his life to clothespins. This brings him to the scene of the factory, a frontier town, unpainted and forlorn, on the edge of the big Northwestern forests.

The action revolves around his fight with the woodenware trust. His enemies fill his logs with iron spikes to break his saws and finally they burn down the trestles of the railway which carries his logs from the forest. But the rich man's son meets every obstacle with promptness and courage, such promptness, indeed, that the Northwesterners name him "Sudden Jim." It is distinctly a story of the strenuous side of life, the love interest being but a minor thread of the theme. "Sudden Jim" is said to have attracted as wide attention in The Post as "Ruggles of Red Gap."

Triangle Releases for October 29th

Two Important Subjects Feature Bessie Love and Louise Glaum.

BESSIE LOVE and Louise Glaum are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for October 29. Little Miss Love has a role ideally fitted to her winsome personality in "A Sister of Six," a Fine Arts production recently completed under the direction of the brothers C. M. and S. A. Franklin, premier makers of photoplays of childhood. Miss Glaum enacts the part of a secret service siren in the Ince production of Richard Harding Davis' thrilling war drama, "Somewhere in France," which Charles Giblyn has directed with his accustomed surety of touch.

The scenes of "A Sister of Six" are divided between Old California, under the Mexican regime, and the seacoast of New England, though most of the action transpires in the former picturesque setting. Miss Love is shown as the head of a family of seven small pioneers who have been left alone in the land of gorgeous sunsets and treacherous natives after the murder of their father at the hands of Don Francisco Garcia, who covets the American's ranch. The ranch is besieged by Garcia and his band, and by a ruse all of the faithful retainers are lured away, so that the children are left alone with the house servants to defend the place against its invaders. After a thrilling battle help arrives in the nick of time, and the denouement brings retribution to the infamous Garcia and happiness to the little mother and her family.

One of the last stories from the pen of the late Richard Harding Davis, "Somewhere in France," contains all the elements of a big popular success, apart from the interest attaching to its authorship. Miss Glaum is given the opportunity to display her talents in a role calling for beauty of the most alluring type, coupled with the psychological enactment of character in which the love of intrigue and adventure are ruling passions. Herself the daughter of a German spy, she is found living in Paris prior to the outbreak of the war with a young French army captain, whom she robs of certain important plans relating to the defenses of Paris. These she sells to the Germans, fleeing to Berlin herself with the attache who arranges the deal.

Howard Hickman as a wireless operator shares honors with Miss Glaum.

NELSON E. EDWARDS, WAR PHOTOGRAPHER.

Nelson E. Edwards, one of the most daring of moving picture photographers in the world, returned from Germany on Sunday on the steamer Neuw Amsterdam, after having spent the past year on the German, Belgian and French battlefronts. Mr. Edwards brought back with him many thousands of feet of film for the Hearst News Pictorial that he was unable to send.

"Of all my unusual experiences and adventures," said Mr. Edwards, "I am the proudest of the fact that I am the only foreigner to have visited Kiel Canal and Wilhelmshaven, the great naval strongholds of the German fleets. I was at both places soon after the sea fight between the British and German fleets off the Skaggerak.

"There I made films of the battleships, torpedo-boats and submarines. This rare privilege was granted to me for the International through the courtesy of Captain Boy-Ed, former Naval Attache of the German Embassy at Washington.

"I visited the Balkans and Constantinople and later I returned to Berlin and was accorded the privilege of going to the western front in the Vosges Mountains. Most of my films taken in that active section were made under actual fire. Several times I barely saved my entire outfit from destruction by shrapnel by running into dugouts.

"I hurried to Bremen for the arrival of the Deutschland man from her notable trip to the United States."

and took the first films of the return of the undersea merchant-

Kalem Serial Makes a Strong Start

"Grant, Police Reporter," the New Weekly Single Reeler, Contains Thrilling Stunts.

KALEM'S new weekly single-reel serial, "Grant, Police Reporter," starts with a smash. "The Code Letter" contains action in abundance; it is of the quality that thrills as well as entertains. It is fast. The Kalem company's staff has adapted the story written by Robert Welles Ritchie and Robert Ellis has directed it. The first chapter will be released on October 20, and Friday will continue to be the day of issue. As to the number of the successors of "The Code Letter" no limit has been placed. "We have been making our railroad stories for two years," said an official of the company following the first showing, "and we hope to make this one popular for at least three. Kalem has been specializing on singles, and we have the best of reasons to know that our efforts in this direction have been appreciated by exhibitors."

George Larkin has the name role in the serial. If the subjects to come are to maintain the place established in the first one no one but a player of Mr. Larkin's all-around qualifications could attempt to keep up with it. He has long been noted for his ability to get away with situations requiring nerve above the ordinary. He displays some of his quality in "The Code Letter," displays it not in one instance but in several. For instance, he bridges the space between the roofs of two buildings by going hand over hand on a circular bar. Again, he reaches a desired window by walking from ledge to ledge many feet from the ground. The real thrill, however, comes when the reporter climbs down a rope to grapple with the crook who has taken refuge on a painter's ladder suspended against the side of a structure. The woman confederate on the roof cuts one of the two ropes that hold the frail platform in place. The ladder straightens out in a flash, but somehow the two are seemingly uninjured as they strike the pavement.

Director Ellis has the role of Litchfield, the crook who tries to get away when he is "nailed" in his hotel room by Grant—caught with the goods. Ollie Kirkby is Mamie the Rose, the confederate of Litchfield. William McKay is city editor of the newspaper on which Grant is employed and G. Chira is the police commissioner who bars Grant from Headquarters following the publication of an article criticising the management of the Police Department. It is a good cast.

Many of the settings are of a newspaper office, a hotel and police headquarters. The atmosphere of these is well maintained. In the case of the hotel, however, it could hardly be otherwise, for many of the "sets" are of the real thing. "Grant, Police Reporter" makes an auspicious debut.

GAUMONT PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF OCT. 15.

From the Gaumont studios the week of October 15 comes an unusual assortment of motion pictures. In addition to the customary three single reels, there will be a two-reel photoplay. The first release of the week is "Reel Life" No. 24, October 15. This issue of the Mutual Magazine in Film has a large section devoted to "Duplicating Ancient Pottery." Every process is shown from sifting the clay to the final baking. The second section is an instructive exposition of the work of the U. S. Weather Bureau with weather kites at the aerological station at Drexel, Neb. The third part of the reel shows how a mother cat takes care of her kittens.

"See America First" No. 58 takes spectators for a trip on the historic James River in Virginia. This was the first great highway to the line of defene for the Confederate forces. It is therefore rich in historic spots, and the more important of these have been caught by a Gaumont cameraman. On the same reel is a humorous contribution by Harry Palmer, portrayer of Gaumont Kartoon Komics and director of Gaumont shadowgraphs. The reel is released Oct. 18.

The third single-reel is The Mutual Weekly. No program of this release can be announced in advance since it is not assembled until the day before it is issued—to insure subscribers getting the latest news on the screen.

The two-reel photoplay is called "Stepping Westward." George Larkin is the featured player. Playing opposite him is Mabel Van Buren.

Norma Talmadge, Selznick Star

Joseph Schenck to Present Young Player at Head of Her Own Company for Selznick-Pictures.

ON the heels of his successful launching of the first of the Selznick-Pictures, Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law," Lewis J. Selznick announces the addition to his list of stars, of Norma Talmadge, whose work in recent Triangle productions has made her one of the great favorites of the screen.

Joseph Schenck, of the Marcus Loew forces, is responsible for Miss Talmadge's new venture, having organized the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, of which he is the president. Mr. Schenck will have offices with the Selznick Enterprises in the Godfrey Building on 7th Avenue and will also produce for Selznick-Pictures feature photoplays starring other screen celebrities.

Norma Talmadge.

The first of Miss Talmadge's new pictures will be an adaptation of "The Price She Paid", a novel by David Graham Phillips, considered by the majority of literary critics to be the foremost American author. The production will be directed by Mr. Allan Dwan, who has produced a number of Miss Talmadge's Triangle Pictures and who attracted special attention for his masterly skill in the production of recent Douglas Fairbanks features.

Miss Talmadge is one of the youngest of all film stars who have attained anything like her prominence. Her first work of note was done with the Vitagraph Company, and it was after her remarkable portrayal of the leading role in that organization's notable production, "The Battle Cry of Peace," that this charming young star was sought by the Triangle management. Two of her most recent successes were "Going Straight" and "The Social Secretary."

In "The Price She Paid" Miss Talmadge will have an opportunity to enact a role different from anything she has heretofore attempted and one that seems certain to prove her the possessor of extraordinary dramatic power and emotional skill.

The success of the negotiations for the rights to this famous novel was due to Edgar Selden, who has been working months to obtain this and other of David Graham Phillips' work for Mr. Selznick. Many film producers have attempted to secure the rights to the works of this famous American author but Mr. Selznick is the first to have any success. The amount involved in the transaction for "The Price She Paid" is not stated but is said to be greater by several thousands of dollars than any sum ever offered for a single motion picture scenario.

Miss Talmadge will be presented in about eight big features a year along lines similar to other Selznick-Pictures, such as Clara Kimball Young, Herbert Brenon and Kitty Gordon features. The Talmadge productions will be marketed on the open booking plan through the big system of exchanges built up by Mr. Selznick.

Metros in the Making

Many New and Elaborate Productions Now Under Way at Metro Studios.

ANNOUNCEMENT of many new and elaborate productions for the coming season already under way or in preparation was made at the offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation, in the Longacre Building, 1476 Broadway, last week, and from now until Christmas all the Metro studios will be working under high pressure, if the program mapped out is to be completed in the time designated.

A new addition to the Metro artistic and directing staff will be S. Rankin Drew of the Vitagraph forces, who comes to Metro October 21. He will at once begin work on an important feature photoplay at the Rolfe studios with Emmy Wehlen in the starring role. This feature is entitled "The Belle of the Season" and is based on Ella Wheeler Wilcox's famous poem of the same name. It has been adapted for the screen by June Mathis with Miss Wehlen's distinctive personality and superb dramatic gifts especially in mind and the picture promises to be one of the season's sensations. "The Belle of the Season" will be the first of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's works to be picturized for Metro.

The addition of Mr. Drew to Metro's artistic staff makes the fifth of the famous Barrymore-Drew family to enlist under the Metro banner, the others being Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Lionel Barrymore and Ethel Barrymore, all of whom have long been notable in the list of Metro stars.

Another important offering from Metro in the near future will be "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," with Ethel Barrymore in the stellar part, which was placed in production early in the week at the Metro-Rolfe studio. This picturization of Margaret Deland's most famous novel is the first motion picture work Miss Barrymore has done since her last Metro production, "The Kiss of Hate." The sympathetic character of Helena is wonderfully well suited to this gifted star and Miss Barrymore will have opportunity for the fullest display of those rare dramatic talents which have won her her high place in the hearts of the amusement loving public. John W. Nobel is the director. He will have the assistance of Fred Sittenham and Charles Maigne. Robert Cummings, a favorite screen actor, will play Lloyd Pryor, who poses as Helena's brother to save the feeling of the righteous neighborhood of Old Chester. Robert Whittier is Helena's husband, the Frederick of the prologue; Charles Snow has the congenial part of old Dr. Lavendar.

Mme. Petrova at the Popular Plays and Players studio has begun a new five-part Metro wonderplay with the attractive title, "The Black Butterfly." The story, which is from the pen of Mrs. L. Case Russell, provides a romantic foundation for a remarkably surprising "twist" Mme. Petrova herself has given it. The scene of "The Black Butterfly" is laid "somewhere in France," and the action, continuing through several years, culminates in the time of the present war.

Mme. Petrova has the part of a star of the Folies Bergere, Paris, a position which the gifted actress herself formerly held. Experiments of scientific laboratory, peasant life in France, and the gaiety of Paris are contrasted in this photoplay, which possesses a combination of interests. Burton L. King is again Mme. Petrova's director, and Mahlon Hamilton and Edward Martindel are prominent in her support.

At the same studio as already mentioned, Emmy Wehlen, under the direction of John B. O'Brien, is making the feature photodrama, "Vanity," which Aaron Hoffman has written especially for this dainty star's talents. It shows Miss Wehlen's versatility, being totally unlike "The Pretenders," the latest screen production in which she appeared, or in fact any other of her productions. Paul Gordon, who played opposite Miss Wehlen in "The Pretenders," has been engaged to support her in "Vanity" as well. Tom O'Keefe plays the chief of detectives and W. W. Black is his lieutenant.

W. Christy Cabanne, at the Quality studio, is perfecting plans for the fourteenth episode serial, as yet unnamed, which will serve as the medium for the genius of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Work on this production was begun this week. Mr. Cabanne has just completed his first offering for the Metro program, starring Frances Nelson, in a five-part feature picture. This new production, formerly called "Love, Honor and Obey," will be released under the title of "One of Many." Niles Welch is featured with Miss Nelson, the star.

George D. Baker will return from a short vacation and sea trip next week to produce "Squire Flynn," with Lionel Barrymore as the star. "Squire Flynn" is a picturization of Holman F. Day's popular novel.

Emily Stevens has finished the Metro-Rolfe production, to be released late in November, called "The Wager." "The Wager" is of Mr. Baker's writing and directing.

It is good-news to everybody that "Dave" Thompson has been promoted from the position of assistant director to that of director. His first production will be made with Julius Steger as star in a Metro feature play as yet unnamed. This will be Mr. Steger's first Metro production since "The Blindness of Love."

Mabel Taliaferro, last seen on the Metro program in the Rolfe picture, "The Dawn of Love," is deep in the toils of her new production, written by Shannon Fife and June Mathis, called "The Sunbeam." Edwin Carewe, as usual, is Miss Taliaferro's director, and this Metro wonderplay is fast approaching completion. Miss Taliaferro as Prue typifies the ray of sunshine which steals into the unwilling hearts of even the most crabbed. Childhood makes its unfailing appeal in "The Sunbeam."

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the inimitable creators of the comedy of the home, continue to make a one-act picture each week at the Rolfe studio. Dainty Viola Dana is completing "The Gates of Eden," the five-act feature by Rev. William E. Danforth, depicting life in a Shaker community, showing the havoc wrought upon young lives by insistence upon standards that are to the old no hardship. Edward Earle, Robert Walker and Augustus Phillips, have parts of practically equal importance in her support. John H. Collins is director.

Out in Hollywood at the studio of the Yorke Film Corporation, Harold Lockwood and May Allison, under the direction of Henry Otto, are completing the production of "Big Tremaine," Marie Van Vorst's well known novel which has been picturized by Mr. Otto. The story makes an ideal vehicle for the combined efforts of these favorite players. Lester Cuneo, Andrew Arbuckle, William Ephe, Josephine Rice and Virginia Southern all have good parts. An added interest is given this release by the marriage of the novelist, Miss Van Vorst, which will take place in Paris this month, Signor Gaetano Cagiati of Rome, Italy, being the bridegroom.

MRS. CASTLE IN TWO CHARACTERS OF "PATRIA."

In one episode of "Patria," the great preparedness serial of the international, Mrs. Vernon Castle, the star, impersonates two characters, "Patria," and "Mlle. Elaine." By the familiar process of the double exposure, Mrs. Castle is shown in the accompanying picture in both characters.

The most remarkable part of the picture, however, is the apparent difference in the height of the two figures, both impersonated by Mrs. Castle. The director who made the picture, admits that high-heeled shoes are responsible to a certain extent. He refuses, however, to account for the apparent difference of fully six inches.

HELEN STARR LEAVES FOR UNIVERSAL CITY.

Helen Starr, for the last year editor of the Universal Eastern scenario department, has gone to the Pacific Coast to join the Universal forces there. Miss Starr is a versatile young woman, having played in stock, vaudeville and the legitimate stage in addition to doing magazine and newspaper work. She was formerly editor of "The Mutual Girl Weekly and a contributor of "Reel Life." Her articles have appeared in all the leading publications devoted to the interests of women as well as in the standard magazines.

Eight Stars in Lasky Productions

Remarkable Array of Players Scheduled for Appearance on Paramount Program in November.

FANNIE WARD, Thomas Meighan, Anita King, Sessue Hayakawa, Myrtle Stedman, Blanche Sweet, Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid, are the eight stars whose appearance on the Paramount Program is announced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company for the month of November. It is seldom that eight such well known and popular stars are presented on the screen in a single month by one company.

The fact that the name of Myrtle Stedman is included in this list is particularly interesting in view of the fact that she has been a Pallas-Morosco star for some time. In this case she has been loaned to Lasky by the Pallas-Morosco Company, their ally on the Paramount Program. This is the second time that such an incident has occurred where the Lasky company has been concerned, the Famous Players having loaned Marguerite Clark to the same producers for "The Goose Girl," which is an indication of the lengths to which this company goes in order to obtain the exact types required by its productions.

In the order of their release dates the pictures are as follows: November 2, "The Heir to the Hoorah," with Thomas Meighan and Anita King; "The Soul of Kura-San" with Sessue Hayakawa and Myrtle Stedman, announced for the 6th; Blanche Sweet in "Unprotected," scheduled for the 13th; Fannie Ward in "The Years of the Locust" designated for the 16th, and Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid in "The Yellow Pawn," which is to be released on the 23d.

"The Heir to the Hoorah" is an adaptation of the celebrated play of that name by Paul Armstrong as produced by the Kirke La Shelle Company adapted to the screen by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun. It is a mining story with many a thrill, which is especially well suited to Mr. Meighan and Anita King. "The Soul of Kura-San" is of especial interest, as it has a Japanese setting and every Nipponese role in the production is enacted by a real Japanese. This arrangement was made possible by the engagement of the members of the celebrated Japanese stock company at Hollywood, of which Sessue Hayakawa is the head.

"Unprotected," in which Miss Sweet stars, is a drama dealing with the iniquities of the southern prison system by which convicts are farmed out to do contract work. Miss Sweet plays the role of an innocent girl, erroneously convicted, who is almost forced into slavery by the man to whom she is "rented" by the state. The picture was actually produced at a southern convict camp.

Fannie Ward's starring vehicle, "The Years of the Locust," is the work of Albert Payson Terhune, well known author and playwright. Considerable mystery surrounds the Ridgely-Reid picture which is called "The Yellow Pawn" and no detailed description of the production has been received. It is understood that it is a big dramatic tale with numerous elements of mystery contained in it. Work on the picture has been progressing quietly at the Lasky studio and no visitors have been permitted to see that portion of the big yard which is devoted to the staging of the picture.

Scenario Department Again Expanded

Increased Activities of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Necessitates Further Addition.

WHEN the Famous Players and Lasky Companies first merged into one corporation, Hector Turnbull was transferred from the Lasky studio to the main office in New York, Robert E. MacAlarney, city editor of the New York Tribune, was engaged and Harvey Thew was added to the force. The greatly increased activities of the producing organizations which have followed the merger have rendered necessary still further additions and transfers.

Paul West, well-known author and dramatist, has been engaged by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and two transfers of office have been made. William C. De Mille, one of the foremost theatrical and motion picture authorities in the country, who has been associated with the Lasky Company from its inception, comes to New York from Hollywood to confer personally with Jesse L. Lasky on scenarios. Mr. De Mille had gained a world-wide reputation as a playright before he entered the motion picture field and has contributed many notable scripts to the screen, among them the adaptation of "Carmen," in which Geraldine Farrar made her triumphant motion picture debut; "The Woman," "The Rose of the Rancho" and others of equal prominence.

Paul West, who now joins the scenario department, has a remarkable literary record. He has written ten musical comedies and published three books, and was one of the editors of the New York Sunday World for several years. When Jesse L. Lasky was producing some of his biggest vaudeville successes, Mr. West was the author of several of the biggest hits, among them "The Love Waltz" and "At the Waldorf."

Mr. West is the author of more than a hundred and fifty photoplays which have already appeared on the screen and now has fifteen more ready for production. Among the most successful of the feature plays already screened are "The Velvet Paw," "The Dark Silence," "The Lash," in which Marie Doro is starred by Lasky; "The Chattel," in which E. H. Sothern starred, and others of equal prominence. He is also the author of numerous newspaper syndicate stories, among them "Bill," "The Widow Wiser" and "In Our School."

After supplying these vital statistics to his biographer, Mr. West added that he is "rich, handsome and neutral on the subject of the coming election and World's Series."

The third change in the scenario department is the transferring of Harvey Thew, formerly stationed in the main office of New York, to Hollywood, where the Lasky Studios are situated. Mr. Thew is well known in literary circles, having been war correspondent for the New York Herald. He has already adapted to the screen two Paramount Pictures, "The Kiss," in which Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot are co-starring, and "The Big Sister," in which Mae Murray was recently presented by the Famous Players.

Kirkwood—Robinson

Popular Photoplay Star and Director Are Married at Santa Barbara, Cal.

ALL photoplay land is a-flutter with the news which has just come that Gertrude Robinson, one of the old Biograph players and the lead in David W. Griffith's famous production of "Pippa Passes," and more recently in Mutual productions, and James Kirkwood, director of Mary Miles Minter, were married on September 30.

It was all intended to be a secret, known only to Donald Crisp, best man, to Dorothy and Lillian Gish, and a few others, but it leaked out in time for a great many of the prominent players at the western coast to greet Miss Robinson on her arrivel from New York.

The wedding is the culmination of a romance which began when Miss Gertrude was a little girl, at the very beginning of picture days. They met by chance at the old Biograph studio on Fourteenth street in New York City, and though they lost track of each other for years at a time, they never lost their mutual interest.

Miss Robinson is remembered for her stage work in "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush," with H. J. Stoddard, for excellent support in productions with Edith Taliaferro, Edith Wynne Mathison and Thomas Jefferson. Some of her recent screen appearances are in "I Accuse" and "The Haunted Manor."

Mr. Kirkwood is recognized as one of the leading directors of the country. Only recently he severed his connection with the Famous Players Company, where he directed Miss Pickford to go to the American-Mutual studio at the coast to superintend the production of Mary Miles Minter's pictures.

"Civilization" in South America

J. Parker Read, Sr., Will Visit Fourteen Countries.—Record Price for Argentine Rights.

TWENTY thousand dollars has been paid for the Argentine rights of "Civilization." This is a record price for any film for the Argentine Republic. Arturo Cairo, of Buenos Ayres, the purchaser, states, "I consider the money safely invested, as after seeing all the big film productions in the United States during the past few weeks, I have chosen "Civilization" as the greatest because I think it will create a furore in the different South American countries."

Mr. Cairo represents one of the biggest film interests in South America and has exploited many great productions in his territory.

"Civilization" in the remaining South American republics will be exploited by J. Parker Read, Sr., who has an intimate knowledge of the motion picture business in the countries he will visit, viz., Uruguay, Brazil, Venezuela, Ecuador, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Colombia, Panama, Honduras, San Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Guatemala.

Mr. Read, who will devote six months to the trip, has power and authority to register copyrights in the different countries he visits, and carries with him credentials from the embassies at Washington.

General Film Releases

Publicity Man Speaks Highly of the Program Subjects for Week of October 16.

MERIT not the measuring rule is our guide," a trite statement found often in General Film Company's advertisements applies with especial force to General Film Service program for the week October 16-21 inclusive. There might be some exaggeration in saying that every release is a feature if judged by an exceptionally high standard, but when compared to many of the so-called features of to-day they really can be designated as classics. Selig, Vitagraph, Essanay, Kalem, Vim, and Knickerbocker have each put their strongest foot forward in this program and present stars of the first magnitude. For those who prefer reissues, Biograph has selected exceptionally strong pictures.

Kalem's new, widely advertised serial, "Grant, Police Reporter," with daring George Larkin and venturesome Ollie Kirkby in the feature roles, will have its first innings this week when episode one of "The Code Letter" is shown. There is crowded in this thousand feet of film, more action, more life, more excitement and more interest than is usually found in a five reeler. Larkin, who is known the world over as a wonderful acrobat and aerial performer, makes your hair rise as you view some of his spectacular feats in this first episode.

"Only a Rose," a drama, and "A Boomerang," a short comedy in which Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley are featured, will be the first picture screened on the week's program. They are from the Selig studio. A strong educational feature in one reel by Vitagraph, "The Curse of the Forest" follows. There are many exciting incidents shown in this picture and a lesson that all will do well to learn. Selig-Tribune will follow this, succeeded by a Biograph one-reel reissue, "The White Rose of the Wilds," presenting Blanche Sweet. "The Fable of the Kittenish Superanns and the World-Weary Snipes," an Essanay comedy built on a George Ade story, in two reels, leads the program the following day. Then will follow "A Sauerkraut Symphony," featuring "Ham" and "Budd," Ethel Teare and Henry Murdock, Kalem's comedy quartette.

"Dreamy Dud in the African War Zone," a cartoon, and a scenic split reel, lead the program October 18, and will be followed by a Vim comedy in one act featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby in "A Persistent Wooing." The eleventh episode of Kalem's "The Girl from Frisco" series, "The Yellow Hand," in which Marin Sais and True Boardman score another big success will precede a three-part Biograph reissue "Classmates" with Blanche Sweet and Henry Walthall in the titular roles.

Thursday will be divided between Selig-Tribune and a Vim comedy, "A Precious Parcel," presenting "Plump" and "Runt."

A two-part Knickerbocker Star Feature drama, "Treading Pearls," with Frank Mayo and Joyce Moore starring, will be first shown Friday, October 20. Then will come "The Code Letter," the first reel of Kalem's "Grant, Police Reporter" series. This will be followed by a Vitagraph one-reel comedy, "Strong Evidence," and the day will be concluded with a Vim comedy in one-reel, "Here and There," with "Pokes" and "Jabbs" as fun makers.

Essanay offers two of their strongest stars, Edward Arnold and Alice McChesney in the first picture Saturday, October 21, a three-part drama, "Marooned." Then will come a Vitagraph three-part drama featuring Leah Baird in "The Harbor of Happiness." An episode of "The Hazards of Helen" series, "A Daring Chance," presenting more of Helen Gibson's daring feats will be presented then, and the week's program will be brought to a close with "An Eventful Evening" from the Selig studio, featuring Tom Mix in a one-reel comedy.

There are thirty acknowledged stars featured in the week's program.

MOTION PICTURES IN TEACHING OF SURGERY.

Motion pictures have been applied as an aid to the most difficult operations in surgery. Last Monday Dr. S. William Schapira, member of the Academy of Medicine, lectured at Fordham University on various Genito-Urinary operations, and illustrated his lecture with motion pictures of actual operations performed by him. These pictures, which possess an extraordinary scientific value, cover thirteen distinct operations, and were made by a Pathé cameraman under Dr. Schapira's direction. In these motion pictures every movement is clearly shown and it is not too much to say that a new era has dawned in the teaching of surgery.

NANCE O'NEILL ACTING FOR McCLURE PICTURES.

Nance O'Neill and her husband, Alfred Hickman, have started work in "Greed," the third play of the forthcoming McClure series, "Seven Deadly Sins." This distinguished actress' marriage to Mr. Hickman is of very recent date, and the engagement of both husband and wife in the same picture affords them an opportunity to extend their romance into their working hours. To be in the supporting cast of the girl of his choice is not a new experience for Mr. Hickman. New York theater-goers will remember that when Miss O'Neill appeared in Belasco's "The Lily," Mr. Hickman was in her company.

Nance O'Neill's part in "Greed" is that of a young woman innocently involved in the operations of a speculator, whose passion for money and power leads him into the shadiest recesses of high finance. The girl's endeavors to free herself from this stock operator's machinations, and to save others from being ruined by him, form the basis for an absorbing play that mirrors the frenzied life of those who seek the short and easy road to wealth.

GLADYS ALEXANDRIA WITH METRO.

Gladys Alexandria has been engaged for the part of Ellen in "The Sunbeam," the most important feminine role next to that of the star, Mabel Taliaferro. "The Sunbeam" is the five-act Metro-Rolfe production exploiting the splendid talents of Miss Taliaferro which will follow "The Dawn of Love" on the Metro program.

"The Sunbeam" is Miss Alexandria's first motion picture, her experience having been in dramatic productions and in vaudeville.

Tips on Universal Program

Tabloid Information on Big U Subjects Released for the Week of October 16.

THE last episode of the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series featuring Carter De Haven will be released on the Universal program for the week of October 16. The two-reel episode is entitled "Fame at Last," and was produced by Wallace Beery from the story by Bess Meredyth. Robert Milash, Ivor McFadden and Margaret Whistler appear in support of De Haven.

The tenth episodes of "Liberty," the new Universal serial, also will be released during the week of October 16. It is entitled "The Human Target" and was written and directed by Jacques Jaccard. Marie Walcamp appears in the leading role, supported by Maud Emory, G. Raymond Nye, Eddie Polo, Jack Holt, Neal Hart, Bertram Grassby and L. M. Wells.

The Red Feather release of the week is "Barriers of Society," a five-reel society drama featuring Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson. The story of the play by Clarke Irvine was scenarioized by Fred Myton and was produced by Lloyd B. Carlton. Richard Morris, Alfred Allen, Miss Witting and Mr. Montague appear in support of the principals. It will be released on October 16. On the same day Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean appear in "His Own Nemesis," a Nestor comedy written by W. R. Newman and produced by L. W. Chaudet.

On October 17 William V. Mong and Peggy Coudray play the leading roles in "The Wrath of Cactus Moore," a Gold Seal three-reel Western drama. There will be no Victor release in the week of October 16.

"Through Baby's Voice," a delightful Laemmle two-reel domestic society drama featuring Douglas Gerrard, Edna Maison and Zoe Rae will be released on October 18. The scenario of this play was written by Calder Johnstone and was produced by George Cochrane. On the same day that L-Ko comedy, "Safety First," will be released in one reel with Dan Russell, Gertrude Selby and Billie Ritchie providing the fun. "Safety First" will be followed by No. 42 of the Universal Animated Weekly.

On October 19 a single reel subject entitled "The Decay," featuring William Garwood and Lois Wilson, will be released. There will be no releases under the Powers brand on this date. The Special Big U release on this date will be a two-reeler entitled "Tigers of the Plains," an animal drama featuring William Clifford.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard will be starred on October 20 in "The Elusive Enemy," an Imp drama done in the slashing Ford-Cunard style. A single reel Rex drama will be released on this date entitled, "The Gold Band," featuring Hal Cooley and Helen Leslie. There will be no Nestor release on October 20.

October 21 will see the release of "The Conspiracy," a Bison two reel railroad drama featuring Harry Carey and Edith Johnson which was written by William Parker and produced by Henry McRae. The principals are supported by E. N. Wallack and L. C. Shumway. On the same date "Beans and Bullets," a Joker comedy scenarioized by Harry Wulze from the story by Barney Fury and produced by W. W. Beaudine, will be released with William Franey and Gale Henry in the funmaking roles. Charles Conklin, Lillian Peacock, Milburn Moranti and Jack Francis also assist in the mock Mexican melee. There will be no Laemmle release on this date.

Herbert Rawlinson, just out of the Universal City hospital, will be seen for the first time since the accident which laid him up for three weeks in "Main 4400," a Victor two-reel comedy on October 22. The story of the play by Willard Bradley was scenarioized by Maie Havey and produced by William Worthington. Agnes Vernon, Harold Mathews and Carl Von Schiller appear in support of Mr. Rawlinson. On the same day "She Wanted a Ford," an L-Ko one-reel comedy will be released with Billie Ritchie, Gertrude Selby and Dan Russell providing the man-power for the decrepit Ford in question. There will be no Imp release on this date.

The following are the titles of the Specials for the week of October 9: Special Rex, "The Unfinished Case," one-reel drama featuring Bob Leonard; special Big U, "A Pair of Shadows," one reel comedy featuring Fritzi Brunett; Laemmle, "Stolen Honors," a one-reel drama featuring Mary Fuller; special Imp, "The Elusive Enemy," one-reel drama, featuring Francis Ford and Grace Cunard; special Victor, "Room Rent and Romance," a comedy featuring Victor Potel.

The special one-reel Victor comedy will be entitled "The Five Thousand Dollar Dream."

Kipling Pictures at Boston Theater

"The Light That Failed" Booked for a Full Week at the Hub's Biggest House.

THE first Kipling work to be put into pictures, Pathe's "The Light That Failed," has been accorded an unusual honor by the famous 4,000-seat Boston theater, of Boston, Mass. This theater is owned by the Keiths, and on its historic stage all of the world's greatest artists have appeared. General Manager Larsen and Theater Manager Harris have just signed with Manager Farrell, of Pathe's Boston office, for a solid week's run of this Gold Rooster play at one of the highest rental prices ever paid for a feature. By special request of both Mr. Keith and Mr. Kipling the first public American showing of this picture is to be held at this famous theater.

"The Light That Failed" is being booked very heavily by every one of the various Pathe Exchanges. Long runs are the rule. The fame of Mr. Kipling, the splendid reputation of Robert Edeson, the success which has followed the various productions of Edward Jose, have all contributed to the unusual amount of business being done on "The Light That Failed."

A prominent New York newspaper man to whom was shown "The Light That Failed" said, "I am not a film critic in the professional sense of the term. My acquaintance with the screen successes of the photoplay is not wide enough for me to lay claim to title of critic or reviewer. But I know when a picture grips me. I know when a picture increases my amazement at what the film art is accomplishing. I know when photoplay acting is illumined with genuine artistry. So I am glad to testify to the worth of a forthcomthe Pathe release, 'The Light That Failed.'

"The story of Kipling's novel has been deviated from only enough to meet the requirements of the screen. Personally, I did not find these deviations leaving me with a sense of anything lost. Essential incidents have been retained and in many instances intensified by the acting of the principal players in the film drama.

"Not since the days of 'Strongheart' have I found Robert Edeson so satisfying. A new field of artistic endeavor lies ahead of him—a field in which he gives promise of splendid achievement."

CHANGES AND PROMOTIONS IN PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORPORATION.

A number of changes and promotions were effected during the past week in Paramount Pictures Corporation, immediately following the resignation of Wallace Thompson, who had been the director of publications and advertising, for the corporation, and the promotion of Kenneth Hodkinson to manager of Paramount.

With the resignation of Mr. Thompson, the officers of the corporation promoted a number of the men who had served under Mr. Thompson and have given them the full responsibility of their departments, which had been under his jurisdiction. Charles C. Burr was named manager of the advertising department; Charles E. Moyer, manager of publicity; Harry I. Day, editor of Picture Progress, a monthly magazine, and Paramount Progress, Paramount's weekly exhibitors' house organ; William Hurst, manager director of the Paramount pictographs, and a new sales promotion department will be inaugurated immediately under the direction of Manager Hodkinson and William W. Hines. Practically all of the new managers of the different departments have grown up with the organization.

CAST FOR "THE WITCHING HOUR."

The unusual cast of players, assembled by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, for their forthcoming production of Augustus Thomas' "The Witching Hour," and the fact that nine weeks or more will be required for the completion of the work, bears out the statement of President William L. Sherrill of the Frohman Company that he can make a fifty per cent. better picture, producing for the independent market than he can for program release.

In the cast of "The Witching Hour" are C. Aubrey Smith, who assumes the role formerly played by John Mason. Jack Sherrill will be "Clay Whipple" in the Thomas play. The role of "Villa" has been entrusted to Helen Arnold, the little Kentucky beauty.

Marie Shotwell plays the part of Helen, Etta De Groff will play the part of the youug mother, while Robert Conness, a leading personality on both stage and screen, plays Hardmuth. George Melville will have a role somewhat similar to that he was seen in in "The Conquest of Canaan," while others of importance will have conspicuous parts.

Edwin August in Mutual Release

Program for Week of October 16 Will Show Old-Time Star in "The Law of Nature"—Other Good Subjects.

The regular release of Mutual Star Productions for the week of October 16 will consist of "The Voice of Love," a drama featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen, and "Bluff," the third of the five part drama releases of Kolb and Dill, the famous partners. In "The Voice of Love" Winnifred Greenwood essays a new type of role which is extremely becoming and well suited to the talents of the American favorite. She is a fortune teller—a fair and dashing widow, who, through the death of her husband, an officer in the army (whom she believes she had unintentionally murdered), is forced to earn her living and support her young daughter to the best of her ability. In the role of Violet, the boarding school teacher, is Laura Sears. Edward Coxen plays the role of the woman's true friend. In the supporting cast are George Field and Harvey Clark.

One of the most exciting and engrossing of dramas is "Bluff," wherein the happy team, Kolb and Dill, find a medium for their quick action talents that must necessarily appeal to their many thousands of admirers.

The plot hinges on the discovery, alleged to have been made by Louie, janitor of the thirty-second floor of the highest building in New York, of the process for the transmutation of "base metals into gold." Kolb and Dill and pretty May Cloy are at their best in this five-reel drama, which with its quaint touches of typical Kolb and Dill humor, promises to be still more popular than "A Million for Mary," which marked the introduction of the two players to the screen, and "The Three Pals," their most recent release.

On Tuesday, Winnifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen and George Field will appear in "The Franchise," a story of thrilling intrigue and underhanded dealings, both in love and in politics, which almost sends to ruin an honest man.

In the roles of two young lawyers, Edward Coxen as the honest one and George Field as the villain, these two well-liked American players do some excellent work. Winnifred Greenwood is up to her usual mark of intelligent and sympathetic player in her part of the sweetheart for whose favor the two young lawyers vie.

The name of Edwin August is added to the list of stars in the drama output of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of October 16. Mr. August will appear in "The Law of Nature," a two-part drama, which will go to the public on Tuesday, October 18. "The Law of Nature" is a beautifully set and perfectly handled piece of screen literature. Mr. August, himself the director, spared no time or money to secure an exquisite background for this drama which deals with the desire for home and children, which dominates the heart of most men. In the role of the sophisticated, cold woman of the world, who prefers society to his childless home, Iva Shepard appears to excellent advantage. Ruth Blair plays the role of the simple maiden who wins the husband's affections after his desertion by his wife has cut him free from his marriage vows. William Bailey appears in the role of the villain.

The remaining drama releases for the week consist of a Gaumont two-part picture entitled "Looking Westward," appearing on Tuesday, October 19.

On Wednesday will be released the one-reel topical, Mutual Weekly No. 94, filled with the news of the day as gathered by the able cameramen of Pell Mitchell of the Gaumont forces. The split-reel scenic, "See America First" and Harry Palmer's Kartoon Komics, will also go to the public on that day.

There are three Cub funny pictures for the week. "He Wouldn't Tip," a comic of unusual character and full of original business, will appear Friday, Oct. 20. On Saturday, "That Dog Gone Baby" and "The Deacon's Widow," Cubs both, will constitute the Mutual's release.

The Sunday output will consist of the usual Vogue two-reel comedy and the Mutual's magazine in film, "Reel Life." Paddy McQuire, with his inimitable talents, turned to "Her Painted Pedigree," will appear in the laugh maker for Sunday.

HALL WINS UNIVERSAL SCENARIO CONTEST.

The Universal Film Company wishes to announce that Emmet Campbell Hall of Glen Echo, Maryland, has won a $250 prize for his two-reel drama, "Love's Masquerade," in which Mary Fuller plays the leading role and which was released under the Gold Seal Brand on September 13.

Early in the summer the Universal announced that in cooperation with the Picture-Play Magazine it would hold a scenario contest for Mary Fuller. Many scripts were submitted and two hundred are now being considered by the Universal scenario department at Universal City.

Scenarios came in in great numbers and the judges were swamped. When the contest closed they found they had eight hundred good scripts. This pile was cut to two hundred, Australia contributed seven, from England came eighteen and Canada contributed a large quota. Fifty-four came from Mexico. Harry Cliff, Prisoner No. 64791 at Sing Sing, entered ten scripts, two of which are now being considered by the Universal.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of October 8 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Intrigue" at the Strand.

At the Strand Theatre Lenore Ulrich was seen in a new photoplay entitled "The Intrigue," the story of which deals with an important but little known part of the present great world struggle. It portrays the secret service and the international intriguing for the possession of a marvelous invention—an X-Ray gun that annihilates at a distance of twenty-five miles. Miss Ulrich is supported by Cecil Van Anker, Howard Davies, Herbert Standing, Florence Vidor and Paul Weigel.

A motion picture of unusual interest presented was that showing President Wilson and the members of his entire cabinet at work. Other pictures shown were fashion, educational and travel studies, The Strand Topical Review and a new comedy.

The soloists on the musical program were: Grace Hoffman, soprano; Helen Scholder, 'cellist, and Albert Wiederholt, baritone.

"Sister of Six" at the Rialto.

"Sister of Six," with Bessie Love in the leading role, was the feature at The Rialto for the week beginning Sunday, October 8. The scenes of this exciting story are laid in California during the period of 1860, and the story itself deals with the efforts of a Spanish rancher to obtain unlawful possession of a valuable tract of land belonging to the seven orphan children of a New England settler. As the elder sister who looks after the six other youngsters, Miss Love has a "little mother" role which she plays with tenderness and charm. There is a love story, too, and fighting and thrills a plenty.

The Rialto Orchestra, led by Hugo Riesenfeld, rendered the sensuous "Bacchanale" from "Sampson and Delilah." Herr Bach, trumpeter, played Sullivan's "Lost Chord" with full orchestra and pipe-organ accompaniment, Dr. A. G. Robyn at the organ. James Price, tenor, returned to The Rialto again and sang "Then You'll Remember Me," from "The Bohemian Girl." Another soloist was heard and an interpretative dance, done to the "Humoresque" by Dvorak, was given.

New and striking views of Yellowstone Park were shown in a travelogue and there was Mr. Rothapfel's ingeniously edited news weekly with appropriate accompanying orchestration. A new comedy from the Keystone studios completed the bill.

"The Storm" at the Broadway.

Blanche Sweet was seen at the Broadway theater in the Jesse L. Lasky production of "The Storm," a thrilling Paramount drama written especially for her by Leighton Osmun.

The majority of the scenes were taken in the mountains near an unfrequented lake, where Natalie, a beautiful half-wild, fun-loving daughter of a retired professor, runs at will in the wilds about the Maine summer resort where they live. Near them are camped two young men, Robert Fielding, a young millionaire, and Sheldon Avery, who is studying for the ministry. The two men discover Natalie, who is more or less a child of nature, and they both fall in love with her. How the affairs are straightened out and how Natalie goes to the man she loves, and who respects her, are presented in a series of unusually dramatic scenes.

A trip through Ireland with Burton Holmes, Paramount-Bray cartoons, a Pictograph and a two-part comedy rounded out the program.

Eighty-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater another series of four new Triangle pictures was shown during the week. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Wilfred Lucas was seen in a drama of heart interest—"The Rummy," a story of a human weakness that is developed into a human kindness. The picture features on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday were "Plain Jane," an exceptionally delightful comedy-drama in which Bessie Barriscale is featured, and a new Triangle Keystone comedy. An excellent bill of vaudeville was offered with the picture.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company

TANGLED TIES (Vim), Sept. 29.—An average knockabout comedy reel with numerous lively spots. Pokes and Jabbs show considerable pep in this number. Pokes goes to country hotel for a rest, and begins to flirt with the wives of Jabbs and others. This starts the complications that lead to Pokes' escaping from his pursuers via a telegraph wire. He sinks into a well, rises again, but once more sinks at sight of his angry wife. Beside Pokes and Jabbs, those on the screen include Mabel Best, Ethel Burton, Harry Naughton, Melba Andrews, Frank Hanson and Edna Reynolds.

AN INDIAN'S LOYALTY (Biograph), Oct. 2.—Lillian Gish is featured in this one-reel "Western" reissue. The story follows the conventional lines of this sort of drama. The Indian is a ranch hand, suspected of theft. The foreman, who is in love with the rancher's daughter, is instrumental in having the Indian reinstated. The Indian proves his loyalty and gratitude when he is instrumental in saving the girl and a sum of money from the machinations of a discharged ranch hand and his accomplice. Besides Lillian Gish, Frank Oppleman, Eddie Dillon and Eagle Eye appear on the screen.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 79, 1916 (Selig), Oct. 2.—Sababa Indians hold first Papoose Congress, San Jacinto, Cal.; tennis tournament held at night, Chicago; President Wilson addresses 1,500 business men at Shadow Lawn, N. J.; steamer Bay State goes ashore near Portland, Me.; University of California freshmen and sophs in pushball contest, Los Angeles; fifteen hundred road boosters gather at Zion City, Ill., in better roads meeting; oil tank train wrecked, Alpine, Tex.; society attends Piping Rock Horse Show, Locust Valley, L. I.; twenty-six thousand U. S. soldiers in longest march since Civil War, El Paso.

MAKING AN IMPRESSION (Vitagraph), Oct. 2.—A passably good comedy reel. Action is fast throughout, and the film is strengthened by its lack of knockabout work. The Newlyweds hold a party at their parents' house. Philip and Phyllis are among the guests. Philip proposes to Phyllis, boasting of his rich aunt. He gets word that the aunt is coming to visit. The young folks plan to make the aunt believe they are all Philip's servants. The aunt learns of the deception and makes the "servants" do real work. She leaves surreptitiously, sending Philip money to invest because of his cleverness. In the cast are Winthrop Mandell, Jessie Miller, William Dangman, Dorothy Long and John Wallace.

ONE STEP TOO FAR (Kalem), Oct. 3.—A fair comedy number, with Ham, Bud and Ethel Teare. Ham becomes a policeman in this reel. Bud becomes a burglar and meets Ethel, a lady crook. Ham sees that Bud and Ethel go to jail, but goes "one step too far" in his own dealings with lawbreakers. Reviewed in the issue of October 7, page 64.

THE FABLE OF THE KID WHO SHIFTED HIS IDEAS TO GOLF, ETC. (Essanay), Oct. 4.—This is an entertaining number of the George Ade fables. As usual in this series, there is much philosophy underlying the humor of this reel. This fable tells of the boy who wanted to be like Jess Willard, but who listened to argument and became a golf caddie. Later in life he becomes a rabid baseball fan, and his dying breath is a request for baseball information. The moral is: "There is a specific bacillus for every classified disease."

A GRAIN OF SUSPICION (Vim), Oct. 4.—This number of the Vim Feature Comedies, in which Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby are featured, can only be classed as fair. Although the two players work hard, the story is weak. Many of the subtitles, though, are really humorous. Hubby is jealous over the seeming attention paid his wife by another man. The "other man" is a real estate agent from whom the wife has bought a lot as a surprise to hubby. He hires a detective and learns the supposed interloper's identity when the former is arrested by the detective.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 80, 1916 (Selig), Oct. 5.—Members of San Diego, Cal., Rowing Club give diving exhibition; $500,000 fire at St. Charles, Mo., destroys part of big bridge; members of Pennsylvania State Militia hold athletic tournament, El Paso; Federal, State and City unite in celebrating 200th anniversary of Boston Light; boys of the public schools take part in aquatic games, San Francisco, Cal.; pictures of pitchers who will take the mound in World Series, Boston, Mass.; forest fires destroy oil well derricks and timber in vicinity of Newhall, Cal., Ohio Field Artillery brings first war balloon to border, El Paso; Pennsylvania State troops in four-day hike across mountains, Mt. Franklin, Tex.

ROYAL BLOOD (Vim), Oct. 5.—A fair comedy number, with Plump and Runt doing their best with a rather poor story. The girl's mother wants her to marry nobility. She chooses red rather than blue blood. Plump and Runt get over a few laughs in their attempts to appear aristocratic, and the fur begins to fly when the real count appears. Plump (Babe Hardy), Runt (Billy Ruge), Edna Reynolds, Ray Godfrey, Florence McLoughlin and Bert Tracey form the cast.

STOLEN PLUMAGE (Kalem), Oct. 6.—A review printed on page 64 in the issue of October 7 says "there are quite a number of laughs in this number, in which Ivy Close is featured." Henry Murdoch is seen as the Oriental potentate who follows Algy (Arthur Albertson) to America because the latter has stolen the tail feathers of the sacred Dumdikky bird. The reel contains much passable knockabout work.

STRICTLY BUSINESS (Vim), Oct. 6.—A quite lively knockabout number. Pokes and Jabbs are the funmakers in this reel. Pokes gets a job as a book agent and insists on selling Jabbs a book. Pokes is relentless in his pursuit of Jabbs, and no matter how many times he is thrown about he sticks to his ambition. Finally Jabbs capitulates, only to find that the book agent has sold every one in his household a book. Besides Pokes and Jabbs, there appear on the screen Mabel Best, Ethel Burton and Harry Naughton.

THE BLOCKED TRACK (Kalem), Oct. 7.—Helen Gibson furnishes a thrill in this number of the "Hazards of Helen" series when she climbs a telegraph wire into a tree, jumps from a limb of the tree onto a fast-moving train, and thwarts the hold-up men's efforts to rob the pay car. The reel is up to the average of preceding releases. Reviewed in the issue of October 7, page 64.

THE CANBYHILL OUTLAWS (Selig), Oct. 7.—An excellent "Western," in which Tom Mix has crowded plenty of action in the form of riding, shooting and other cowboy feats. Tom and the sheriff are both in love with Vicky. The sheriff sends Tom out to round up the Canbyhill outlaws. Tom finds that the band have kidnapped Vicky. He captures them and the outlaw leader tells him that the band are in league with the sheriff, and that the latter has notified them of Tom's presence in the vicinity. Tom kills the sheriff. In the cast are Tom Mix, Victoria Forde, Pat Chrisman and Joe Ryan.

General Film Company Specials

TWIN FATES (Essanay), Sept. 30.—Although not entirely new in theme, original touches and ingenious handling make this three-reel drama an acceptable short-length subject. Good work is done by Marguerite Clayton, Sydney Ainsworth and Edmund F. Cobb. The picture conveys the story of a wealthy young drunkard who is given a last chance to make good. On his way to another city he gets off the train and shoots himself. His identity is taken by a tramp, who makes good in the position meant for the youth. The youth has not killed himself, but has lost his memory completely. The ex-tramp is discovered to be an impostor and is accused of the supposed murder of the youth. The one-time sweetheart of the ex-tramp discovers the youth working as a chauffeur. Sight of him brings back the young man's memory, and everything is adjusted happily.

IN THE HOUSE OF THE CHIEF (Selig), Oct. 2.—Melodrama of the most melodramatic sort is found in this three reeler, which will particularly appeal to those who like stories of crime and the underworld. Eugenie Besserer does good character work as Mme. Le Blanc, who conducts a "fence." The madam's daughter and her clerk are in love. The clerk is "framed" by the madame and goes to jail. He gets out in a year and obtains a job on the police force. He rises to the position of chief. He sends for Mme. Le Blanc's daughter, who has gone to Paris. The madame finally runs afoul of the police and commits suicide when she sees that the ex-clerk is now chief. The cast includes Vivian Reed, Charles West, Sidney Smith and A. W. Wilson. Directed by T. N. Heffron.

AN OLD-FASHIONAD GIRL (Essanay), Oct. 3.—A wholesome two reeler. The picture pleases in its romanticism, and, although the story could have been done in less than two reels, the film is acceptable. The girl (Marguerite Clayton) does not care for the society idler her mother has picked out. Her ideal is a big man who can do things. Her wealthy parents bring her to a fashionable hotel in the country, where she meets a young civil engineer. He has reason to believe she is a poor country girl. Love springs up between them and the romance culminates when the girl meets the engineer in consultation with her father. There are several spots of humor in the picture. The cast is comprised of Marguerite Clayton, Patrick Calhoun, John Cossar, Florence Oberle and Ullrich Haupt.

UNDER THE GASLIGHT (Biograph), Oct. 4.—A review of this three-part adaptation of Augustin Daly's melodrama appeared in the issue of Sept. 16. It is a strong picture in which a particularly able characterization is given by Lionel Barrymore. Others in the cast are Millicent Evans, Isabel Rea, Irene Howley and Thomas Jefferson. The production supplied by Director Lawrence Marston is of good quality.

THE WEB OF GUILT (Kay-Bee), Oct. 1. No. 8 of The Girl from Frisco series. This two-reel episode is a compelling number of Robert Welles Ritchie stories. The plot deals with a murder mystery and its clever and logical solution by Barbara Brent (Marin Sais) and John Wallace (Tom Boardman). The chapter was reviewed at length on page 64 of the issue of October 7.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE SOCIAL BUCCANEER, Oct. 16. A five-part adaptation of Frederick S. Isham's novel featuring J. Warren Kerrigan and Louise Lovely. The production suffers from a badly constructed adaptation, the story losing much of its force thereby. The story is based on a peculiarly conceived idea of philanthropy. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation

THE STRAIGHT WAY (Fox), Oct. 1. A five-reel picture written and produced by Will S. Davis. The best thing about it is the good photography, that's fine. The story is but a collection of improbable situations. Leaving out the juvenile, there is no character in it who is not either a fool or a brute. The acting of the leading woman is weak.

Greater Vitagraph (V-L-S-E, Inc.)

A PRINCE IN A PAWNSHOP (Vitagraph), Oct. 16. A five-part adaptation of a play by Marie de Sarlabous and André de Segurola, featuring the noted actor Barney Bernard. Mr. Bernard's work is delightful as always, but the picture itself is too long drawn out. In the cast beside the star are Garry McGarry, Bobby Connelly, Charlotte Ives, Edna Hunter, Brinsley Shaw and Lester Bernard. The picture was made by Paul Scardon. A full review appears elsewhere.

THE SCARLET RUNNER, NO. 3 (Vitagraph), Oct. 16.—The Masked Ball brings Christopher into association with a crook who has planned to rob the guests at a masked ball held in London. He tells Christopher that he is going to return the stolen jewels at the supper and claim the prize diamond. His suspicions aroused by a forced accomplice of the villain, Christopher turns the table and forces a premature return of the booty.

International Film Service, Inc.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 79, 1916 (Oct. 30).—Brooklyn and Philadelphia baseball teams battle in pennant race—Boston Red Sox clinch American League pennant; newly-equipped Serb army entrains for front, near Saloniki, Greece; twelve U. S. battleships escort interned German liners to navy yard, Old Point Comfort; a day with President Wilson at Shadow Lawn; test submerging powers of new type submarines at Bremen; device for catching torpedoes demonstrated at Newport, R. I.; with the German Army "somewhere in France"; Harvard defeats Bates in first football game of season, Cambridge, Mass.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 80, 1916 (Oct. 6).—On the Balkan front with Photographer Ariel L. Varges; interned German cruiser, Prinz Eitel Friederich, arrives in Philadelphia Navy Yard; Suffrage leaders begin tour of twenty-eight states, Albany, N. Y.; Czar Ferdinand of Bulgaria visits large steel plant at Trzynietz; cowboys conquer savage horses at annual round-up, Pendleton, Ore.; new military balloon tried out at El Paso—Pennsylvania National Guardsmen in athletic tournament; footlights and fashions; old frigate Franklin beached and burned to get gold and copper rivets, Eastport, Me.; World Series contestants—Boston Red Sox and Brooklyn Dodgers, prepare for struggle.

Mutual Film Corporation

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 56 (Gaumont), Oct. 4.—"Baltimore and Annapolis, Maryland" is the subjects of this number of the Gaumont travel series. It contains a resume of the principal monuments, the docks, and various points of historic interest in the vicinity, including Fort McHenry. The Baltimore oyster fleet is also an item of interest. A Palmer cartoon entitled "Abraham and the Opposum" finishes the reel.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 92 (Mutual), Oct. 4.—Interesting items of this issue are the Piping Rock Horse Show at Locust Valley, L. I.; King George of England with his troops in France; a fruit special wrecked at Fresno, Cal.; a rodeo at Modesto, Cal.; Thomas Edison greeting old-time telegraphers at West Orange, N. J., and the Royal Engineers of England making a record on the manufacture of pontoon bridges.

OH FOR A CAVE MAN (Cub), Oct. 6.—A farce comedy featuring Billie Rhodes as the sister of a college boy who deceives his father into believing his chum to be a minister's son. The sister whose fancies turn toward the cave man type, has her illusion rudely jarred by a joke played on her by her brother. The impersonation is a very good one but the picture is rather tawdry.

THAT WONDERFUL WIFE (Cub), Oct. 7.—An amusing comedy featuring Billie Rhodes. Two young people meet in an unusual fashion while trying to board a train. The acquaintanceship ripens into love, and various amusing incidents occur, among them the substituting of Billie for another man's wife to cover an embarrassing situation for a friend of her sweetheart's. Quite amusing.

WON BY A FOWL (Cub), Oct. 7. Rather an amusing comedy in which Billie Rhodes is the star. A young couple in a dilemma because the cook has decided to leave on the very day that they have promised to give an old grouchy uncle a birthday party, are central figures. What happens is quite amusing. Billie Rhodes as the wife, gives a refined impersonation.

REEL LIFE, NO. 23 (Gaumont), Oct. 8.—This leads off with some intimate scenes from the daily life of Mary Miles Minter, the Mutual's youngest star. Then comes interesting scenes from a back-yard farm, 40x150 feet, in Providence, R. I. A big variety of apples, pears and smaller fruits are shown. The strongest feature is the closing one, which pictures the way to handle a canoe, how to rescue capsized persons, etc. This contains some tips worth knowing about a popular but rather risky pastime.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

FANTOMAS NO. 5 (Gaumont), Oct. 9. "The Pale Mask of Death" is the title of this thrilling number of a five-reel serial. In it have hearing that Fantomas is confined in a Parisian prison. Plans to help him escape, take his place in the prison, and arrange for the mask of his re-capture in order that the honor of his arrest may be his. Fantomas, after his escape, commits two more crimes, the first one being the murder of a magistrate in which Fantomas, with the aid of a wig and a false beard he evades the police for considerable time.

A TOUCH OF HIGH LIFE (Vogue), Oct. 8.—A two-reel eccentric comedy, featuring Paddy McGuire, Arthur Moon and Gypsy Abbot. It pictures the experiences of a street cleaner who takes home an intoxicated man, borrows a letter of introduction from the latter's clothes and goes to the beach for a good time. While the main idea is good, the humor throughout is forced rather than spontaneous and for some reason fails to bring much laughter. The picture is somewhat lacking in strength.

CITIZENS ALL (American), Oct. 9.—A fairly interesting two-part number with Winnifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen in the leading roles. The picture has a good moral and no doubt has a place to fill in persuading American citizens against racial prejudice during the present world war. Two men, one a Frenchman and the other a German, become deadly enemies because their native countries are at war. The son and daughter of the respective families fall in love with one another, and marry; and at the birth of a baby boy the old folks decide to become naturalized American citizens and forget their grievances.

PHIL HOLDEN-WASTER (Mutual Star Production), Oct. 9.—An unusually interesting five-part comedy-drama featuring Richard Bennett, whose interpretation of the character of Phil Holden, whose leaning toward literary pursuits do not coincide with his spending propensities, is excellent. The turning of the tables on his brother, who has spent considerable of his life in reproaching Phil for his careless financing is amusing; for when Phil does take a notion to change his ways he almost ruins his brother by a speculation that lines his own pockets and enables him to help his brother out of a crisis.

THAT SHARP NOTE (Beauty), Oct. 10.—A two-part number in which Murphy, the right-hand man of Filson, is sent to deliver a note to Ambassador Jones, who must in turn deliver it to Flyser. Kingland's spies make considerable trouble for Murphy, after which an order arrives countermanding the delivery of the note. There is not much point to this production, which seems to be, strictly speaking, neither comedy nor drama.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS NO. 6 (Pathe), Oct. 15. This number contains a review of dainty wedding garments. The bride's full outfit is exhibited in the same attractive manner in which all of the Florence Rose fashions have been shown.

LUKE AND THE BANG-TAILS (Rolin), Oct. 15.—A farce comedy in which Luke and his pal do service at a racing stable. The manner in which the horses seemingly take part in the business of the play is very amusing. This number will be a welcome comedy addition to the program of any picture theater.

Pathe Exchange, Inc. Specials

THE SHIELDING SHADOW, No. 3 (Astra), Oct. 15.—"The Mystic Defender" proves to be quite as interesting as the two preceding chapters of this serial. In it are introduced two new characters, Muriel, a cabaret dancer, and her brother, who also are aided by the "Shielding Shadow." Some excellent cabaret scenes are incorporated herein. An attempt by Muriel to lure a confession of the forging of the note, on the persuasion, by the way, of the "Shielding Shadow," from One Lamp Louie, is frustrated by the breaking out of a fire. Leontine is also protected from the threatened violence of her husband by the "Shielding Shadow."

THE GRIP OF EVIL (Balboa), Oct. 15.—The fourteenth and concluding chapter of this serial is called "Humanity Triumphant." The title is significant of the dominating theme. The answer to the question "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?" is in the negative, that loves rules the world. The closing episode shows Burton kidnapped in order to extort money from him, and when this is not forthcoming the philanthrophist is threatened with death. The prisoner is released after an appeal to the would-be murderers in which strong emphasis is laid upon the love of their mothers for them—a not too convincing denouement, considering the bloodthirsty character of the Hellcats. The action is marked by some exciting scenes.

THE LIGHT THAT FAILED (Gold Rooster Play), Oct. 15.—A five-part adaptation of Rudyard Kipling's story. The story has suffered much in its transfer to the screen. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

A NATION'S PERIL (Pathe), Oct. 15.—A two-part drama of international intrigue. Octavia Handworth, Paul Panzer, and other well-known players appear in the cast. The story on which the picture is based is an interesting one and affords a spectacle when the woman elected to aid in obtaining a chart of the harbor from the U. S. Naval department pushes the button which explodes a mine beneath the craft in which her confederates are making their escape with the chart.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE OLD FOLKS AT HOME (Fine Arts), Oct. 15. An interesting story and character analysis by Rupert Hughes. Mr. Beerbohm Tree is in the cast with rather scant opportunity.

THE RETURN OF DRAW EGAN (Ince), Oct. 15.—A powerful story of character reformation through opportunity, in which William S. Hart finds a chance to interpret with great vigor and intelligence. A fascinating story.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

WITH THE SPIRIT'S HELP (Nestor), Oct. 2.—A first-rate farce dealing with the surprise of a fake medium and his dupes when spirits unexpectedly respond to appeals for signs from the other world. An eloping couple is responsible for the deception. Lee Moran, Priscilla Dean and Eddie Lyons are in the cast.

WHEN LITTLE LINDY SANG (Powers), Oct. 15.—A pleasing juvenile number written by Olga Printzlau and produced by Lule Warrenton. It features a clever little colored girl in a country school, who sings too loud. She uses her voice to advantage, however, in stopping a fire panic. The story is touching and well presented. It will be appreciated by old as well as young.

HIS OWN NEMESIS (Nestor), Oct. 16.—A comedy, by Walter H. Newman, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean. The main situations, in which Gaston has unwittingly employed his friend's wife to act as his model, is an amusing one. Bloodshed is threatened when the truth becomes known, but peace is restored and all ends happily. This makes a pleasing comedy subject.

SAFETY FIRST (L-KO.), Oct. 18.—An eccentric comedy, featuring two crooks who have made a successful haul. One crawls into the safe, in which the other has placed an infernal machine. He is lowered from the window in the safe. A chase and explosion follow. These latter scenes are best, but, as a whole, the number is only fairly successful.

THE GOLD BAND (Rex), Oct. 20.—The conclusion of this story, by Harvey Gates, lacks definiteness, otherwise the picture is satisfactory and quite human in its characterization. A young wife becomes a stenographer, posing as an unmarried woman. The attentions of her employer are observed by her husband, working in the same office; but the affair has no serious consequences. Hal Cooley and Helen Leslie play the leads.

PAT'S PASTEING WAYS (Nestor), Oct. 21.—An amusing little trifle, in which Pat Rooney acts as bill poster at the local opera house. He pastes his bills on cows, horses, goats or any other objects that will hold them. He then plans to elope with a lady advance agent, but her husband turns up and prevents this. Not much in plot, but rather funny in some respects.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. Specials

TRAPPED (Universal Special Feature), Oct. 9.—This ninth episode of "Liberty" contains much realistic border warfare. Real bullets are apparently fired during the clash between the Mexicans and Texas troopers. The director, Jacques Jaccard and photographer, Milton Moore, are accomplishing some very interesting things in this serial, which is of timely appeal. Liberty and Rutledge free themselves from the bandits and the former flees with Pedro, leaving the captain and other troopers at the ruins of a dobe hut where the fighting takes place.

BARRIERS OF SOCIETY (Red Feather), Oct. 16.—A five-reel offering, by Clarke Irvine, featuring Dorothy Davenport, Emory Johnson and Richard Morris. This follows the lives of a girl born of rich parents and a boy born of poor parents on the seacoast. The chief scenes occur on an uncharted island, whither the girl has been lured by a man she does not love. The story is simple in plot and quite appealing. Some of the construction is a little choppy, but it has a good adventurous flavor and retains the interest in spite of some weaknesses.

TIMOTHY DOBBS—THAT'S ME, NO. 10, "Fame at Last" (Universal Special Feature), Oct. 16.—Being unable to pay their board bill, Dobbs and his valet are at the mercy of their landlady, who puts Dobbs to work scrubbing floors while his companion in distress tries to better their fortunes by posing as a blind beggar. Dobbs escapes being placed in hock and takes advantage of an offer made by a prize fight promoter. He wins the money offered, but when he comes to collect the manager has disappeared. At last he locates as an actor in the Universal studio and there the story ends. These two reels, the last in the series, make excellent comedy, especially in the passage devoted to the prize fight. Carter DeHaven and Robert Milash have shown themselves to be an amusing team in a picture of good comedy value.

THE WRATH OF "CACTUS" MOORE (Gold Seal), Oct. 17.—A three-reel Western subject, written by Wm. V. Mong, who plays the leading role. "Cactus" Moore is a fire-eating old ranchman, whose son wishes to marry the daughter of the man who was his own rival in early days. The old man protests in various ways, even branding horses unlawfully to throw suspicion on the girl's father. But at length he succumbs and even goes so far as to attend the wedding. The presentation is ordinary, but the story is rendered rather unusual by the character of "Cactus." This holds the interest in spite of some faults.

THROUGH BABY'S VOICE (Laemmle), Oct. 18.—A two-reel number, by Calder Johnstone. The young married couple separate and the judge and attorney take their child. The little girl, impersonated by Zoe Beck, proves a very engaging little actress. She learns to use the telephone and invites her warring parents to her birthday party, where the domestic break is patched up. The story is simple, but appealing and well-presented. Edna Maison, Douglas Gerard and L. M. Wells are in the cast. A good subject of the quiet, homelike type.

THE CONSPIRACY (Bison), Oct. 21.—A two-reel subject, by Wm. Parker, featuring L. C. Shumway, Harry Carey and Edith Johnson. This pictures the manner in which a crooked secretary to a railroad president gets into the clutches of a loan shark. To square himself, he plans a coup and tries to throw the blame on another office man. The latter, in love with the president's daughter, is at first the scapegoat, but later clears himself and wins the girl. The story has no exceptional originality, but has good action and is enacted by an appealing cast.

World-Pictures.

THE HIDDEN SCAR (Peerless), Oct. 16.—A five-part production featuring Holbrook Blinn and Ethel Clayton. The story on which the picture is based was written by Mrs. Owen Bronson, and has evidently been poorly scenarioized. The action of the production is weak and often meaningless. The story itself is interesting and the picture will be enjoyed for this reason. A full review appears elsewhere.

Theda Bara Enacts Juliet

Famous Actress Will Be Seen in An Elaborate Fox Interpretation of the Shakesperean Tragedy.

WILLIAM FOX announces Theda Bara, the great emotional actress, in a magnificent and colorful picturization of "Romeo and Juliet," Shakespeare's tragedy. This superproduction will be released as a part of the regular Fox program. It will be shown to the public for the first time at the Academy of Music.

This epochal film, which adheres precisely to the poet's masterly play, has been in work for many weeks at William Fox's studio in Fort Lee, New Jersey. Thousands of dollars were spent to insure absolute accuracy in details, as well as in essentials. From many standpoints the picture should prove one of the real triumphs recorded in the history of the silent drama.

The settings throughout are entirely worthy of the production. Among those particularly attractive are the fateful masquerade ball, the beautiful balcony scene, and the city of Verona. The story has not been sacrificed in any attempt to obtain extra film footage. It was decided that five reels would make the most effective screen version of "Romeo and Juliet," and only five reels were taken. Acting, direction, scenario, photography, film cutting—everything in connection with the picture was placed in charge of experts.

It is needless to dilate upon Miss Bara's eminent fitness for portraying before the camera the intensely tragic character of Verona's fairest maid. Miss Bara's success as an emotional artist has been recognized internationally.

Mr. Fox engaged a supporting cast which is strong and well balanced. Harry Hilliard gives a remarkable presentation of the role of Romeo.

Among the principals in the cast Glen White, Walter Law and John Webb Dillion have acted in many of William Fox's recent releases. Einar Linden will be recalled for his splendid performance as Don Jose in the Fox picturization of "Carmen." Alice Gale has a record of thirty years' success on the stage; for several seasons she acted the Nurse in the legitimate. Jane and Katherine Lee will not be missed from the production. These two children have the parts of pages. The name of J. Gordon Edwards, who has made most of the Bara photoplays, guarantees the excellence of the direction.

THE LATIN AMERICAN PRODUCING COMPANY.

The Latin American Producing Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York for the principal purpose of producing moving picture films particularly adapted to the Latin American countries, but also of international interest which will make them acceptable to other foreign countries and to the North American market as well.

Paul Trinchera, president of the new company and general director of the production of the new company as newspaper man and moving picture director, has traveled in almost all Europe, Africa and America and knows what kind of pictures will be acceptable to a cosmopolitan audience. His moving picture career started as a scenario writer, and after co-operating with the director in putting on his scenarios, learned the camera technique and the direction. Mr. Trinchera has produced pictures in Italy, France and recently in New York.

Clarence Woodhams, the general manager of the new company, has been connected for several years with different automobile enterprises. The offices of the new company are located at 1482 Broadway.

ROLIN COMPANY'S FIRST COMEDY FOR PATHE.

The Rolin Company has just made their first two-reel comedy for Pathe. Judging from the unanimous approval by the Pathe film committee of "Luke's Lively Life," which was the name of the comedy, others of the same length may be seen in the near future. Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels are in the cast and their antics in the big restaurant scenes are indescribably funny.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

PRE-SHOWING OF "THE VAMPIRES."

The great success of "Fantomas" as the first three-reel series ever released in America will be more than duplicated by the next Gaumont three-reel series, "The Vampires," if the words of praise of exhibitors who have had a foretaste of the series at Mutual branches can be taken as indicative of the general sentiment. The first two episodes are now being shown throughout the country that exhibitors may know exactly what they are to offer their patrons in booking "The Vampires" for nine weekly episodes.

Branch managers are writing the Gaumont Company in terms which indicate that "The Vampires" will duplicate the success with which it has met all over the world. It not only holds the record at the Palais Gaumont, Paris, but also at a number of English theaters and colonial amusement houses. The series is entirely new to America. The actors include some of the most popular screen artists of France.

Here follow some of the comments from Mutual branch managers: Atlanta: The verdict of exhibitors at the private pre-view was unanimous in favor of "The Vampires." They are just the kind of subjects exhibitors are looking for. Boston: "The Vampires" met with the approval of a large number of exhibitors who were present at the run-off. We look for a large amount of business on this series. Cleveland: We anticipate a greater volume of business even than on "Fantomas." New Orleans: "The Vampires" pleased exhibitors. Prospects look bright for the series in this territory. Pittsburgh: Exceptionally good, and will go over well in this territory. St. Louis: Exhibitors very well pleased. Washington: Impression is most favorable. Prospects are extremely bright.

BASEBALL EPISODE IN "BEATRICE FAIRFAX" SERIES.

"Play Ball," the tenth episode of the International's photoplay series "Beatrice Fairfax," will be released next Monday, October 9th, while the World's Series is in progress. It is one of the most interesting and realistic of the episodes and will undoubtedly make a strong appeal to the baseball fans.

The episode has to do with the kidnapping of "Kerrigan," the star pitcher of the New York Giants. Many of the scenes were made at the Polo Grounds during the recent benefit game between the Giants and the Yankees, which was witnessed by more than 18,000 persons. It shows both teams in action, with Manager McGraw of the Giants, Manager Donovan of the Yankees and all the stars, including Benny Kauff, Charley Herzog, "Heinie" Zimmerman, Fritz Maisel, Walter Kipp and others putting up as great a game as they ever played. The camera caught Benny Kauff knocking the home run which won the game, and the vast audience going wild with enthusiasm.

It was in this game that Fred Schupp, the Giant pitcher, was knocked out of the box by the Yankees, after which he started his long run of victories which form a part of the Giants' great record.

In addition to the baseball stars, four of the International's stars have prominent parts in the episode. They are Harry Fox who is the real star of the series, Grace Darling, Olive Thomas, the famous beauty, and Nigel Barrie.

Louis Rosenbluh, the President of the Variety Films Corporation, announces that he has acquired the rights for New York and New Jersey, of the new Tom Terriss feature film, "My Country First," which deals with the timely topics of patriotism and preparedness, bringing home in a powerful manner the necessity for America to arm herself against outside enemies. Mr. Terriss enacts the star role in this photoplay, which is in six parts, and is supported by a remarkable company, including Jill Woodward, who gives a noteworthy representation of a vampire role, and Helene Ziegfield, who contributes a remarkable characterization.

The plot of "My Country First" concerns itself with the thrilling adventures of a young inventor, who plans to give to the United States his secret formula for a powerful explosive. A band of international spies contrives a plot to filch from him the secret of the explosive. How they are foiled in their attempts, after numerous sensational adventures, forms the substance of what is declared to be a highly interesting plot.

LOCKWOOD AND ALLISON IN "BIG TREMAINE."

Harold Lockwood and May Allison, the Metro-Yorke stars, at the present time absorbed in their respective screen characterizations in "Big Tremaine," by Marie Van Vorst, proved to be of a charitable disposition, when they presented a Los Angeles orphan asylum with two large bales of cotton. It was while Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison were working in the Imperial Valley, California, for scenes in "Big Tremaine" that the inspiration for this charitable act came to them. The two bales of cotton were picked by members of the "Big Tremaine" cast, and brought to Los Angeles in Mr. Lockwood's new automobile.

All the cotton for California is raised in the Imperial Valley and some beautiful shots of the fields in bloom were secured by Cameraman Tony Gaudio under the direction of Henry Otto. "Big Tremaine" is laid in Virginia, which explains why Director Henry Otto and his company journeyed in quest of cotton fields.

"MAROONED" (Essanay).

An out-of-doors story with beautiful water scenes is this three-act drama, which tells a forceful story that is punctured by many thrills. A yacht afire and daring rescues on a rocky beach furnish interesting action and the value of the picture is further accentuated by excellent photographs and good selection of locations. The yacht used in the picture is the "Tringa," belonging to Mayor William Hale Thompson of Chicago, who is an enthusiastic yachtsman. Edward Arnold and Alice McChesney appear in the leading roles. The plot deals with a yachting cruise, the rescue of a girl of the party by a sailor and the development of a love affair which ignores class distinctions.

Lasky to Present Prize Picture

Fannie Ward in "Witchcraft," Unusual Production Written by Columbia University Student.

ONE of the unusual features about the Lasky production, "Witchcraft," which will be released on the Paramount Program on October 16 with the captivating Fannie Ward in the stellar role, is the fact that this is the photodrama which won the prize contest held at Columbia University under the auspices of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

Scene from "Witchcraft" (Lasky).

The author of this intense and unusual drama is Dr. R. Ralston Reed, a physician of Morristown, New Jersey, and one of the members of the new class in photodramatics at Columbia. Dr. Reed is not a professional writer of scenarios, but his story was held by the judges to be the best example of photodramatic technique among the scores of plays submitted.

Professor V. O. Freeburg at Columbia started the class last winter and the co-operation of the Lasky Company was offered in conducting a contest for the best photoplay written during the initial year of the class. William C. de Mille, the celebrated Lasky director, also a Columbia alumnus, who has been actively identified with the picture production, acted as the principal judge and read all the manuscripts submitted.

In addition to receiving a substantial sum for the photodrama, Dr. Reed was given a trip to the Lasky studio at Hollywood, at the expense of the company, where he met Fannie Ward, the charming star, and also saw the play in the process of making.

FIFTH EPISODE OF "THE YELLOW MENACE" THIS WEEK.

The title of the fifth episode of "The Yellow Menace," released this week by the Unity Sales Corporation, is called "The Haunted House." In this episode the Government authorities become increasingly alarmed over the activities of Ali Singh and his agents. Senator Stevens of Oregon shares the fate of Senator Johnson and his death is the result of "The Yellow Menace" treachery.

Najla, after being temporarily safe from Ali Singh's clutches, has taken up her residence with Margaret Bronson and May Manning, and the efforts of Errol Manning and Bronson are directed toward keeping the three girls protected and away from danger. In spite of all precautions, however, they are told that Errol Manning and Willard Bronson are being kept in a house some distance away and need their assistance. Fooled by this trick, the girls rush to this house; are captured and held as hostages with a threat of torture if they did not swear obedience to Ali Singh's commands.

Manning and Bronson, overwhelmingly alarmed at this fresh attack on the girls, immediately set about to rescue them, but their horror at the plight of the hapless girls is nothing compared with the consternation caused by a cable from London, announcing that Willard Bronson's father, the banker, has been murdered in London, whither he had gone on important business. Willard Bronson realizes that Ali Singh has carried out his threat on his father's life and swears vengeance on this hostile arch fiend, who seems to stop at nothing and whose every threat so far he has carried out.

STRAND FILM SERVICE ORGANIZED.

The Strand Film Service, a new entry into the ranks of the film exchanges, has been organized by Al Posen and Bob Millstein, both well known in the trade. Offices have been opened in the Gaiety Theater Building, Broadway and 46th street, New York. The new company will embark on a policy of acquiring only pictures of proven merit, and facilities have been arranged providing for a thorough system of distribution to local exhibitors.

MRS. GILBERTIE LEAROCK IN "IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE."

With Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the new Metro-Quality production, "In the Diplomatic Service," is Mrs. Gilbertie Learock, member of a celebrated old theatrical family. Her husband's brother was the late George Learock, leading man for Thomas Keene, Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, Madame Rhea, and other famous stage celebrities, and director of Forepaugh's stock company in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Learock was before her marriage Gilbertie Davidson, daughter of John X. Davidson, manager of the old Davidson opera house, St. Paul. Following the family bent, Mrs. Learock went on the stage, first appearing with "Little Corinne," when Corinne was little. For three years she played the mannish woman, Nera Mann, with Ward and Vokes in "A Run on the Bank." In "The Female Drummer," with Johnstone Bennett, she played the star part under Miss Bennett's name on several occasions when the latter was ill. Not long afterward she retired from the stage, but returned to public life when motion pictures, of which she is very fond, came into vogue. For Metro she has appeared in "Dimples," for Selig in "A Milk White Flag" with Otis Harlan, and for the Advance in "The Making of John Hayes."

GAUMONT ENLARGES CAMERAMAN'S TERRITORY.

Eugene W. Castle was such a successful cameraman, having a highly developed nose for news, that he secured for San Francisco a larger representation than it had ever had before in the Mutual Weekly. After watching his work for some time, the Gaumont Company has now decided to widen his opportunities by turning him loose on the Pacific Coast for "Reel Life" and "See America First." Mr. Castle's only instructions are to send in pictures that are suitable for these single-reel releases. His roving commission permits him to travel from the Canadian border to Mexico wherever water flows into the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. Castle has just left for Chicago and the far west, after having spent ten days at the Gaumont studios, Flushing, N. Y. While at the Gaumont headquarters he conferred with Pell Mitchell, his old chief, and the editors and directors of the two single-reels which he will now represent. In Chicago Mr. Castle will visit the main offices of the Mutual Film Corporation. He is planning to carry a complete photographic outfit while in the field, insuring excellent still pictures for publicity purposes, something highly appreciated by exhibitors as an advertising adjunct.

The San Francisco territory for the Mutual Weekly will now be covered by Bertin E. Moisant.

MOUNTAIN STATES ACQUIRED BY LESSER.

A deal has just been closed between the Mutual Film Corporation and the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., for "Purity" for the states of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

This move on the part of Sol Lesser's concern opens a field of greater activity, as the Mountain States have always been a territory coveted by him. The move materially strengthens his buying power on the Pacific Coast, as it is his intention to include this territory, as well as the coast, in negotiations for the big features to be released in the future.

"ONLY A ROSE" (Selig).

"Only a Rose" is the name of a wonderful Selig Diamond Special written by Will M. Ritchie, and released in regular service through General Film on Monday, October 16. Among the well-known players featured in this drama are Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley, Leo Pierson and Eugenie Forde. There is unique photography in this production, and an exciting plot full of pathos and appeal, logically carried out to the final ending.

FLORENCE TURNER IN "REDEEMED" (Mutual).

In Redeemed the forthcoming Mutual Star Production, Florence Turner, "the Bernhardt of the screen," has a thoroughly suitable vehicle for the display of her talents as an emotional actress. As 'Marea,' the little Italian girl adrift in London she is at her best.

Under the direction of the famous Larry Trimble, 'Redeemed' has the finished quality which characterizes all of the Turner plays. Scenes taken in the burning Adelphi theater with a panic stricken mob trying to escape through blocked doors, is perhaps the most sensational thing of its sort ever done.

Miss Turner's soulful eyes and beauty of expression make her an ideal "Marea." In this story where a helpless foreign girl is cast into the hands of villains by her own cousin, a selfish actress, but holds her own and wins the place her cousin loses in the end, Miss Turner's sympathetic personality makes a strong appeal.

"Redeemed" has a wonderful background—London in all its teeming bustle of humanity. Mr. Trimble has made the best use of the color of his settings, as he always does, and "Redeemed" is worthily set.

CAVALIERI STRONG BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION.

That the box office angle is sometimes lost sight of by the newspaper reviewers of a picture is shown by the success of Pathe's "The Shadow of Her Past," in which Lina Cavalieri and Lucien Muratore are starred. The fact that the picture was made abroad overshadowed in the reviewers' minds the wonderful drawing value of Cavalieri "the most beautiful woman in the world." For a number of years the famous opera singer has been one of the most talked of women in both Europe and America. Every American has read of her; to every American she is more than a name. That vast publicity has money value to the exhibitor, regardless of the locality in which the picture was filmed. The reviewers, being critics and not exhibitors, in many cases "damned it with too faint praise." It was "foreign," "the actors gesticulated too much," "the story was hackneyed," etc. etc.

Exhibitors, however, saw the opportunity for effective advertising. They clamored for "The Shadow of Her Past," played it up strong and then reaped a harvest. The crowds came, liked the picture, and spoke about it to their friends. Bookings of three and four days were lengthened to a week. The result was that many a house record was broken and the exhibitors reaped and are reaping a harvest.

UNITY RELEASING "TWEEDLEDUM" COMEDIES.

The title of the first "Tweedledum" release, set for the week of October 9, is called "Torpedoed by Cupid," a one-reeler which offers "Tweedledum" a full opportunity to display his powers. Playing the role of a country sweetheart who sees his best girl "made love to" by two intruding rivals, Tweedledum proceeds to play all manner of tricks upon them and his sweetheart's parents, which is not a very safe thing to do, as the story shows. After climbing a few trees in an automobile, in their wild effort to elope, Tweedledum and the girl finally take refuge on an outgoing ship, which the fond parents and the disappointed love rivals blow up. The lovers, however, are impervious to all such discomforts and drift into shore, wrapped in each others' arms and sitting on a large non-sinkable box. Tweedledum is supported by Babette, his wife, known as "Tweedledee," Louise Carver, in character parts, Tom Murray, Rex Adams and Billy Slade.

These comedies will be released weekly through Unity Exchanges and have already been booked in nearly every section of the country. Tweedledum is master of the art of acrobatic comedy and his stunts are sure to cause a sensation. He has been dubbed "The Scream of the Screen," and those who see him will admit he is all of that.

"STEPPING WESTWARD" (Gaumont).

The Gaumont contribution to Mutual Pictures call for a three-reel photodrama each week in addition to the three single reels. There are also five-reel feature releases from time to time. The Exchanges have been supplying this three-reel demand, and when "The Vampires" begins it will furnish three reels weekly for nine weeks. However, there are several weeks to be filled between the two series, and October 19 will see released a two-reel photodrama and a one-reel shadowgraph to make up the necessary offering from Gaumont studios.

The two-reel drama is "Stepping Westward," an entertaining story of youthful romance that does not lead to marriage until the threshold of old age is reached when the pair are "stepping westward" into the evening of life. In this play George Larkin does some of the best work of his career as the youthful lover who enlists in the Civil War and is given up for dead. He measures up in fine fashion to the opportunities for contrasted acting which come upon his meeting the woman he loved after both have grown old. Miss Mabel Van Buren has the part of the girl.

AMERICAN HISTORY DEPICTED IN "SLOTH."

Charlotte Walker has just completed for McClure Pictures one of the most unique plays in the history of motion picture production. First, it is unusual because Miss Walker does not appear in either the first reel or the fifth reel of this five-reel film. Secondly, when Miss Walker does appear, she portrays three historic characters. The second film shows her depicting Margaret Brent, the beautiful, passionate, high-bred girl who became Lord Baltimore's official representative in the early settlement days of Maryland, and whose advocacy of the vote won for her the title "First Feminist of America."

In the third film Miss Walker assumes the role of Sally Wells, a little sixteen-year-old maid of an Old Dutch settlement on Staten Island, who braved the perils of the wilderness practically alone, to build a home on her father's grant of land far up on the Hudson River. The fourth film shows the star in the part of Molly Pitcher, the dearest hoyden in American history, who followed her husband into the thick of Revolutionary warfare, and turned the tide of victory toward the Continental Army in the battle of Monmouth.

Notwithstanding these historic scenes, "Sloth" has a modern setting. A young girl (Shirley Mason) is asked by her soldier-lover (George Le Guere) to choose between her life of luxurious indolence, and a life in which pioneer courage is required. Miss Walker steps from the past in her quaint characters to influence the girl to choose the heroic way of showing her the heritage of bravery and devotion to country that has come down to inspire American women of to-day.

To insure the historical accuracy of her settings and costumes

Scene from "Sloth" (McClure).

Miss Walker invested in $60 worth of books dealing [illegible] various periods of the play, and spent weeks in absorbing the atmospheres of these quaint times.

"Sloth" emphasizes the dangers of indolence in our national life; the peril of permitting luxury to usurp the place of the simplicity of our forefathers. The introduction of this theme connects the series Seven Deadly Sins with the national side of life in a vivid and stirring way—and it is confidently predicted that "Sloth" will do more to rouse the nation's conscience than any play or book yet put forth.

PATHE'S "SULTANA" A GOLD ROOSTER IN NATURAL COLORS.

Pathe will release on October 29th, "The Sultana," a beautiful Gold Rooster Play in Pathe color.

The story is an adaption from Henry C. Rowland's popular novel, and features Ruth Roland in a role particularly suited to her personality and talents. She is supported by William Conklin and a capable Balboa cast including Daniel Gilfeather, Charles Dudley, and Frank Erlanger. When the Pathe officials first viewed this film they were so impressed with the careful artistic selection the Balboa directors had exercised in the outdoor settings that they decided to give it an added value, and sent it to the Pathe studios in France to be colored. In its present shape it is a splendid example of color photography.

Scene from "The Sultana" (Pathe).

"The Sultana" is a priceless jewel, and the story centers around its mysterious appearances and reappearances, and the weird affect it has on the destinies of all who come within the radiance of its dazzling dangerous rays. The action begins amid the whirl of the wheel and the clink of gold where Dame Fortune frowns on Doctor Mills (William Conklin), but before the tale ends the old adage proves true that "Unlucky at cards lucky at love." There is crisp action to every foot, and thrills and romance have been worked into a scenario of pleasing balance with suspense consistently sustained throughout.

"The Sultana," as it is rich in dramatic situations and beautified by natural coloring, should prove to be a most acceptable offering.

G. VERE TYLER SUBJECT FOR VIVIAN MARTIN.

In accordance with its policy of obtaining the best available subjects for its stars, the Morosco-Pallas organization has closed with G. Vere Tyler, the well known essayist and fictionist, for the motion picture rights of "The Wax Model." This novelette created considerable attention in "The Smart Set" about a year ago and will be produced on the screen with Vivian Martin in the star part.

Mrs. Tyler has had many motion picture offers for this subject and it was only after a particularly flattering offer was made by Morosco-Pallas, that she agreed to have it appear on the screen. The name of G. Vere Tyler is prominently known and represents one of the most interesting and versatile women authors. Besides having written a series of novels and leading articles for the press, Mrs. Tyler is a regular contributor to many magazines and periodicals. Among her best known novels are "Passion," "The Prodigal Daughter," "Dregs in the Cup," and the most recent published by Duffield & Co., "The Daughter of a Rebel."

FLOOD OF INQUIRIES FOR "THE CRISIS."

One of the busiest places in New York City during the past few days has been the office of H. A. Sherman, President of Sherman-Elliott, Inc., 220 West 42d Street, New York City, where the state rights for the latest film production of note, "The Crisis," are being handled. The work that Mr. Sherman would offer the Eastern states to state rights buyers, retaining Chicago and all territory west for himself, has brought a response that is said to have made a record in the sale of any of the great films.

METRO NOW SHOWING IN CANADA FROM COAST TO COAST.

With the introduction of Metro features in three of the leading theaters in British Columbia, under most auspicious circumstances, the connecting link of Metro theaters in Canada, from coast to coast, has been consummated. Herbert Lubin, who is in charge of the disfribution of Metro wonderplays in Canada, through the Standard Film Service, Ltd., has wired an extended report of Metro's reception in the new territory to President Richard A. Rowland, of the Metro Pictures Corporation. In Vancouver the initial Metro attraction at the Dominion theater was Mme. Petrova in "My Madonna," produced by Popular Plays and Players. In Nanaimo Metro's first offering was Edmund Breese in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" and in Victoria the Metro program was presented for the first time.

NEW CREDIT RULES FOR MILWAUKEE.

At a regular meeting of the Film Men's Credit Association, held in Milwaukee, September 18, 1916, the following rules were suggested and unanimously accepted (effective October 1, 1916).

Owing to the fact that exhibitors desire to advertise coming attractions with a greater degree of certainty of getting them, the film exchanges being members of this association agree to arrange their bookings so that booking sheets will be mailed to exhibitors one week in advance. If a cancellation is desired: For example bookings, week of October 16 to 22, cancellation on any day of this week should be in the office of the exchange Monday, October 9.

"In order to carry out the spirit of this rule it will be impossible to accept cancellations for bookings unless they reach the exchange on the Monday of the week prior to play date. In the case of the above bookers of all exchanges are to make use of the most desirable subjects and to prevent the oft-repeated waste of leaving film on the shelves, which many exhibitors would have liked to have in place of what was booked them.

Cancellations reaching the exchanges after the specified period will be honored and charge for program will be made as if no cancellation had been received. The members of the Film Men's Credit Association feel that this rule will benefit the showman who attends to his bookings in business-like manner and will work hardship only on the man who carelessly fails to realize that once a film is booked it is not available to anybody but the exhibitor it was intended for. The saving in clerical work alone that will result from the observance of this rule will enable every exchange to give better, more dependable service, entirely aside from the saving it will mean to exhibitors in express charges for paper that will not be used.

The members of the association are certain that the progressive elements among the exhibitors will encourage all others to join in this movement designed to save money and aggravation to everybody concerned.

"MISS GEORGE WASHINGTON" FOR MARGUERITE CLARK.

"Miss George Washington," the story of a girl who could not tell the truth, is the title of the first photoplay selected for Scene from "Miss George Washington" (Famous Players).

Marguerite Clark by the Famous Players Film Company since the renewal of her contract announced last week. Bernice Somers, the character played by Miss Clark, is dubbed "Miss George Washington" by her friends after she has successfully fooled the members of the George Washington Truth Society into presenting her with a medal for never having told a lie.

J. Searle Dawley, who is directing the picture, has engaged several notables in support of Miss Clark, including Frank Losee, Niles Welch, Florence Marten, Joseph Gleason, Maude Turner Gordon, "Billy" Watson and Herbert Prior.

"SHIELDING SHADOW" BOOKINGS INCREASE.

The big increase reported by every one of Pathe's thirty exchanges in advance of the release of "The Shielding Shadow," known as the wonder serial, increased beyond all expectations during the first week of the release.

At the request of a majority of the branch managers who have booked "The Shielding Shadow" for longer runs at better theaters than any other serial has enjoyed, it has been decided by J. A. Berst (president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, to postpone indefinitely the release of "Peril of the Army," the new military serial.

Most of the advance bookings on "The Shielding Shadow" were for the first run, showing in large theaters in the metropolitan cities. Exhibitors in the smaller cities, remembering how they profited by the advertising of the first run houses on "The Iron Claw," eagerly awaited an opportunity to book the wonder serial for first showing in their communities. These bookings have swelled the total business on "The Shielding Shadow" to record figures. Already nine of the exchanges have wired for extra prints and reorders have been placed for all advertising matter.

HOMMEL & CO. ISSUE CATALOG.

Ludwig Hommel & Co. of 947 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, has issued a forty-eight-page catalog of the various articles handled by the big house in Western Pennsylvania. It is entitled "Hommel's Encyclopedia of 'Everything for the Playhouse.'" The contents make good the rather wide claim. In the opening pages is a foreword by Ludwig Hommel, the president of the company. It is a plain talk to exhibitors, and in it he talks to picture men about their business and about his business. Single pages are devoted to the Simplex, Motiograph, Power's 6A and Power's 6B, Baird, Edison, both Super-Kinetoscope and Model D; and the Hommel Economizer.

There are pages devoted to Hommel's Specialties, and featured are Hommel's Indestructible brass slides, Hommel's announcement slides, and Hommel's Meniscus bi-convex condensing lens. Twenty-three pages are given over to an alphabetical list of the supplies kept in stock by Hommel. Then, too, there are photographs of the president, of the working staff, and of the eight-story structure in which the company is housed. The booklet should be a most "handy thing to keep in the house."

S. B. BLAKELY RETURNS WITH MANY ORDERS.

S. B. Blakely, representative of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, who has been traveling through the Northwest and Western states, returned to the factory this week with many orders for Motiographs. Mr. Blakely states that he could have mailed his orders, but he was fearful that the factory would not give them the attention he wanted his customers to have in regard to delivering machines to them at an early date, hence his trip to the factory. He reports that the exhibitors are very well satisfied with the outlook for fall business, especially after the extremely warm weather of the summer.

"THE SHINE GIRL" TAKEN UP BY WOMEN'S CLUBS.

"The Shine Girl," the Pathe Gold Rooster play produced by Thanhouser, has been taken up by the Women's Clubs everywhere. In San Antonio, Texas, according to "The Light," of that city, the local Women's Club arranged for a private showing of the picture, and after seeing it the members told the reporter that "The Shine Girl" was "the cleanest, sweetest picture" they had ever seen, and declared that there should be more pictures of the sort to "bring sunshine into people's lives."

Henry Hull, the young actor who electrified Broadway recently by his vivid performance of the leading part in "The Man Who Came Back," at the Playhouse, is acting daytimes in the forthcoming photoplay, "The Honor of the Waynes," with Robert Warwick.

The title of Marie Dressler's new "Tillie" picture shortly to be issued by the World Film Corporation, has been shifted from "Tillie's Night Out" to "Tillie's Day Off." The change was made because most of the scenes of this comedy took place in the daytime.

Director Charles Swickard of Universal City nearly has completed "The Lie," in five reels featuring Hobart Henley and Gertrude Selby. The story is by J. Grubb Alexander, and contains a Chinese atmosphere.

In the new picture, "The Scarlet Oath," the alluring Gail Kane plays twins, and it is a hard matter for the spectator to decide which one of Miss Kane to pick.

Harold Entwhistle, who plays Wilfred Templeton, the father, in the first Metro wonderplay entitled, "Love, Honor and Obey," directed by W. Christy Cabanne, is himself a director, having acted in that capacity for the California Motion Picture Corporation. Frances Nelson is starred, and Niles Welch featured in the new production.

While a two-reel [illegible] for Bill Parsons, Phillips Smalley is filming a two-reel drama, "The Two Rebels," at Universal City. The [illegible] are Vivian Rich and Jay Belasco.

"Civilization" Out of the Tremont

Al. H. Woods Would Not Change Booking Dates for Mrs. Fiske so David E. Dow Has to Close Big Film Feature for the Time Being—Will Come Back—Picture Will Be Shown in Providence and Other New England Cities.

By William F. Flynn, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, Mass.—Because Al. H. Woods refuses to change the bookings of Mrs. Fiske, David E. Dow of the New England Film Distributing Company has been forced to take "Civilization" out of the Tremont theater at the close of its present run. The booking of "Potash & Perlmutter," which was scheduled to play the Tremont was changed so that the film might remain there, but Al Woods insisted that Mrs. Fiske show at the house according to schedule, and there was nothing left for Dow to do but to announce the closing date of the present run.

"Civilization," however, will be brought back to Boston as soon as an available theater is found in which the film can be shown. There are four "Civilization" shows in this territory at the present time. Mr. Dow might have placed the show in Tremont Temple, but in doing so he would have been obliged to give up nine nights out of the first month owing to the regular Temple concert program, and he decided to wait until he could get a house where the film could be shown without breaking the run.

"Civilization" has been booked for a run at the Hippodrome in Providence, R. I., and many other places in New England where it is destined to be shown in the near future are Hartford, Conn., New Haven, Conn., New Bedford, Fall River, Springfield, Pittsfield, Lawrence and Manchester, N. H.

Rescue of Gladys Huelett Blocks Street.

Boston, Mass.—To block Washington street, the principal avenue of travel in Boston, for more than five minutes is sufficient cause for arrest, but Manager Thomas Soriero of the Park theater blocked this same street for nearly an hour and escaped without even a reprimand, and the reason for it was this:

Miss Gladys Huelett, one of the stars in the Pathe release, "The Shine Girl," was playing with the film at the Park theater and when her cue came to go on she was not to be found. A hurried search of the theater revealed the fact she had been accidentally locked in her dressing room. There was no available key to fit the door of the dressing room and the only way to get Miss Huelett out of the room was down over a ladder into Washington street.

A ladder was procured and raised to the window. Washington street was crowded at the time and hundreds of persons, suspecting that something out of the ordinary was about to happen, blocked the street in the vicinity of the theater. A camera man for the Pathe weekly appeared on the scene and while Miss Huelett was making her escape from the dressing room, aided by Manager Soriero and several attaches of the theater, he took several feet of the incident. The picture, it was said, would be released in the Pathe weeklies and later be made part of a big Pathe production.

Hard luck—Prudence the Pirate had to walk the ladder.

After the performance that evening Miss Huelett was the guest of Manager Soriero at a dinner in the Winter Garden at the Hotel Westminster, at which all the dramatic editors on the Boston newspapers were present.

L. J. Reardon, Manager at V-L-S-E.

Boston, Mass.—L. J. Reardon, formerly assistant manager of the Boston office of the V-L-S-E, has been made manager and placed in charge of the entire New England territory. He takes the place of George Balsdon, who is now directing the affairs of the New York office.

Frank H. Vine Leaves International.

Boston, Mass.—Frank H. Vine, formerly with the World Film and the Pathe exchange here in Boston, has severed his connection with the local office of the International Film Service and is now in Maine on a hunting trip. Edwin H. McCloskey, one of the original New England road men for the International Film Service, has also quit the International. McCloskey was at one time correspondent in this territory for the Moving Picture World and later was connected with the General Film Company in the South.

Boston, Mass.—Frank A. Brady, who has been connected with the local offices of the General Film, V-L-S-E and the World Film, and who is now manager of the local serial department of the Pathe exchange under E. A. Parrell, says that "Shielding Shadows," one of the latest Pathe serials, has the biggest advance bookings of any serials Pathe has ever put out.

Exhibitor Collects Another Fare

Interesting Maryland Theater Provides Four Reels and Charges Five Cents Admission—Patrons See Two of Them and Then Ushers Go Down the Aisles and Collect Another Jitney, If They Want to Stay.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

ST. MICHAEL, MD.—It will probably be of interest to other exhibitors to learn how Lee & Wrightson, owners and managers of the Electric Rainbow theater in St. Michaels, Md., run their theater. The program consists of four reels, with an intermission between the showing of every two. The general admission price is 5 cents, but the most interesting feature is the fact that after two reels have been shown, a sign is flashed on the screen to the effect that all patrons in the house who wish to remain to view the other two reels will have to pay an extra five cents. Then the managers go down the aisles, much the same as a car conductor, and collect the additional jitneys. In this way the theater really charges an admission price of ten cents, but gives its patrons the privilege of seeing two reels for five cents if for any reason they prefer to leave after that time.

This house is partitioned off into two sections, each having a screen, and while one is used by the colored patrons, the other is used by the whites, and supplies its own electricity from a dynamo in a rear room, but now that arrangements are being made to light the town by current from the municipal plant at Easton, Md., it is supposed that they may connect with this and keep the other for emergencies.

Baltimore, Md.—The Lou-Tellegen film "The Victory of Conscience"—what was left of it—was run as the feature on the program of the Great Wizard theater, 30 West Lexington street, for the first three days of last week. On Monday, October 2, just before this picture was shown on the screen at this theater, a member of the Censor Board went up into the projection room and personally superintended a mighty clipping-out of scenes. It was seen to that everything which had been banned, down to the smallest detail of the eliminations, which included most all the scenes in which the great love between the leading characters is shown, many sub-titles and other vital parts of the story, were slashed from the picture.

It is understood from a reliable source that the picture as censored has lost so much of the story as it was originally intended to be screened, that it is well nigh impossible for the audience to follow the plot with anything like a concise understanding of what it is all about. A well-known figure in the exhibiting business of this city has given it as his opinion that the slashing down by the board in this case is absolutely without reason and that while the picture originally contained a splendid moral, the censor mill has weakened this to such an extent that it has almost become a minus quantity.

Stork Brings Boy to G. H. Payne.

Baltimore, Md.—"Is everything all right?" asked A. B. Price of the Mt. Royal. "As fine as silk," answered G. H. Payne, assistant manager of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation in Washington, and then when this writer butted in to find out what it was all about it was announced that the stork had visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Payne in Washington on Friday, September 29, and left, in their care, a bouncing 7¾-pound baby boy. Mr. Price and this writer heartily congratulated Mr. Payne, for both understand the elation attendant to the event.

The Edmondson Lights Up.

Ladies' Orchestra at New Pickwick.

Baltimore, Md.—A ladies' orchestra will [illegible] this week at the New Pickwick theater, 115 North Howard street, by G. H. Gaffney, the owner and manager. Mr. Gaffney states that this orchestra has created favorable comment all over the country and that they are Washingtonians. The pieces in the orchestra include a violin, piano, cornet and drum.

Charles Thropp to Manage the Victoria.

Baltimore, Md.—Going east on Baltimore street, one suddenly sees at 415 East Baltimore street a newly decorated building which is [illegible] with a mass of lights. It is the Nixon Victoria theater, formerly run by Pearce & Scheck. It has now taken on quite a worth while appearance and is receiving the public in crowds. Mr. Nixon-Nirdlinger has put Manager Charles Thropp, who has been associated with his enterprises for the past 17 years, in charge.

CAPITAL CITY NOTES.

Petty Thefts Annoy Exchange Men.

Washington, D. C.—A number of film exchanges have been troubled more or less of late by many petty thefts. These usually occur on Sunday, at a time when there is no one in the exchanges, entrance to which is obtained by means of duplicate keys. The latest complaint to the police is from the International Film Service, of 712 Eleventh street, northwest, where the drawer of the bookkeeper's desk was broken open and a metal cash box and a kodak was stolen. In the cash box was a sum of money and a quantity of stamps. It was a short time ago that this exchange was similarly visited and many stamps stolen. If it is the same person or persons responsible for all of this it will certainly be a long sentence that will be meted out in the police court.

Postmasters Must Be Quicker

New Letter of Instruction Orders More Speed in Attending to Adjustment of Claims for Property Injured in the Mail and of the C. O. D. or the Insured Class—Important Change in the Color of the Tags.

By Clarence L. Linz [illegible] Fourth St. N. W. [illegible]

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Employees of the Post Office Department have been directed to use more promptness in the handling of claims for indemnity on account of loss and damage in the mail of insured and C. O. D. matter. In a letter of instructions to employees of the postal service, Assistant Postmaster General A. M. Dockery states that an examination of such applications shows that in a great many instances postmasters are not complying with existing regulations requiring immediate attention to indemnity claims and to all inquiries received in regard thereto. Employees handling claims are further directed to familiarize themselves with these regulations and see that all information called for in the documents and in published instructions from the department has been procured, and that any additional data which is necessary to the proper consideration of the claim is furnished.

It is said that as negligence in not complying fully with the regulations, delays the adjustment of claims and subjects the department to severe criticism from claimants, postmasters are expected to see personally that the provisions of the regulations are observed by their offices in every instance.

Tags Must Now Be Light Yellow.

Postmasters are being instructed by the Post Office Department to call attention to those patrons of the C. O. D. service who have their own tags printed, of the change in color from red to light canary yellow, and the change in the arrangement and manner of printing both on the face and the reverse sides.

Tickets for Ad. Writing Prizes.

Washington, D. C.—The Washington Herald, in cooperation with Moore's Garden and Strand theaters, last week held a contest, the prizes in which consisted of ten tickets each to the theaters named. A page of advertisements was printed in the newspaper and readers were invited to pick out the one that appealed to them most. They were further invited to then write the kind of an advertising argument that they thought will sell most of the article or proposition advertised and to mail or bring the same to the office [illegible] The three advertisements [illegible] paid for the following [illegible] and the authors of those [illegible] were awarded

New Tints at Leader Theater.

Washington, D. C.—The Leader theater on Ninth street, northwest, near E street, has got the clean-up, paint-up disease, which each fall spreads over the city of Washington. Corbin Sheild, manager of this house, is overseeing the work of painters, who are giving the interior a coat of old rose to match the handsome red carpet that has been laid over the floor of the auditorium, and the red hangings that have been put into place. The exterior of the theater is to be taken care of later.

A number of other changes are to be made at the Leader, including an orchestra of five pieces, if a good one can be obtained. In speaking of this, Mr. Sheild says that it is possible to get plenty of musicians, but what are wanted are those that can synchronize with the pictures, as the feature plays shown at this theater are accompanied by musical scores.

New K-E-S-E Exchange Chosen.

Washington, D. C.—A handsome new exchange is being fitted out at 901 E street northwest, for the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Services. Mr. Berger, the local manager, is having the work pushed forward to completion as much as possible and posters and other advertising matter are on the shelves. Further announcement concerning this exchange will be made at a later date.

International Office at Charlotte, N. C.

Washinton, D. C.—E. W. Ritch, formerly manager of the New Crystal theater in Goldsboro, N. C., has accepted a position as roadman with the International Film Service. Mr. Ritch was located in Goldsboro for eight years and is well known in both North and South Carolina. It is these states that he will cover, and an office has been secured for him in the Princess Theater building in Charlotte, N. C. This place has been furnished with a stock of posters, photographs and other advertising matter, and quite a number of reels have also been shipped to Charlotte to be used in making up emergency shows.

In commenting upon this move on the part of the local exchange, Manager Fritz Wathne, of the Washington office, states that he will now be able to give a much better service to the exhibitors in North and South Carolina, and with Mr. Ritch on the ground, better arrangements can be made all around. Frank Christoph, who formerly covered the states of North and South Carolina, will now handle Virginia and West Virginia, replacing Frank Hunter, who is no longer connected with the exchange.

A. L. Barney with Mutual.

Baltimore, Md.—A. L. Barney, who was formerly associated with the Pathe offices in New York City, has now joined the Baltimore force of the Mutual. Mr. Barney assumed charge of his new duties as traveling representative, covering the territory including Baltimore, Delaware and the eastern shore of Maryland.

New P. O. Station Appreciated.

Washington, D. C.—Local exchange managers will find very convenient the new post office station opened at 514 Eleventh street, northwest. They have found it very inconvenient to have to send to distant points for stamps, to have letters registered and to transact their postal business.

District of Columbia Pans "Purity"

Commissioner Brownslow Forbids Picture to Be Shown—It Is Said That at the Time of His Decision He Had Not Seen the Film.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A great deal of comment has been occasioned by the action of the District authorities in refusing to allow the exhibition in Washington of the photoplay "Purity." It has been condemned by Commissioner Brownlow, it is said, because of the fact of the presence of a woman in the nude, although he had not viewed the picture, and based his action largely upon the advertising matter that appeared in the local press. And be it said at the start that the writer is inclined to believe that the advertising in question was slightly overdone and possibly might be considered as of a type that would prejudice any one against the films.

"Purity" has been passed by the Maryland state board of censors and in Washington a private showing to ministers public officials, and others, brought forth nothing but praise as to photography, and it was said by one of those present that objection could only be made by those having evil thoughts themselves, there being absolutely nothing in the film as shown that could be obscene.

It hardly seeems fair that this film should be suppressed in this way and it would be a hard matter to find many who will join with Mr. Brownlow or O. K. the stand taken by him. In commenting thereon Tom Moore, in whose Strand theater the film was booked for a showing and who has widely advertised it, said: "We boast of our liberty, our fairness, that no one is convicted without a hearing, and yet here is a film play termed by critics and artists an art classic condemned by a man who has never seen it." The stand taken by Mr. Brownlow cannot be considered as other than arbitrary and very regrettable, possibly open to censure.

The episode, while full of advertising possibilities, is not very desirable, for at the time of the opening of the theater for the Sunday show with "Purity" booked, there was a large crowd of people in the streets waiting to enter the Strand, who were very much disappointed in being forced to see something else, and many of them went away with the belief that possibly something had been put over on them. Just what action Mr. Moore will take in view of existing circumstances is not as yet known. Sidney B. Lust is booking the photoplay in this territory.

Social Leaders at the Stillman

Cleveland's Four Hundred Make Premier of Magnificent New Motion Picture Theater a Brilliant Social Event—Dedication Banquet Follows the Show—Some Special Details of the House and Men Behind It.

By Hubert Persons, 419 Standard Theater, Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, O.—The motion picture has reached new heights in Cleveland. For the first time in history society, ever a patron of the motion picture in an individual sense, turned out to make the opening of a new theater a distinct social event. It was at the premier of the new Stillman theater on September 29.

It seemed, to the eye of the discriminating society editor, that an opera season was being inaugurated. The social "Four Hundred" of Cleveland gave over one evening strictly to an appreciation of the motion picture and a splendid new house built for it. The list of names of guests who occupied boxes and orchestra seats was a list culled from the social register.

Previously there were many dinner parties at the Hotel Statler, which immediately adjoins the Stillman, and after the show there was a dedication and banquet in the Statler, attended by more than 500 of those who took part in the theater opening.

One of the most unique phases of the Stillman opening was the showing of a film of "the men who made the Stillman." Pictures of the architect, the contractor and other chief artisans, together with the officers. The latter are E. M. Mandelbaum, president; Benedict Crowell, prominent merchant, vice president; Bascom Little, former president of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, treasurer; Edgar A. Hahn, secretary; Harry H. Lictig, house manager; C. L. Madden, director of publicity.

The architecture of the theater is of the Renaissance, period of Louis XVI. The building is entered from Euclid avenue—in the heart of the fashionable shopping district—through a series of three foyers. At either end of the wide entrance way there are ingenious devices by which the passerby is advised exactly what picture will be shown at any given time.

Near the box office is a large reception room, which is to be opened at 9 o'clock each morning for the convenience of suburban people who may wish to meet their friends there, check parcels, or make use of the theater's conveniences. Just inside the theater the first thing to strike the visitor is the mezzanine promenade in the heart of the house. The stage setting beyond is intended to suggest an Italian landscape as seen from the loggia. The Stillman has an organ requiring three men to play it and an orchestra of thirty pieces. The chief organist is James H. Rogers and the director of the orchestra is H. L. Spitalny.

New Mall and Alhambra Together.

Cleveland, O.—Announcement has been made that the new Mall theater, which will open in November, is to be linked with the Alhambra theater. According to the contracts just signed these theaters will be the home of the Metro pictures in Cleveland.

Strand's New Organ.

Cleveland, O.—An organ that is said to have cost $10,000 has been installed in the Strand theater. Sidney Hamilton is the chief organist. The instrument is one of the finest in Cleveland and demonstrates the demand of the motion picture patron not only for good pictures but for musical accompaniment.

Screeners Entertain Daly and Ables.

Cleveland, O.—Stars of the spoken drama and leading spirits of the motion picture trade had a love feast here the night of October 4. Arnold Daly and Edward Ables, playing at the Opera House in "The Master," were guests at a midnight banquet and cabaret of the Cleveland Screen Club at the Olmsted hotel. Both of them have made notable successes in motion pictures, Daly having starred in "The Exploits of Elaine," and Ables in comedies.

Private Feature Making Film Here.

Cleveland, O.—A big reel feature, "Innocence," is being produced in Cleveland by the Private Feature Film Company, of this city. Earl Metcalf is the star and J. A. Fitzgerald director.

C. E. Megown Directs Picture.

Cleveland, O.—Charles E. Megown, proprietor of the Cameraphone theater, directed news pictures of the Cleveland police field meet, taken Sept. 8 and 9, by the Midland Film Manufacturing Company. Frank Joffa was the cameraman. The pictures are to be released locally.

Notes From Buffalo Filmdom

By James A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

Manager Oishei, of the Teck, Honored.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 4.—John R. Oishei, manager of the Teck theater, Buffalo, was a member of the committee which received Charles Evans Hughes and party on their recent visit to this city. Mr. Oishei has been connected with the film business here for some time.

A. R. Sherry Goes to Michigan.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A. R. Sherry of this city has been appointed manager of the Bijou theater, Bay City, Mich. This house is owned by W. S. Butterfield, who has a chain of theaters in that state. Mr. Sherry at various times managed the Lyric, Family, Academy and Shea's Hippodrome here. He later was road representative of the V-L-S-E.

For Buffalo's Best Beauty.

The Regent moving picture theater, Buffalo, is conducting "a popularity contest to find the most beautiful and popular woman in the city." It is reported that the winner will be starred in a Triangle play. Ballots are distributed at the box office.

Charles Johnson Goes to Cleveland.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Charles Johnson, formerly manager of the Wilkay theater, Erie, Pa., has been appointed traveling representative of the Vitagraph Co. out of Cleveland.

Didn't Keep Films in Iron Box.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"Without exception, films not being used but held in the operator's booth should be kept in a galvanized iron box," said a local exchange man, while commenting on a serious fire in a booth at a moving picture theater near here. Nine reels were destroyed in this blaze.

Fairport, N. Y.—A recent visitor in Buffalo was Mr. Aldrich, proprietor of the Bijou theater, Fairport, N. Y.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Sun moving picture theater, here, was recently reopened.

Grand Has Prosperous Summer

Cincinnati's Opera House Pleased With Its Recent Film Successes.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CINCINNATI, O.—With the coming of October the highly successful summer moving-picture season at the Grand opera house came to a close, the final engagement being of the film version of "Shoes," which created so much discussion on its recent publication in a popular weekly. The Grand has had longer runs, larger houses, and higher admission prices this summer than ever before, which is merely another way of saying that the house made big money for the summer management. During the greater part of the summer I. Libson had charge of the house, which formed one of the downtown group of five big theaters operated by him during the summer months.

Neighbors Bar Proposed Theater.

Cincinnati, O.—One of the few instances, if not the very first, of an organized protest in this city against the location of a proposed new moving picture theater, was recorded recently at the city hall, when Mayor Puchta received a petition from the residents of Morris place, Tusculum, a suburb on the outskirts of the city, against a plan for the construction of a theater there. According to information received by the mayor, a majority of the inhabitants of the district objected to the proposed theater, and he therefore directed the building commissioner to refuse the permit. It is understood that the interests promoting the theater will suspend the plan, or select another location, although the legality of the commissioner's refusal to issue the permit is said to be rather questionable.

As a rule, especially in the more distant suburbs, a new picture show is hailed with welcome by the residents, as it gives them entertainment close at hand without the necessity of a trip to the city; but as a matter of business, no exhibitor would attempt to operate a house against the combined sentiment of the neighborhood where it was located, unless he felt pretty sure that he could overcome the opposition. This has been done in many cases, however, and may perhaps be accomplished in the instance referred to.

Manager Holah Entertains A. W. Goff.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager C. E. Holah, of the Greater Vitagraph exchange, entertained A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the company, a short time ago, when Mr. Goff passed through the city en route to New York from the Pacific Coast.

G. F. Weaver Takes Charge at World Film Office.

Cincinnati, O.—The new manager of the World Film Corporation, succeeding A. M. Miller, who recently went to New York to make other connections, is G. F. Weaver, who has had long experience on the Pacific Coast with the World selling organization. He has taken hold of the Cincinnati office with much energy, and has already been successful to a pleasing extent. The national newspaper advertising campaign to be conducted by the World is expected by Mr Weaver to make things come along very nicely, as exhibitors will undoubtedly realize the advantages of connecting up with it by featuring World films.

Features at the Schade.

Sandusky, O.—The management of the Schade theater has its eye out always for the leading features, with the idea of giving its patrons the latest thing in thrills, and this is indicated by two of the recent engagements at that house. The great Pavlowa film, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," was one of these, while the sensational Tyrone Power Universal on a much-discussed subject, "Where Are My Children?" was another. The management took the precaution of barring children under sixteen for the latter picture, however, appreciating the fact that the moral of the film might be wasted on them.

Colonial Begins Winter Policy.

Akron, O.—The combination of stock company show and moving pictures which kept the Colonial theater busy during the summer months has given way to a combination of Keith vaudeville and pictures for the winter, Manager L. J. Wise making this announcement recently. Preparatory to the fall and winter season, the house has been completely redecorated and freshened up, looking as good as new.

Lilly Building Will Be Theater

Dr. W. H. Lilly and Frank H. Stedman Will Build a New Theater to Be Called the Strand.

By Clarence L. Linz.

Fayetteville, Va.—J. M. Kennedy, architect, of Raleigh, Va., has made plans which have been accepted for the building by Dr. H. W. Lilly and Frank H. Stedman of a moving picture and vaudeville theater, which will be surpassed by none in the state. The exterior of the building will be of ornamental design, extremely handsome and suitable to a theater exterior. The front is to be amply lighted with many rows and clusters of electric lights.

The seating capacity will be for 534 persons. There is to be a spacious stage, dressing rooms and orchestra pit. There will be exit doors at both front and rear and fire-proof machine booth, with latest improved projecting machines.

The theater is to be called "The Strand" and it is expected to be opened on or before the first of December.

It is to be under the management of H. T. Drake, of the Lyric, and Mr. Drake states that he has contracted for the highest class pictures on the market.

Virginia Notes.

Norfolk, Va.—The Crossman theater has again changed hands and has been reopened by J. O. Askeuu & Bro. The house will be under the management of Louis Spain, a well known manager of this city, who was in charge of the Wonderland for a number of years.

Norfolk, Va.—The Ghent theater here has been leased by Charles C. Vaughan and will be continued as a motion picture house, showing features almost exclusively.

Norfolk, Va.—Thomas Eastwood, formerly manager of the Apollo theater in Washington, D. C., previous to which time he was in charge of the Dixie theater, in that city, is now manager of the Arcade theater here. This is one of Norfolk's busiest little houses and Mr. Eastwood is well pleased with his new surroundings.

IN TORONTO, CANADA.

W. J. Kraft Back in Canada.

Toronto, Ont.—A cameraman whom everybody has welcomed back to Toronto is W. J. Kraft, who has returned to his old love, the Pathescope of Canada, Ltd.

Scandal Mongers Light on Films

Canadian Papers Look Around for Moral Uplift Topics and Discover Films—Find Readers Who Have Never Seen a Film and Are Horrified at Their Depravity —Wave of Discussion Seems to Be Rising.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, E., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO.—A matter of some moment to both exchanges and exhibitors in Canada is the fact that a number of daily newspapers are now devoting considerable space to a "discussion" of moving pictures. The majority of the provinces have gone dry since the start of the European war and now the daily "rags," including a Government organ here and there, have apparently decided to divert the attention of alleged reformers to pictures. The Toronto Daily News has made a sudden attack upon the industry in which the sweeping statement is made that not six per cent of all moving pictures are any good. Specific criticism was made of one photodrama and it was not till after the publication of the first article that the discovery was made that the author of the story was Sir Gilbert Parker.

One so-called local purist, Rev. T. T. Shields of Jarvis Street Baptist Church, congratulated the paper for the stand it had taken. He declared that moving pictures constitute a serious menace and that there is need for a thorough housecleaning among the theaters. He followed this up, however, with the declaration: "As I do not visit the movies to any extent, I have little first hand knowledge of them."

In a public statement an unnamed member of the Ontario Board of Censors declared that Ontario is getting cleaner films than almost any state in the Union or any Province in the Dominion. "What constitutes an objectionable film is a matter of personal opinion," said the censor, who added that the board cuts all crime and immorality, while improperly clad women cannot be shown. About five per cent of all films are condemned in their entirety by the Ontario Board.

Exchange managers believe that the moving picture industry will receive more legislative attention now that liquor prohibition measures have been effected.

A Beautifier of Theaters.

Toronto, Ont.—A member of the local moving picture industry who appears to be much in demand is Bill Dineen, who has been managing the Palace theater at Angus, Ontario, for R. S. Marvin all summer. Dineen has become renowned as a decorating designer and a number of theaters have been seeking his services in order to beautify both interiors and exteriors. Recently he built a highly ornate frame for the screen in the Family theater, Toronto. This is a small suburban house but the decoration is considered a work of art. Dineen has built the stage settings for the Strand theater, Toronto, for a number of years. He delights in transforming odd corners of a theater into attractive little nooks.

Manager J. Travis Wins Compliment.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager J. Travis of the Toronto branch of the Specialty Film Import Company, representing Pathe, has been congratulated by L. E. Ouimet of Montreal, general manager of the Canadian company, upon the manner in which his office has been operated and the business secured in the Toronto territory since the adoption of an inter-branch rivalry plan. All branches in Canada were recently placed on a percentage basis with regard to operating cost in ratio to volume of business secured. In comparison with all other Canadian branches of the Pathe, the Toronto office stands as a one hundred per cent unit, which means that local expenses have been lowest in proportion with old business maintained and new clients secured. The figures show that the Toronto Pathe branch has even exceeding the standard which was set for it—hence the fine words from the head office in Montreal.

When "The Shielding Shadow," the new serial from Pathe, is released in Toronto in November, Grace Darmond will be present in person for introduction to local moving picture devotees for the simple reason that Miss Darmond is a favored daughter of Toronto. Her folks live on Dovercourt Road, this city. The release date has not yet been fixed.

Premier of "Self Defense."

Toronto, Ont.—The Canadian-made photoplay feature, "Self Defense," was given its premier presentation at the Strand theater, Toronto, during the week of September 25, when large crowds were attracted by the fact that the picture depicted the invasion of Canadian shores by a great German army. Fully 25,000 Canadian troops, who were in training at both Toronto and London, Ontario, are employed in some of the scenes, while a strange fact is that real German soldiers appear in the supposed act of invasion. This arrangement is secured through the inclusion in the nine reels of various scenes clipped from Durborough's views of actual fighting on the German Eastern front in the summer of 1915. H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, governor-general of Canada, appears in his own role in several scenes when he is supposed to confer with high Canadian officers. In some ways this picture parallels "The Battle Cry of Peace," but it is of direct interest to Canadian people. "Self Defense" is the most pretentious photoplay yet brought out in Canada by Canadians and is an evidence of the film development in the Dominion. The feature has faults and it could be reduced by a thousand feet or two.

Mutual Establishes Headquarters.

Toronto, Ont.—Formal announcement has been made by Manager Barrett of the Toronto Mutual office that the headquarters of the Mutual Film Corporation of Canada, Ltd., have been established at 71 Adelaide street west, Toronto, and that the local branch will henceforth be under the same roof with the head office at this address. The main floor of the building has been taken over by the Mutual and one of the new features is a private projection theater—the second of its kind in Toronto. The former office of the Mutual here was at 15 Wilton avenue, which has been taken over, it is announced, by D. Cooper, who now represents the K-E-S-E.

The general manager of the Canadian Mutual is C. B. Price, who returned recently from a business trip across the country when he brought about important changes in one or two branch offices.

Bill Bach Sees Prosperity.

Toronto, Ont.—"This is a remarkable fall," says Bill Bach, advertising manager for the Canadian Universal, with regard to the state of the film business in Canada at present. "Everybody in the industry is going to have a good season, I believe." It does not require words from Bill's lips to show that practically all theaters in Toronto, at any rate, are not finding the hinges on front doors growing rusty.

Kentucky Building Code Bulletins

State Fire Marshal Pannell Issues a Series of Pamphlets Giving Building Requirements for Picture Theaters—Specifications for Fire Escapes, Fireproof Operating Rooms, etc., in Accordance With New Code.

From Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—State Fire Marshall T. B. Pannell, of Frankfort, Ky., who a short time ago was reported to be working out regulations for the operation of moving picture theaters, and who later arranged for a hearing at Frankfort to receive any protests which might be lodged against these regulations, has had printed in pamphlet form a series of regulations for moving picture houses and other theaters.

Bulletin No. 7 gives specifications for the construction of fire escapes on all opera houses, theaters, etc., while Bulletin No. 1 outlines how such houses should be kept up, detailing the number of fire extinguishers to be used, exits, etc., and Bulletin No. 6 relates to the construction of fireproof enclosures for all motion picture machines, stereopticon machines, etc. The later bulletin is full of interesting material. All of the regulations are in accordance with the new fire insurance code enacted at the last meeting of the Kentucky legislature, and empowering the state insurance board and state fire marshal to issue such regulations. While compliance with the law may be a little hard for the small town operator, the large exhibitors claim that the law is just.

RICHMOND, KY., THEATERS UNITE

The Alhambra Becomes Afternoon House, the Grand an Evening House.

Lexington, Ky.—It was announced here last week that the Colonial Amusement Co., of this city, which owns and operates a string of moving picture theaters in Lexington, Paris, Maysville and Richmond, Ky., has just taken over the Grand theater at Richmond, Ky., and consolidated it with the Alhambra, the rival show house of Richmond.

The deal was made through Manager W. P. Baxter, of the Grand, who sold his interest to the Lexington company with which concern he became connected. The deal eliminates all competition in Richmond, and will give the Richmond the advantage of the best service booked by John B. Elliott, of Lexington, general manager of the company.

Under the new arrangement the Alhambra will be operated in the afternoons, while the shows will be transferred to the Grand at night, the same pictures being shown at both houses. Miss Lillian Ward will manage both houses, assisted by Mr. Baxter. Plans have been made for installation of two new machines, a new screen, and new seats at the Grand. The Alhambra was recently overhauled.

Two Paducah Houses Open.

Paducah, Ky.—Two theaters have been opened here since the close of September, the Arcade theater and the Star theater, simultaneously on October 1. The Star has been remodeled throughout and opened under the management of Desberger Brothers, well known operators of western Kentucky. The Arcade theater is under the active management of E. Douglas Bagby, one of the incorporators of the new Arcade Theater Co. Capital $5,000. The other incorporators are Lawrence Dallam and E. Douglas Bagby.

Chestnut Street Amusement Officers.

Louisville, Ky.—The Chestnut Street Amusement Co., incorporated to operate the Masonic as a moving picture house, has a capital of $5,000, divided into 500 shares of the par value of $10. The debt limit is placed at $10,000, and the following incorporators are named: H. R. Boone, A. C. Humphreys and Gilbert Burnett. It was recently stated in the Moving Picture World that Mr. Burnett was preparing to reopen the house which has been dark since McRae Brothers gave it up last spring.

Sugg Theater to Be Picture House.

Scottsville, Ky.—The old Sugg theater is shortly to be opened as a moving picture house under the management of C. W. Simmons, of Monticello, Ky.

Kentucky Personal Notes.

Louisville.—L. J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic theater, left on Sunday, October 1, for a ten-day business trip to New York.

Louisville.—Joe Hebert, formerly manager of the old Warner office, of Louisville, paid a visit to the city recently as representative of the new Unicorn office at Indianapolis.

Louisville.—C. W. Simon, of Spottsville, Ky., was in the city recently calling on the exchanges relative to securing service for a new theater which he is opening.

Louisville.—J. C. Sills, of Hardinsburg, Ky., was a recent visitor here.

Louisville.—The management of Macauley's theater is planning to have the building ready to open on October 16.

A Tobacco Growing Film.

Louisville, Ky.—The Axton-Fisher Tobacco Co., of this city, has had a two-reel film made showing various methods of growing tobacco in the state and also manufacturing the product into choice smoking tobacco. The film was recently exhibited for several days at the Walnut theater, and will be shown through the city and in many of the towns out in the state.

A Film for Dyers and Cleaners.

Louisville, Ky.—The Kentucky Feature Film Co., of Louisville, is making two 400-foot pictures for the National Association of Dyers and Cleaners for the purpose of advertising to the public of America and abroad how garments are cleaned in a modern plant, and showing the old style methods of cleaning in open tubs.

Mark Gates Leaves the Circle.

Man Who Promoted Building of New Theater to Build Others.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Mark M. Gates, who interested and brought together the men who have just built the Circle theater, and who has been its manager during the construction period and since its opening, will sever his connections with the Circle soon to enter the theatrical promotion business. Mr. Gates will remain at the Circle, however, until after a new manager has taken charge and become familiar with the details of the house.

The success of the Circle theater has convinced Mr. Gates of the opportunities existing in other cities for similar houses, and has caused him to determine to take up this line of work. Mr. Gates says he has propositions pending for the organization of companies in several large cities. Before his connection with the Circle theater, Mr. Gates was treasurer of the Murat theater for three years. Prior to that time he was associated with the Shuberts in their theaters in Rochester, Utica and Syracuse, N. Y., and Springfield, Mass. His successor at the Circle is S. B. McCormick of Denver.

Gattie Rosenbaum Buys Theater.

Fort Wayne, Ind.—The Empress theater, corner of Wayne and Clinton streets, has been sold by Gattie Rosenbaum, of Kalamazoo, who held virtually all of the stock in the operating company, to a syndicate of Boston theatrical men headed by William Oakley. The house will be renovated and refurnished throughout, and then will be opened for motion pictures. The Empress has been closed all season after several years of operation, in which it served as a vaudeville and motion picture house.

Temple Theater to Be Larger.

Mishawaka, Ind.—Plans are being perfected for the enlargement of the Temple theater, located at Main street and Lincoln Way, on the lower floor of the Masonic temple block. The room adjoining the theater, now occupied by the Western Union Telegraph offices, has been leased and will be added to the theater. When the new improvements are completed the Temple will be large enough to accommodate approximately 800 people.

Coatesville New House Ready.

Coatesville, Ind.—W. V. Rollings, who is erecting a new motion picture theater in Coatesville, hopes to have the house completed in a week or so. Mr. Rollings has one of the most up-to-date motion picture theaters in Central Indiana.

Portland Royal Sold.

Portland, Ind.—D. A. Hoover, who has conducted a meat market in Portland for the last few years, has purchased the Royal theater, a motion picture house in West Main street, in that city. The place is to be remodeled and redecorated, Mr. Hoover says.

Robert Codd to Manage the Jefferson.

Goshen, Ind.—Robert Codd, of South Bend, Ind., has been named as the manager of the Jefferson theater, in Goshen, to succeed John C. Reynolds, who will return to his home in South Bend. Mr. Codd had conducted a general booking agency for motion picture houses throughout the northern part of the state. He will take up his new duties next week.

Charles Walker Out of the Plymouth.

Rochester, Ind.—Charles Walker, of Plymouth, has sold his interest in the Gem theater, at Rochester, to his son, Alonzo Walker, under whose management the house has been run.

Exhibitors and the County Fair.

ADRIAN, Mich.—The exhibitor who identifies himself with every sort of local enterprise and does not take it for granted that everybody knows all about his show, generally wins out. For instance, the New Family and Garden theaters did not class the county fair here as opposition. They had a booth in the Merchant's building tastily decorated and equipped with a projecting machine which gave a real show on a daylight screen.

Fined for Crowding Aisles.

Petoskey, Mich.—H. C. Sorden, manager of the Temple theater, was fined $10 for allowing patrons to stand in the aisles. He pleaded guilty.

Looking for Site for Theater.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The Association of Commerce has received overtures from L. Grandin Grossman, an attorney of Washington, D. C., who appears as seeking a location for a motion picture producing plant.

Michigan Theaters and Changes.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—C. W. Brown is now manager of the Strand theater succeeding Tom Parker Jukim, who has resigned to return to the newspaper business.

Flint, Mich.—Harold Weiss has been placed in charge of the Garden theater here, succeeding Joseph Friedman, who was transferred by the Butterfield interests to Saginaw, where he will have charge of the Strand and Bijou theaters, both moving picture houses. He will also do the booking for the Garden here.

Monroe, Mich.—Charles Kirby has purchased a site at 25 Front street and contemplates the erection of a building costing $30,000, a portion of which will be used as a moving picture theater.

Ishpeming, Mich.—Manager Ed J. Butler, who has opened the Butler theater with nightly and Saturday and holiday matinee performances, will show the same pictures at the Ishpeming and Butler theaters.

Calumet, Mich.—The Calumet theater has engaged the five-piece Calumet & Hecla orchestra to furnish musical accompaniment for the photoplays.

Open Booking and Programs

World's Detroit Representative Writes His Weekly Letter from the Home Office This Week—Has Been Talking to Eastern Exhibitors and Finds the Same Problems Here As at Home—A Few Detroit Items.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, Mich.—My article this week is being written at the New York office of the Moving Picture World. In our rounds among the various New York offices of the producing companies as well as many of the leading theaters, we heard many splendid complimentary remarks about Detroit, its theaters, and its progressiveness. We also find that the same problems confronting Detroit exhibitors are the problems of eastern exhibitors. We refer to the question of open booking, over-production, too many exchanges, and the delivery of film. There are so many angles to these problems that it is almost impossible to get two people to express themselves alike. But then every line of business has its evils, its problems, and its good points. We should all be optimistic, have patience, and realize that in time these matters will adjust themselves to a sound and practical basis. Meanwhile, let every exhibitor give the best attractions he can for the money and "Smile."

On Open Booking.

On the question of "open booking" we want to reiterate what we said once before after talking with many exhibitors in and out of Detroit—if you feel that you must have open dates, book four or five days of program-booking—get the best you can—and book open the rest of the week. In this way you will be taken care of on any special features that you may want in your house. As far as taking the notable stars out of the regular program pictures, this is not entirely the fault of the producers. Remember that many exhibitors were not willing to pay a slight increase for these stars when on the regulas program, and in order for the producer to pay for the increased cost of productions in which these stars appear, it was almost necessary that they put them out as specials or take a chance on losing them entirely.

Two Theaters Adopt 10-Cent Policy.

Detroit, Mich.—The Princess and the Woodward theaters, Woodward avenue, Detroit, have adopted a regular policy of ten cents for all seats. Heretofore five cents was charged for certain pictures and during certain hours. There are very few five cent theaters still remaining in Detroit, especially in the downtown section.

Monitor Film Studios in Grand Rapids.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—L. G. Grossman, of Washington, D. C., attorney for the Monitor Film Manufacturing Corporation of New York, announces that it is the intention of his concern to open a studio in Grand Rapids in the near future, believing that the western part of Michigan offers splendid possibilities for the making of pictures. Frank P. Donovan is general director of the Monitor company.

J. E. Powers Managing the Isis.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—J. E. Powers is manager of the Isis theater in Grand Rapids, Mich., recently taken over by Harry I. Garson of Detroit. It opened Oct 8th.

New House in Whitehall.

Whitehall, Mich.—The opening of Whitehall's newest theater, seating 500 people, took place Sept. 27th. J. J. Nufer is manager.

Detroit Men in Executive Jobs.

Detroit, Mich.—When D. Leo Denison, exchange manager for the Paramount Pictures Corporation in the middle west, was in Detroit recently he made an announcement which is of special interest to Michigan exhibitors insofar as it concerns former Michigan men—that Harry W. Irons had been appointed manager of the Cleveland office, Neil Kingsley, manager of the Pittsburg office, and J. O. Brookes, manager of the Detroit office.

Geo. Barton at the Empire.

Detroit, Mich.—George Barton has been appointed assistant manager of the Empire theater, 199 Woodward avenue, Detroit. He was formerly with the Auditorium Amusement Corporation, and managed the Saratoga theater in Brooklyn, N. Y. He was also for some years on the vaudeville stage.

Exchanges to Ask Pay in Advance.

Detroit, Mich.—The Detroit exchanges of the General, Mutual and Universal film companies, inaugurate a new policy on October 17th that requires exhibitors to pay for their service one week in advance. These exchanges also announce that on and after that date one and three sheets will be five cents, if returned, and 10 cents if not returned; also that six sheets will be 10 cts., unmounted, and need not be returned.

Aurora Alderman Claims Strand Not Safe

Manager Jules Ruben Offers to Burn Films in His Operating Booth to Show Its Safety—New Building Ordinance Passed.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

AURORA, Ill.—Charges that the Strand theater was unsafe were met by Jules J. Ruben, treasurer of the Aurora Theaters company with a statement that he would take a committee of Aurorans to the theater and burn any number of reels of film in the operating room in order to demonstrate that there was absolutely no danger. The charge was made by an alderman in his advocacy, before the city council, of the passage of a "safety first" ordinance for moving picture theaters. The installation of a ventilating flue is one of the principal points in controversy. The ordinance has been passed, but it is said photoplay men had been given to understand that existing houses would not be required to make changes on purely technical grounds so long as their houses met the approval of the underwriters. The Aurora, which seats 1,200, has twelve exits all plainly marked and is deemed much more safe than churches and other places of public gathering, which seat 1,000 or more and have only two exits.

Rockford Votes Want Sunday Shows.

Rockford, Ill.—Sunday moving picture shows in Rockford will not be disturbed in the remodification of the city laws, according to information. Some of the city councilmen are opposed to Sunday amusements of all kinds, but it is said there is not enough strength to pass a measure prohibiting the seventh day shows and in addition a referendum vote of the citizens of Rockford has decreed that a majority of the voters want their amusement.

Manager Burkitt's New Electric Sign.

Morrison, Ill.—Manager L. J. Burkitt, of the Lyric, has installed a handsome T-shaped electric sign, using 164 lights, which he designed and constructed. It has a value of about $500. The top of the T is twelve feet long. Thirty-eight lights make a beading around the words "Quality Photoplays." Only five of these lights are on at a time, making a "chaser" around the sign. Each section of this "chaser" operates at the rate of once a second. The word "Lyric" in the stem is first spelled out, letter by letter, then off and then the whole name comes on. Both the "chaser" and the "flasher" were constructed by H. W. Burkitt, operator. The Lyric is using a nice little vest-pocket program with heart-to-heart talks headed "Whispers," by Manager Burkitt.

New Incorporations.

Springfield, Ill.—Secretary of State Louis G. Stevenson has issued a charter to the Lane Court Theater Company of Chicago, which is authorized to do business with capital stock of $24,000. The incorporators are Nathan Ascher, Max Ascher and Lewis F. Jacobson.

The Grand Boulevard Theater Company of Chicago has increased its capital stock from $20,000 to $40,000.

Illinois Theater Changes.

Oneida, Ill.—The Park theater opened September 27 with the "Eternal City." The music is furnished by a five piece orchestra.

Virginia, Ill.—The Tureman opera house which has been under the management of Charles Potter and Thomas Kinney is now under the management of Charles McDaniels.

Forest City, Ill.—S. E. Onstot has purchased a projection machine and started a moving picture show here.

Havana, Ill.—Consolidation of the local moving picture theaters has been effected by the sale of the Castle theater, which has been owned by Dick Diamond, to Dr. L. G. Pullen, D. W. Wright and Alfred Dehm, proprietors of the Lawford theater. There will be no change in the policy of the Castle to prevent conflicting future attractions.

New Orleans Electra Passes Out

City's First Motion Picture Theater Makes Room for Modern Building—Opened by the Pearces in 1905 When Fichtenberg Was Running a Penny Arcade—Pearce Interests Have Increased Mightily.

By Our New Orleans Special Correspondent.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—With the close of September will pass the first motion picture house ever established in New Orleans. It is the Electra, on Canal street, and it has been in operation more than twelve years. Behind the passage of this landmark in the progress of a wonderful business is a story not without its sentiment.

In the early days, J. Eugene Pearce drifted into New Orleans feeling at times, when he faced the situation, something like apprehension and cold chills that reached nearly to his feet. In his pocket rested the combined working capital of the Pearce family. What had but recently been a comfortable fortune had been made unavailable for spending by reason of its being oil-soaked at Beaumont; hence his failure to respond to the genial climate. He had $150 and spent $150 in scouting toward New Orleans. The world looked dark. If he returned home, he would be broke. If he took the lone chance, he might have to walk home, but he would not have to start so soon.

Herman Fichtenberg had got about a lap ahead of immediate competitors in the picture game by starting a penny arcade, but Pearce's faith was pinned to pictures. He watched Fichtenberg buying his own pennies and feeding them to his own machines to stimulate business, and he noted that Herman was only off the job long enough to eat. There were not many banquets in the business in those days.

Then 'Gene made the plunge. He started the Electra. Those were anxious times, but the Electra grew and Fichtenberg quit falling for his own show. Today the Pearces have a fine string of motion picture theaters and other amusement enterprises, while if Dunn and Bradstreet would tell all they know they would establish Fichtenberg as half a millionaire at least. It is not surprising, therefore, that the passing of the little dingy Electra to make room for a modern business building should be attended with the revival of memories that are not all somber.

Two New Downtown Ventures.

New Orleans, La.—Sunday, September 24, marked the opening of two new combination motion picture and vaudeville theaters in the down town district. The Lafayette, a standard theater that has been closed for two seasons, has been renovated and put in good condition and is making a bid for public favor under the management of the Southwestern managers' association with Charles E. Hodkins in immediate charge. The film feature for the week was "Sherlock Holmes," the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay production, and the business was good. The Columbia theater, under the direction of Ernst Boehringer, has been practically rebuilt and made attractive with a marble entrance. It is the only popular price motion picture and vaudeville house on Canal street. It opened to packed houses and appears to be gaining popular favor. Triangle feature plays are run in this house.

Regular Children's Matinees.

New Orleans, La.—After several sporadic attempts during the past two years, the institution of regular Saturday children's photoplay matinees has been accomplished and there is every indication that they will steadily graw in popularity. The recent movement is fostered by the Federated Clubs of the city with Mrs. J. S. Lansing at the head of a competent committee in charge of the details of the work. Mrs. Lansing has gone in for service instead of censorship, which was the rock upon which former efforts in this line split, and she has surprised her associates by finding a very creditable number of suitable films. The first children's show was given at the Tudor theater three weeks ago and instantly made a popular appeal. It is now a regular Saturday feature at this house, and the movement has spread to the suburban houses, where exhibitors and patrons are enthusiastic in their efforts to promote the entertainment and instruction of the little folks by means of the films.

Heard on Film Row.

New Orleans, La.—T. O. Tuttle, the new manager of the General Film Exchange, sent here to succeed Manager Morrow, who has gone to New York, is getting the business of his office well in hand, and the touch of his methods is becoming apparent.

New Orleans, La.—General Manager C. E. Tandy, of the Southern Paramount Pictures Corporation, stopped off a few days the first of the week while on a trip from Atlanta to Dallas, Texas.

New Orleans, La.—Special Representative Joseph S. Partridge of the Greater Vitagraph Company was here two or three days this week in conference with Manager Evans of the local exchange, and decision was made to increase the boundaries of the New Orleans territory and to make decided increases in the offices.

Natchez, La.—E. M. Clarke, manager of the Baker Grand theater at Natchez, has arranged for an entire feature program at his completely remodeled theater.

New Orleans, La.—J. Eugene Pearce, resident manager of the Josiah Pearce Amusement Syndicate, has returned from New York and Chicago, which visits were made subsequent to a summons to the bedside of his sick mother.

New Orleans, La.—Manager Ernst Boehringer of the newly-formed Boehringer Amusement Company, has just returned from New York, where he completed minor details in connection with the building of the new Liberty theater, work upon which is to commence on October 1.

New Orleans, La.—Arthur Lucas, manager of Triangle Film Company exchanges, has been in the city for a few days and expressed satisfaction at the condition in which he found local business.

Broken Bow's Handsome New Theater Ready.

BROKEN BOW, Neb.—Horace Kennedy has closed the old Lyric theater and removed to the handsome new structure which recently was erected for him. He plans to use vaudeville in connection with the moving picture program "The Birth of a Nation" has been booked for November 3.

Nebraska Business Notes.

Beatrice, Neb.—The Lyric theater has swung into its fall business and is now open every evening. One of Manager Hal Kelly's treats for his patrons was a local romance, "What Happened to Agnes." J. E. Burgert, who filmed the piece, stayed over and made some films of the Gage county fair for the Lyric.

Omaha, Neb.—Marguerite Clark in "Silks and Satins" was a film that patrons of the Hipp theater wanted returned.

Use of Instructive Film in Iowa Spreads.

Ames, Ia.—Increased interest in educational films in Iowa is shown by the fact that the engineering extension department at the Iowa State College here has booked service for seventy-five institutions as compared with thirty-three last year. The school now has more than a hundred different programs available. Circulars are being sent out to all sorts of educational institutions, including Y. M. C. A. organizations, asking if they will furnish a machine if the state school furnishes the film.

Iowa Theaters and Changes.

Wellman, Ia.—C. H. Han has purchased the interest of F. C. Schroeder in the Majestic theater.

Bellevue, Ia.—J. R. Collins, has leased the moving picture theater which will be a part of the building which the Bittner Lumber company is erecting on Front street.

Clarinda, Ia.—The Bon Ton theater has closed because of lack of business.

Centerville, Ia.—Thomas Swearingen has sold a half interest in the Drake avenue theater to Shelburn Fischer.

Early, Ia.—The Opera House here was destroyed by fire.

Forest City, Ia.—W. O. Howard has sold his moving picture theater here and has moved to Armstrong, where he has purchased the Armstrong Journal.

Ute, Ia.—Albert Lafeentz will erect a brick moving picture theater.

Clarinda, Ia.—H. M. Andrews and H. C. Birch have sold the Orpheum theater to J. W. Burch, of Eliston. Carl Hamilton is managing it for the new owner.

Reinbeck, Ia.—Manager Sperbeck sold the Princess theater to C. E. Arns.

Corning, Ia.—Peregrine brothers sold the Lyric theater to B. J. Buffington, of Boone, Ia.

Dakota Theater Notes.

Mandan, N. D.—The Grand theater has been closed. Shows will be given at the Rex until the new Mandan theater is opened.

Minto, N. D.—Harry Walker has opened the Rex theater here.

Devil's Lake, N. D.—Herman Miller has sold his interest in the Lyric theater to H. V. Currie, who now is sole owner.

Elkton, S. D.—A. Rohmberg has purchased the Scenic theater from George Weicks.

Cando, N. D.—Roy Heckman has sold his interest in the Rex theater to N. M. Boemann.

In Atlanta Last Week

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga., Special Correspondent.

G. E. Schmidt Managing Alamo No. 2.

ATLANTA, Ga.—G. E. Schmidt, widely known and universally popular in southern theatrical circles, has taken over the managership of the Alamo Number Two theater, Monday, October 2.

Mr. Schmidt comes to Atlanta from South Carolina, where he has managed theaters in several cities. He has had long expereince in theatrical matters and was one of the first theatrical men in the south to become identified with the motion pictures.

Ted Hardcastle Resigns from Kleine.

"Ted" Hardcastle, the popular theatrical man of this city, who for the past three months has been manager of the local branch of the Kleine office and of the Piedmont theater, has announced his withdrawal from the Kleine establishment to devote all his time to the Piedmont.

Mr. Hardcastle is one of the best known men in the film industry in Atlanta, and it is with regret that his fellow-managers of the production end see him go over to vaudeville. He has not gone entirely out of the field, however, for his house will continue its policy of showing pictures from 11 a. m. until 11 p. m., except when the vaudeville is in progress.

Benefit at the Grand Theater.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Grand was open Sunday under the auspices of the scholarship committee of the Southern Mountain Educational Association for the education of mountain children. The Fox Film corporation donated a six-act picture featuring Theda Bara in the "Two Orphans." No people are more in need of help and enlightenment than our own southern highlanders. No admission, but a free will offering.

Atlanta Business and Personal Notes.

R. M. Savini, president of the Unity Film Corporation of Atlanta, is on a trip to the branch offices of that concern in New Orleans and Memphis.

George Campbell, manager of the Bonita theater, Atlanta, who has been very ill for the past three weeks, is about recovered. Mr. Campbell suffered a breakdown three weeks ago.

Harry K. Lucas, president of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company, has just returned from a business trip to Cleveland and Cincinnati, Ohio.

Manager Kessnich, of the Mutual Film Company, has returned from a successful trip in Georgia, in the interest of "Purity."

Harry Goldberg, who has been manager of the Criterion since it opened, and who has made a splendid record in that capacity, has tendered his resignation to the Samuels interests, to take effect as soon as his successor can be named.

Harry Skelton, of Atlanta, has been appointed manager of the Elite Theater, Cedartown, Ga.

Strand Under New Control

Nashville's Big Downtown Theater Taken Over by Company Headed by J. H. Bradford—Roy Sheldon, Former Owner, Retires from Theatrical Business—House Will Be Under Personal Management of Carson Bradford.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Following closely upon the local deal whereby the Crescent Amusement Company took over the Rex, Crystal and Knickerbocker theaters, comes the announcement that Roy Shelton, for a number of years actively connected with the Strand theater, has retired from the theater business. Mr. Shelton recently acquired full control of the Strand by taking over the interest of W. H. Wassman. The theater began business under the Dixie Amusement Company, with H. M. Waddle as president. But on April 1, 1916, the company was reorganized as the Wasshelton Operating Company, and Mr. Shelton was made president and manager. Under the new organization the company will be known as the Peerless Amusement Company, with J. H. Bradford as president.

Active management of the Strand has been assumed by Carson Bradford, a Nashville theater man. Mr. Bradford has been operating the Belmont theater, the largest suburban house in the city, also the Empress, Twelfth and Woodland, the first erected outside the central district. He is treasurer and manager of the Peerless company and will continue to operate his suburban houses in addition to the Strand. An elaborate booking schedule was recently mapped out for the current season, which includes the entire output of the Fox and Metro studios. The old policy of offering second run subjects which have appeared at the Knickerbocker has been discontinued, and the Strand, always in the front rank from a standpoint of popularity, bids fair to even surpass its former good record.

Majestic Not "Unfair."

Knoxville, Tenn.—Subsequent to the strike difficulties at the Majestic theater Manager Haug drew up and published in the Knoxville press the following announcement, which appears to obliterate this house from the responsibility of bringing on the recent operators' strike:

"To the Moving Picture Public: We wish to make clear the attitude of the Majestic theater in the strike now in effect among the motion picture operators of that picture playhouse. This strike was called not on account of any grievance the operators had against the management of the Majestic theater, not on account of a demand for higher wages or better hours (all these conditions being thoroughly in accord with their expressed wishes), but it was called in sympathy with the operators now on strike at a picture playhouse in Nashville, Tenn. With this as their reason the operators of the Majestic have declared a strike, and placed pickets in front of the theater to proclaim to the public that this theater is 'unfair to organized labor.' The Majestic is continuing its daily programs and wishes to ask all its former patrons and the moving picture public to show, by their continued attendance, their belief that instead of the Majestic being unfair to organized labor, the opposite is true.

"The Majestic Theater,
"C. D. HAUG, Manager."

So far as the Nashville situation is concerned, it would appear that matters have gone as far as possible, from the strikers' standpoint. The Crescent Amusement Company will remain firm, come what may, and suffers no ill effects from the walkout of a year ago.

Hartman Reopens the Lincoln.

Nashville, Tenn.—After an idle summer the Lincoln has again been placed in operation by Manager Wm. S. Hartman. The house has been renovated throughout and operates on a 10, 15, 25 and 50 cent scale for colored people exclusively. Pictures and vaudeville comprise the program.

Tennessee Film Topics.

Chattanooga.—Messrs. R. M. Watkins and A. S. Dickinson, of the Southern Metro, were in New York recently, attending a meeting of the Metro forces.

Chattanooga.—Manager Cleveland, of the Lyric Show Company, paid a visit to Chattanooga exchanges last week and expressed himself as decidedly optimistic over the fall and winter business outlook.

Chattanooga.—Messrs. Mudd & Colley, of Birmingham, were in the city last week. They contemplate opening a very large and handsome photoplay house there in the near future for colored patronage.

Chattanooga.—Mr. Hickson, of the firm of Hickson & Whitener, Miami, Fla., spent several days in the city looking after bookings. This company controls three of the large houses in Miami, and reports business brisk.

Chattanooga.—C. E. Buchanan, Atlanta representative of Metro, spent two days with the local office last week going over the season's plans. Karl A. Bugbee, New Orleans manager, was also in the city.

Memphis.—Tony Cudekum, Nashville picture magnate, was in the city a couple of days and visited a number of local film men.

Birmingham's Sunday Shows

Picture Men of the City Fighting the Proposal of the Pastors' Union and Church Workers to Hold a Referendum Election on Closing of the Sunday Shows—Will Appeal to the Superior Court for a Permanent Injunction.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—A temporary injunction given to picture men of the city restraining the Election Commission from holding a referendum election on the subject of Sunday shows has been dissolved by Judge Miller of the City Court in a decision handed down on September 28. Representatives of the Pastors' Union of Birmingham and individual church workers, of whom 1,700 signed the petition, asked for a referendum to close the shows. According to Felix Blackburn, attorney representing the Birmingham moving picture men, an appeal from the decision will be taken, and an effort will be made to have the case brought up at the November term of the Supreme Court.

In the minds of the picture men it is not believed that the decision of Judge Miller will have an immediate effect upon the Birmingham photoplay houses remaining open on Sundays, and that several months will necessarily be required before anything radical develops along this line, owing to the length of time required to properly file an appeal with the Supreme Court. For that reason it also seem probable that the champions of the Sunday-closing movement will hold back further action in the referendum case until the final decision of the Supreme Court is rendered.

The decision of Judge Miller involved a discussion as to the constitutionality of the initiative and referendum sections of the Five Commissioner Bill, as enacted at the last session of the Alabama legislature. The fact that the judge held the initiative and referendum clauses of the City Commission Bill to be constitutional occasioned considerable surprise among members of the local bar, as City Attorney M. Ullman had previously ruled these sections to be unconstitutional.

The petitioners brought up a proposed ordinance prohibiting Sunday moving pictures, and sought a referendum election after the City Commission had refused to pass the ordinance. The picture men then filed request for a temporary restraining injunction against the referendum election, which was granted by Judge Miller, being later dissolved by him when he rendered his decision.

Rose & Co. Open Jacksonville House.

Jacksonville, Fla.—The firm of Rose & Co. has just opened a luxurious theater in Jacksonville, Fla., for negro patronage. This is one of the finest houses of its kind in the entire South, and includes among its conveniences such modern additions as a soda fountain, check room, etc. The house will be known as the Rose theater, and the management, in keeping with Mr. Rose's well-established policy of using the best of everything, is maintaining one of the finest programs available.

Big Hope Crop in St. Louis

World Representative Has Been Among the Harvesters Along Film Row Gleaning Sunshine—Exchangemen Look Up from Stacks of New Business and Say That Things are Booming—Plenty of Exchanges, too.

By A. H. Giebler, 236 Vanol Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—We have been out harvesting this week, garnering the opinions of the different exchange managers as to the possibilities of fall and winter business.

"Will this year be as good as last?" we asked here. "Can you possibly keep the wolf from the door during the cold weather that is coming?" we questioned there; and here and there, and everywhere, we found the finest crop of hope and optimism. Indeed, Film Row and the adjacent territory where exchanges are located is as full of enthusiasm as the proverbial cocktail is full of nails.

Dustin Says "Bully."

L. W. Dustin was the first manager we dragged from his desk where he was up to his eyes in work. "Business?" said Dustin. "Bully! The outlook fine. Never better! Our serials are booming. Myra is still a healthy child; Beatrice Fairfax is winning friends everywhere, and Jaffery is one of the best booking bets we have had in a long time. Go on down the street and ask the other film bosses. They'll all tell you that the fall and winter prospects were never better."

Fegan Isn't Going to Stop.

The next other boy we talked to was F. J. Fegan of the L. C. E. exchange, which is just next door to Dustin's place. Fegan is full of golden prophecies for the future. "Why shouldn't we be?" he asked. "Look at what we have done, and what we are going to do. We're not going to stop at that are we? We are not!"

Looks Bright to Edwards.

We dropped over to the Pathe plant, presided over by C. S. Edwards. Mr. Edwards had just returned from a trip to Kansas City. "From what I can see and hear and read," said Edwards, "things never looked brighter. This has been an exceptional year, if you will take into consideration the fact that it is campaign year, a season when everyone looks for stagnation in all kinds of business. Here it is within two months of election, when people are usually marking time to see how things are going to be, and yet things are not still; they are moving—there is lots of prosperity in the country, and more is coming for the fall and winter, and the Pathe office expects big things."

Going Fine for Dickson.

From, etc. we dodged the stream of automobiles that throng Locust street, and landed in the door of the Dickson Film Service, at 3217, where Robert F. does a flourishing business with regular service, features and state right propositions on the open booking system. Dickson senior was not at home, but Roy Dickson, who is assistant mogul of the place, was, and Roy said: "Yes siree, things look good here. All of our stuff is going fine. We are not a very old concern, but we are moving along, and we are getting up a full head of steam for what we expect to do this winter."

Triangle Busy Too.

Over at the triangular offices of the Triangle in the triangle-shaped Plaza building, we found Floyd Lewis not at home, but we didn't need to question the manager of this plant because the whole office assured us that business is good and the prospects even better than for the future.

Pleased at Outlook Says Barney.

Barney Rosenthal, at 2116 Locust street, where the Universal, with its big office keeps humming away all day and all night, was the next stop. Barney is one of the oldest old-timers in the business to be such a young man. He has had a world of experience in the amusement world, regular stage stuff, managing theaters, and he knows the film business from soup to nuts and back again.

"We are well pleased at the outlook," said Barney. "We are anticipating such good business that we have just finished giving the whole works a complete going-over. We have had a regular house-cleaning, fixed up our poster and advertising departments, rearranged the booking and shipping ends, and added to the supply department, and got the whole shop in ship-shape order for the business we know is coming this winter."

Paramount Is Going Big.

G. W. McKean, of the Monarch, who handles Paramount features up on the second floor of the Gayety Theater building, voiced the usual optimistic prophecy. "Paramount is going big, of course," he said, "and the future looks good—better than last year, when everybody felt bad over the poor outdoor business." Mr. McKean is another old-timer in the film game, and what he doesn't know about film conditions in the territory would make a very small book, therefore his opinion is particularly valuable.

Good Business Already Here for Mutual.

Fred Keller, of the Mutual exchange at 1311 Pine street, says: "Business is not only going to be good this fall and winter, but the good business is already here. The rush is not coming, it has come. We are making the Mutual service move right along, and it is gathering speed as the houses that have been closed all summer are opening up."

Out of Film Row, where film exchanges are as thick as bugs in a blackberry patch, the voiced enthusiasm became a chorus.

Wolfberg Says "Of Course."

At the General, H. P. Wolfberg said: "Of course things look good for this fall and winter. They not only look good, but they are good—good right now, and getting better all the time." The General exchange is issuing a neat little four-page house organ that goes out to exhibitors twice a month telling them about the merits of General stuff in general. Edgar H. Wolfberg is the editor, and he makes the sheet very snappy and up to date.

Fuller of Enthusiasm.

We got down to George W. Fuller's place. Up to this time we had not heard a single croak about bad business, or a head-shake over the prospects—and we didn't find it here. Instead, Fuller was fuller of hope and enthusiasm than any of the others. George is also a great believer in advertising, and is a great doper-ster on business-getting schemes. "Will business be good this winter?" he asked. "Sure it will. It's good right now, and getting better."

Werner Sees Admission Rise.

We moved on, or rather up, to the second floor of the Empress building, where Charles Werner dispenses Metro features and enthuses about the "Crimson Stain Mystery." "Here is a prophecy," said Werner. "In a year less than 20 per cent. of the houses in this territory will be charging fifteen cents admission. There is a tendency to get better prices everywhere. The service is costing the exhibitor more and it is pleasing the public more, and as it is getting better than ever, the public will gladly pay the increased price. That will make business better for the future, although it is good enough now. We've got no kicks coming. I've just been out on a trip through southern Illinois, and things look very fine and promising."

Rosenberg Going to Need Bigger Office.

We went on up to the third floor of the Empress building, where I. P. Rosenberg is up to his eyes in work with getting the new output of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay in shape. Rosenberg is looking for a new office, and he's going to need it, and lots of room, too, he says, judging from the way business is coming in. "I have just been down to the Mutascope theater, where I gave an advance showing of "The Country That God Forgot" and "The Return of Eve." There were a fine bunch of exhibitors and the newspaper boys and girls, and everybody was well pleased and said they were 'great' pictures."

Unicorn Forces Hard At It.

Away from here and to Mr. Samuel Werner's office, as the late Mr. Pepys would have said, but the urbane Samuel was not in. The office force was very entertaining, and not at all afraid of the work that the prospects of the big fall business would entail on them. The Unicorn not only expects to do big things, but is doing them right now.

Stahler Doping Out Copy.

Into Mr. Hatch's office, where the sign says V-L-S-E on the door and things humming away like a husking bee inside. Hatch says, and Stahler, the advertising man, also says: "It pays to advertise." Stahler had two newspaper men at his desk, and was doping out copy for both of them at the same time, while Hatch waxed eloquent on the fall and winter outlook.

Steady Business at the Economy.

And then we met Mr. Stahl, of the Economy Film Service, who has offices at 204 Empress building. The Economy people deal in state right propositions, and are doing a nice steady business, and are looking for more during the coming months.

"Say—It's Good" Says Joe Levy.

We didn't leave Joe Levy of the Fox office to the last intentionally. It was just because the Fox office is the last going west on Film Row. Mr. Levy was busy talking to an exhibitor and booking him a feature, we suspect, and answering the telephone about another feature all at the same time, but he found time to talk to us. "Is business good?" we asked. "Say—it's good!" said Joe. "We broke all records here last week, and that's a mighty fine indication." The Fox office has put on a new road man in the person of T. A. Burke, and he is stirring things up. We found Miss Julia Carson, the cashier and bookkeeper, back at her desk after a long vacation, which was spent mostly in Maine, she said.

IN WISCONSIN.

By Frank H. Madison, Midwest Correspondent.

Darwin Karr Talks in Local Theaters.

MADISON, Wis.—Darwin Karr, leading man of the Essanay Company, has been appearing in person at Wisconsin theaters, giving talks on the making of moving pictures and showing "A Fool's Gold," "The Prisoner at the Bar," and other films in which he appeared. He was at the Grand theater in Madison, the new Palace in Antigo, the Grand in Green Bay, and the Lyric in Edgerton.

Local Theater Changes.

Antigo, Wis.—George Fehring is now manager of the Antigo opera house.

Evansville, Wis.—Albert Keesey, of Beloit, has leased the Grand theater for a year from Marlin Wilder.

Mazomanie, Wis.—Paul Horwitz is the new manager of the Majestic theater, which has been closed temporarily.

Beloit, Wis.—The Majestic theater has been opened under new management. A free matinee to children under 15 years of age was given Saturday evening, September 30.

Menomonie, Wis.—The Orpheum theater, which has been dark all summer, was re-opened by Manager Pierce in "The Never Do Well."

Wisconsin Business Notes.

Madison, Wis.—According to press dispatches printed here, a Mr. Ralph A. Griffith, a special representative of the Triangle Film Corporation, was at Monroe, Wis., looking over the inducements Southern Wisconsin offered for the location of a studio.

Waupaca, Wis.—"The Battle Cry of Peace" had a good showing in Waupaca. It was at the Lyric theater in the afternoon and at the High school in the evening.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

Film Offices Move.

The E. L. K. Film Company has moved from 9 Western avenue to the Film Exchange building, Minneapolis.

The Theatre Equipment Company has arranged to move from the fourth floor to the first floor of the Film Exchange building early this week. The Theatre Equipment Company was incorporated last week for $50,000 and the Teco Products Company for $100,000.

St. Paul Notes of Interest.

The Princess theater, St. Paul, will show Fox features in the future, the Blue Mouse having gone to open booking. The New Palace, the third of the Ruben & Finkelstein theaters in St. Paul's loop district, will be opened shortly. It is expected that the vaudeville will be shifted from the Princess to the New Palace and the Princess turned into an exclusive moving picture theater.

The De Luxe Film Company staged special showings of "Purity" at the St. Paul Strand, September 30, and at the Minneapolis Lyric, October 2, for the benefit of students of the St. Paul and Minneapolis schools of art.

Harry A. Sherman has returned to Minneapolis from New York, where he opened an office to handle "The Crisis" in the East. Mr. Sherman states that the Elliott-Sherman Corporation will soon be in the front rank of film distributing and producing firms of the country if present plans carry.

S. A. Louis, of the Rialto Theater Supply Company, Minneapolis, has sold 286 Motiograph machines since January 1, 1916. Mr. Louis has disposed of nine Motiographs since September 15.

Harry Sodini, formerly with the E. L. K. Film Company, Minneapolis, has gone to St. Louis, where he expects to start a film exchange.

C. J. Ver Halen, publicity manager of the Paramount Exchange, Minneapolis, is now making trips into the territory to help exhibitors advertise their shows and to get acquainted with their work. Bert Barnett, Jr., of the Paramount Exchange, has gone to New York to spend his vacation.

Second Series of the Bowlers.

In the second series of games of the Minneapolis Film Men's Bowling League the Mutuals No. 1 beat the Mutuals No. 2 and the Unicorn-Metro quintet triumphed over Reel News.

Minneapolis Organization on Job

Exchange Managers and Exhibitors Have Meeting on Censorship—Mayor Asked to Withdraw Requests for Weekly List of Films—Meeting of the League—Compromise Reached with Operators' Local 219.

By John L. Johnston, MM Producer Exchange Manager Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Exchange managers and a committee representing the exhibitors of the city held a special meeting at the Pathe exchange September 25, in the evening, for the purpose of discussing further the anti-censorship campaign recently begun. All but three exchange managers were either present or represented and considerable business was transacted in a short time. A letter was drafted and sent to Mayor Wallace G. Nye, asking that he withdraw his request for weekly lists of films to be released in Minneapolis until the local exchanges has had opportunity to bring the matter before their parent organizations in New York and elsewhere. At this writing the Mayor had not replied to this letter, but it is expected that he will grant the exchanges thirty days.

The proposed censor board, composed of exchangemen and exhibitors, was again discussed, but not acted upon. Exhibitors and exchangemen met on September 25 at the headquarters of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest in the Bijou-Jitney theater building, and discussed various topics of interest. Thomas Furniss, Duluth, Minn., member of the executive boards of the national associations of the industry, was present and gave those present some helpful suggestions and stirred up considerable enthusiasm. The "pay in advance" system and payment of return express charges for film and favorable compromise with the operators' union were discussed.

The compromise with Local 219, Minneapolis, follows:

Contract With the Union.

Working contract I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. No. 219, Minneapolis, Minn.

Contract made this day between the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Protective Union, No. 219, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of Minneapolis, and manager of theater.

Section 2. In the event of any controversy or differnces arising between the parties of this agreement, or in the event of any operator or operators having grievances, he or they shall continue at work, and all such grievances shall be settled by representatives of the party of the first part and the party of the second part. If such controversy and grievances cannot be settled by them, then they shall be arbitrated by a third party, whom the representatives of the union and the employers may decide upon; the findings of the majority thereof shall be binding and final to both parties.

Section 3. Any manager finding his operator or operators incompent or unsatisfactory in regards to his work, will notify the business representative of this union, and a new man, satisfactory to the employer, shall be placed on the position as soon as possible. Any manager desiring to change operator or operators, must give his operator or operators one week's notice.

Section 4. No operator shall leave his position without giving his employer at least one week's notice, unless satisfactory arrangements are made with the employer. Any operator leaving his position without giving his employer one week's notice, shall be fined one week's salary, such amount to be paid to the employer affected, by the operator's local, at their first regular meeting.

Section 5. This contract can be terminated at any time by the party of the first part or party of the second part, giving two weeks' notice.

Section 6. If operators are required to carry film, the following schedule will be [illegible]

Each [illegible] charged for at the rate of fifty cents per round trip.

No operator shall carry more than ten reels of film per [illegible]

Section 7. [illegible] agree to employ only operators furnished by above said local at the following scale of wages:

Class "A"—Such as vaudeville theaters, two performances a day, $22.50.

Class "B"—Such as [illegible] theaters, from 12:00 noon or after, to 5:00 p. m., and from 7:00 p. m. or after, until 11 p. m., $22.50 per week.

Class "CC"—Such as moving picture theaters running seven nights from 7:00 p. m. or after, until 11:00 p. m., and Sunday matinee from 2:00 p. m. until 5:00 p. m., not less than $16.00 per week.

All extra matinees, other than those herein specified, running from 2:00 p. m. until 5:00 p. m., shall not be less than $2.00.

Notice.—The minimum scale recognized by this union shall be $16.00 per week.

Extra.—Fifty cents per hour for overtime, or fraction thereof, in all classes of theatres.

New Members of Association.

The exhibitors held another meeting, Monday, October 2, at noon, when the executive board of the M. P. E. A. of the N. W. held its session. Secretary William Koenig and President J. G. Gilosky, of the Northwest Association, states that the organization was never better and that new members are coming in every day. Secretary Koenig is in the midst of a big campaign to get new members into the association and he hopes to have a hundred new names on the list before November 1.

Minneapolis, Minn., [illegible] Minneapolis representative for the Selznick interests, has located offices in the Film Exchange building and [illegible] campaign to boost Clara Kimball Young's production, "The Common Law."

Minneapolis, Minn., [illegible] Minneapolis and Strand theater, St. Paul, it is understood have bid for first run on the new Mary Pickford feature, "Less Than the Dust."

Screen Club is Incorporated

Kansas City Screeners Capitalize Their Club for $2,500—Shares Have Par Value of $5—Dance Is Given in the Honor of Edith Storey, Who Visits the City—Big Movie Ball the Coming Event.

From Kansas City News Service, 206 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—At the latest meeting of the Kansas City Screen Club, September 27, it was decided to incorporate the club. Any amount of stock, from two to ten shares, will be sold each member at five dollars per share. Frank Newman, president of the club, recently made the statement that it would probably be incorporated for the amount of $2,500. The club is now making extensive preparations for the big "movie" ball, to be held sometime in November at the Convention Hall.

Another event which the club has made preparations for is the coming of Edith Storey and her mother. They will pass through Kansas City directly from St. Louis and are going to California. She will have been here before this item gets back to Kansas City.

Miss Storey appeared at several of the picture shows of the city. A dance was given at the Screen Club in her honor.

Whitney C. Young Promoted.

Kansas City, Mo.—Whitney C. Young, formerly booker for the Fox Film, has recently been promoted to road salesman, and will take up his new duties immediately. His position as booker will be filled by C. H. Canfield, who has been a clerk at the Municipal Farm for the p. five years. Mr. Canfield says that after handling prisoners for the past five years he feels competent to handle anything that may come up in the film world.

Little Universal Booster.

Kansas City, Mo.—Everybody knows "Marty" Williams, one of the real old-timers in the business. His friends will eventually, if not now, get acquainted with a new Williams coming on, who is sure to be a booster for pictures. This is Jack Perry Williams, now two years old, an ardent moving picture lover and keen on serials! They say that, anyway, because Marty is the head of the serial department of the Universal Film & Supply Co., at Kansas City. "Jack" is already an associate member of the Screen Club, and is often seen there. He is shown calling up daddy to ask if he can go to the next party.

Mrs. Grace Stites to Manage Theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—Mrs. Grace B. Stites has recently taken over the management of the Barrymore theater, 39th and Summit. Mrs. Stites leased the building from Mrs. Bertha Simons, who started the Barrymore August 25.

Cecil Summers to Manage Regent.

Kansas City, Mo.—Cecil M. Summers, formerly with the Royal theater for two years, has been made manager of the Regent theater. George I. Nimmer, formerly manager of the Regent, has gone to Los Angeles.

Universal Service Department.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Universal and Bluebird exchanges are making plans to install a sales promotion and service department which will work in co-operation with the publicity department. George H. Bowles, manager of publicity, has not been able to give the salesmen the time to teach them the new work with which they will co-operate with the publicity department. This sales promotion department will assist the salesmen throughout the country to sell their pictures and will also help the exhibitors put on their pictures.

Local Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Saphire theater broke all records September 30 and October 1, with the eighth episode of "Liberty." Incidentally this house on the same day broke all serial records for the houses of Kansas City. The "Broken Coin" was the leader for a long time, but it was left for "Liberty" in the smallest theater in the city to bring down the record crowd. On Saturday 3,439 people witnessed the picture, and when it is considered that the house seats only 130 people at a time, the natural conclusion is that the fire warden was not active—"they stood in the aisles."

Artcraft Office in Seattle

A. S. Kane Has Established Local Pickford Office at Fourth Avenue.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, Wash.—A. S. Kane, district manager for the Pacific Coast of the Mary Pickford Company, has established a Seattle office at 1214 Fourth avenue, with H. G. Rosebaum as manager. Mr. Rosebaum, who resigned the Northwest managership of Triangle to accept this position, will have in charge the booking of these pictures in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. Said Mr. Kane: "We are fairly deluged with letters addressed to this office, and some exhibitors, to make certain that their inquiries reach us without delay, have written one letter to the head office in New York, one to my headquarters in San Francisco, and one to this office.

G. A. Faris Heads Greater Vitagraph's Seattle Office.

Seattle, Wash.—H. D. Naugle, Pacific Coast division manager for The Greater Vitagraph Company, arrived the other day from San Francisco with a new manager for the Northwest, viz., G. A. Faris, former assistant branch manager of V-L-S-E in Los Angeles.

Mr. Naugle says there will be no changes in the office force.

"We are going to inaugurate a co-operative policy with exhibitors and co-operation with other exchange men. We want out-of-town exhibitors to feel free to come in and sit around as long as they like and put their feet up on the desks if they want to; in short we want them to feel at home here. And we are going to work together with other film men in this city for the improvement of the motion picture industry, and we have great expectations for the results, because this is the "livest"town on the Pacific Coast to-day."

low is a sample of the better class of theaters there, but it gives no inkling of the money the exhibitors make. This particular one opened September 1 with "Exploits of Elaine," and is to show, besides the serial, Pathe three and four reel features. Twenty-five cents admission is charged. F. E. McDonald is the manager. Some houses in interior towns, however, get a dollar admission.

Clemmer Prepares Patrons for "Purity."

Seattle, Wash.—To put his patrons in the proper frame of mind for the reception of Mutual's new masterpiece, "Purity," in which the famous model, Audrey Munson, is featured, James Q. Clemmer, of the Clemmer theater, has been sending before his curtain at each show for the past week a silver-tongued orator who seeks to impress upon the public mind the true purity of this picture as a work of art, and by explaining a few of its scenes as they are thrown on the screen. The orator in question is Malvin G. Winstock, formerly of the People's Amusement Company, Portland, Oregon. He is evidently carrying this idea through successfully, for we hear people on all sides talkig of the coming of "Purity" with all due artistic appreciation. Still we do not attribute all the favorable conjectures we have heard to Mr. Winstock's eloquence, for Mr. Clemmer has been in the picture business a long time in Seattle, and during all that time the people have found him invariably most conscientious in selecting films to be shown at his theater.

Paramount Has Two New Road Men.

Seattle, Wash.—Manager Fountain of the Paramount office has just put on two new road men in the Washington and Oregon territory, Harry K. Brin, formerly foreign representative for Triangle and C. O. Winrick, formerly with Metro in Seattle.

Seattle Business and Personal Notes.

Seattle, Wash.—Carl Stearn, Kleine's manager, has gone on a trip to Portland and Spokane for the purpose of announcing new Kleine-Edison releases.

Visitors on Seattle's film row this week were E. R. Redlich, Pacific Coast division manager for Fox films; Hopkins and Halberg, Lincoln theater, Port Angeles, and with them E. F. Jessen, also of Port Angeles; A. H. McDonald, Rex theater, Eugene, Oregon; Herman Fowler, Elmer, Washington; William Southern, Grand theater, Bellingham; Frank Bailey, American theater, Butte, Mont.; Dr. Clemmer, Clemmer theater, Spokane; A. C. Anderson, Apollo theater, Tacoma; H. T. Moore, Colonial theater, Tacoma; C. E. McKee, Everett.

Clemmer Gets Artcraft Films

Has to Bid Against the Field and They Come High—Raise in Admission.

By S. Clark Patchin, East 1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane.

SPOKANE, WASH.—The Clemmer theater is the successful bidder on the new Mary Pickford pictures at a high figure. The terms are not made public, but at least three other Spokane moving picture theaters were after the new Artcraft Pictures Corporation releases and the bidding was keen.

Dr. H. S. Clemmer was notified that his bid had been accepted and the contract signed. Mary Pickford's first picture under the new arrangement will be "Less Than the Dust," written by Hector Turnbull from a poem of that name, and directed by John Emerson. It will be shown at the Clemmer about the end of October.

"During the presentation of the new Pickford pictures the schedule of prices at the Clemmer will be altered in certain portions of the house," said Dr. Clemmer. "This will only be done as the excessive cost of the new picture service make it compulsory."

Chaplin at Stilwell Theaters.

A contract between the recently-formed Stilwell Theaters Company, which controls the Casino, Class A, Rex and Unique theaters, and the Mutual Film, has been made whereby the Charles Chaplin comedies will be shown hereafter at the Class A theater for a four-days' run and at the Rex for a three-days' run.

Prizes for "Liberty" Descriptions.

A new Universal film entitled "Liberty" and said to be founded on recent events along the Mexican border, began at the Best theater, October 1. It is in twenty instalments and one of these will be shown each Sunday and Monday.

Manager James McConahey will give away a beautiful oil painting, claimed to be valued at $10, every Sunday, to the persons that send in the shortest and best description of the serial "Liberty."

OTHER PACIFIC COAST NOTES.

San Francisco Notes.

The Empire theater on Market street, near Sixth, is undergoing changes, the most noticeable of whic his the construction of a new lobby and front of novel design.

S. S. Hertzberg, a motion picture exhibitor of Shanghai, was a recent visitor here.

The Breck Photo Play Supply Company is furnishing a full projection room equipment for the Savoy on McAllister street, to be opened within a short time.

A recent addition to the New Mission theater is a blue ribbon English bull dog, who responds to the call of Manager Robert Abraham.

Claude Lagley, of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, returned recently from a visit to the T. & D. theater at Reno, Nev.

The farewell engagement of the "Clansman" has just been brought to an end at the Cort theater, the film having been shown here for about thirty weeks.

Mark Leichter, one of the owners of the Rex theater, has returned from a business trip to New York.

San Francisco's "Path of Gold"

Market Street Is to Be Lighted by Beautiful Illuminating System Like That at the Exposition—Is to Cost $100,000—Theaters on the Path of Gold Will Be Benefited—Good Business and Growing Competition.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The downtown district is rapidly coming into its own as an amusement center and competition here promises shortly to become as keen as in the case of some of the suburban districts which experienced a mushroom growth following the great fire of 1906. The Rialto theater, opened several months ago on Market street, above Seventh, has proved to be even a greater success than its owners anticipated and within a short time the Savoy theater nearby is to be reopened as a moving picture house.

Farther downtown there is even greater activity in getting new theaters ready. The work of tearing down the building at Fourth and Market streets to make room for the new California theater is progressing rapidly and Manager Roth of the Portola theater, who will also have charge of the new house, states that by the first of the year the steel work will be in place and that in less than twelve months the theater will be ready for occupancy. At Ellis and Mason streets work is being rushed on a theater which will have a seating capacity of more than 2,000 and the new St. Francis theater, on Carry street, near Powell, will be opened within a few days.

During the first week in October an illuminating system, designed after the one that assisted in making the recent exposition such a distinctive one, will be placed in operation on Market street, this having been installed at a cost of more than $100,000. A festival extending over several days has been arranged and the event is being made a Pacific Coast affair, railroads having granted special transportation rates for the occasion. Moving picture houses on the "Path of Gold" are expecting a great rush of business during the festival and it is anticipated that the transformation of Market street into the best lighted thoroughfare in the world will be of permanent benefit to them. Manager Partington of the Imperial theater is already advertising the location of his house as being at the end of the "Path of Gold."

Judge Warns Unwise Exhibitors.

San Francisco, Cal.—Since the abolition of the Board of Censorship the owners of two or three small theaters on Market street have been hampering the efforts of the Film Exchange Board of Trade in its crusade against questionable pictures and have persisted in putting out objectionable posters and other advertising matter. Some of this has been confiscated by the police and theater owners have been warned not to repeat the offense. Tiring of letting offenders off with a small fine or a reprimand, two of the police judges have issued the warnig that if the offense is repeated a jail sentence will be imposed.

Board of Trade to Hold Luncheons.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Film Exchange Board of Trade is preparing to inaugurate a series of luncheons to bring its members together for other than purely business reasons. Now that the holiday season is at an end it is believed that almost the full membership of the board can be brought together in this manner whenever Manager Fred S. Peachy issues a call.

Tom North in New Position.

San Francisco, Cal.—Tom North, formerly of this city, but for more than a year in charge of the V. L. S. E. office at Seattle, Wash., has been made the United States representative of the great Kleinschmidt picture, "War on Three Fronts," and will make his headquarters in Chicago. He is expected here at an early date on his way east.

Imperial Installs Big Orchestra.

San Francisco, Cal.—Manager J. A. Partington of the Imperial theater is determined to keep his house in the front rank in the matter of music, as well as pictures, and has installed a new symphony orchestra of twenty pieces under the direction of Maurice Lawrence. The immediate result has been a material increase in attendance. Another attraction recently was the personal appearance of Wallace Reid, who made a short talk from the stage on the making of photoplays.

Chorus Appears at Tivoli.

San Francisco, Cal.—For a brief time one evening recently the stage of the Tivoli theater, the local Turner & Dahnken house, reminded patrons of the purpose for which the house was erected, that of the presentation of grand opera. Five hundred singers, who are to take part in a great open air production of "Aida," gathered upon the great stage and, accompanied by the pipe organ and orchestra, renedered several selections from the opera between the presentation of pictures. The house was filled to capacity at all performances.

Theater Breaks Former Records.

San Francisco, Cal.—Former records for attendance at the Empress theater are being broken during the engagement of "Purity," featuring Audrey Munson. Manager Sid Grauman has prepared a prologue that precedes the seven reel production, this consisting of poses by a local society art model and Grecian dances. From this city the production goes to the Macdonough theater, Oakland, to fill a two weeks' engagement.

Mothers to Co-operate With Exhibitors.

San Francisco, Cal.—Members of the Laguna Honda Mothers' Club and their friends met recently and discussed the feasibility of neighborhood censorship of moving pictures. It was decided that the only way in which neighborhood censorship might be made manifest was by an object lesson of neighborhood taste. Accordingly it was decided to make an effort to meet exhibitors in the Sunset district and prevail upon them to permit the mothers to assist in compiling a program for Friday evenings, planning to keep the youngsters home other evenings of the week during the school year.

Arctic Photographer Out of North.

San Francisco, Cal.—George H. Watkins, official photographer of the Stefansson Arctic expedition, arrived in San Francisco recently and has since left for London. He spent last summer with a tribe of blonde Eskimo at Minto Inlet, Victoria Land, and secured several thousand feet of film.

Reliance Theater Declared Safe.

Oakland, Cal.—In response to a written complaint filed with the city council to the effect that the recently opened Reliance theater was unsafe, city officials have made an investigation, and a report has been made to that body that the criticism was unfair, the theater having been properly constructed and well fitted for the purpose to which it is being put.

Portland's New Censorship Activity

Portland, Ore., Film Inspectors Joyously Grab New Hold and More Slashing Is Expected—Brutal War Scenes from the News Weeklies to Come in for Snipping—Viewers Become Experts on Sanitation to Inspect Theaters.

By Abraham Nelson, Journal Building, Portland Oregon

PORTLAND, Ore.—Since the motion picture men of this city met with defeat in their attempt to get the city commissioners to pass a fairer censorship ordinance, the city's film inspectors have been comparatively inactive. On September 27, however, a meeting of the censors and viewers was held, and Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the board, and F. T. Richards, chairman, blossomed forth with a lot of new ideas as to what should be eliminated in Portland's pictures to make them right.

News films, which have heretofore usually been immune from censors' shears, will come in for slashings along with the story films, according to instructions issued by Censor Colwell. War scenes in weeklies, showing horses laboring down hillside under coercion, or apparently being injured, must be cut. Weeklies showdisasters or accidents and the removal of dead bodies are classed as gruesome, and must be cut.

In the past the municipal inspection of theaters was left to firemen and policemen. Now the censor board and its eighty odd viewers have been added to the city's already large battery of inspectors. Their duties are to inspect the picture shows with reference to sanitation, lighting, ventilation, effect of pictures on audiences, the percentage of children attending, and the class of people who comprise the audiences.

A Near-Wrangle Fest.

The Social Workers' Club wanted to know something about the way motion pictures were censored in Portland, and requested a committee from the censors, and a committee from the film men to attend a dinner at the Hotel Oregon, September 26. The motion picture men consented to attend only on the condition that the chairman would guard against mud slinging, and the interchange of personalities. George Thatcher, president of the club, assured the picture men that he would maintain decorum in this respect.

From the reports of the picture men who attended, chairman Thatcher had not figured on the presence of Censor Colwell at the meeting when he made that assurance, and she had to be repeatedly instructed that personalities were barred, much to the amusement of the audience. Chairman Richards also passed remarks.

Millie R. Trumbull, representing the National Board of Review, and one of the organizers of the local censor board of which she is not now a member, termed the Portland board a "badly spoiled child," and decried the way it has continually thrown stones at the National Board. Judge Cleeton expressed himself in favor of censorship, with an appeal, however.

The Social Workers Club requested the censor board to permit a viewing of a picture before and after eliminations had been made. The board ruled that a picture in which eliminations had been ordered, but not made, could not be exhibited to the organization, and that part of the program could not be carried out.

F. M. Simonton, W. A. Reed, and L. A. Todd, a committee representing the exchanges, presented the motion picture men's side of the censorship situation.

Sunday Situation in Oregon Grows Tense

Sabbatarians May Close Exchanges on Sunday Unless Law Is Repealed—Association Calls on Exhibitors to Use Power of Screen.

PORTLAND, Ore.—At a recent meeting of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association, H. H. Haynes, representing a religious liberty organization, pointed out that while the Oregon Sunday closing law exempted theaters from its operation, a strict enforcement of it would close film exchanges on Sunday. It is rumored that some state and county officials are preparing for such strict enforcement if the repeal of the statute is not effected at the election a few weeks hence. The association is urging the exhibitors to use their screens to spread the repeal propaganda.

A Corvallis Serio-Comic Touch.

It was anticipated that when Taylor and Child opened the Airdome at Corvallis for a Sunday show there would be trouble. There was. Resurrecting a city ordinance that had been passed in 1881, the city fathers of Corvallis trotted it out, and pinched one of the proprietors of the theater. His trial took place September 30, resulting in the dismissal of the case, and the manager's triumph.

Also at Corvallis one of the daily papers displayed the following ad a few days before the manager of the Airdome was arrested: "Moving Pictures Sunday Night at the Congregational Church, Third and Jefferson streets, 7:30 o'clock. (Featured by Electric Film Company, New York.) You Are Invited." One of the Corvallis papers pointed out that the incongruity of the situation was apparent.

They Still Pick on Exhibitors.

McMinnville, Ore.—C. C. Watrous has operated a theater here for several years and has shown many big pictures. Recently he booked "Civilization" and the town was all expectant to see the production. It evidently peeved the city fathers that the exhibitor had a little money in sight, so they dug up an old city ordinance about licensing traveling shows, applied it to Brother Watrous and took $7.50 of his box office receipts for the city treasury. Watrous has engaged an attorney and will dispute the city's right to make the charge.

With the Road Men.

Portland, Ore.—C. P. Merwin, representing Greater Vitagraph, in this territory, was in Seattle recently attending a meeting of the company's road men under the direction of the new manager, G. E. Farriss.

John W. Drum, road man for World Film, spent a week in Portland and was very successful in adding many suburban houses to his already large list of bookings in this city.

Harry Carney, formerly with Fox at Los Angeles, has been transferred to this territory, replacing R. C. Montgomery. Mr. Carney will make his headquarters in Portland.

C. H. Feldman, road man for General Film, out of Seattle, has been working eastern Oregon territory under the direction of the Portland office.

O. Wogg, traveling for the Standard Feature Film Company, has been successfully exploiting "The Yellow Menace" in eastern Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, road man for Mutual, made an interesting trip over the Wallowa branch of the O. W. R. & N., calling on many theaters that road men sometimes miss. He encountered six inches of snow at Joseph, Ore.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

Portland, Ore.—M. B. Donovan has sold the Portsmouth theater to A. R. Mattoon.

Kelso, Wash.—The Star theater has been reopened by Wills & King, new equipment being furnished by the Service Film Company.

The Dalles, Oregon.—Lew Cullins reports that the sale of the Casino to T. O. Mead, former operator, was not consummated and that Mr. and Mrs. Cullins still conduct this popular theater in The Dalles.

Skamakawa, Wash.—E. Ingles has opened a picture theater here. Pete Sabo of Portland furnishing the equipment.

Pendleton, Ore.—Guy Matlock, of the Pastime, was host to several film men and their families who came here from Portland and Baker to see the Roundup. The guests occupied Mr. Matlock's box at the arena and posed for the exciting mob scenes, much to the delight of Messrs. Sill, Van Scoy and Brownell, who photographed the event.

Portland, Ore.—O. D. Wheeler, of St. Paul, moving picture photographer for the Northern Pacific Railway, was in Portland several days photographing the Columbia Highway.

Portland, Ore.—Other visitors on Film Row were: Frank L. Hudson, Seattle manager for G. F., and Henry Gravenkamp, of the People's theater, Mt. Angel, Ore.

Astoria House Enlarges.

Astoria, Oregon.—The Crystal theater is preparing for fall business by extensive alterations inside and out. One hundred new chairs have been installed. The lobby is being enlarged and a new stucco front put in. A new stage has been built which will be equipped with an entire new set of scenery. Harry W. Dean made a trip to Portland recently to arrange for the new equipment.

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

E. F. Carruthers Succeeds His Brother.

Vancouver, B. C.—W. G. Carruthers, formerly booker at the local branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has left for California, seeking larger fields of endeavor. His brother, E. F. Carruthers, who has been in charge of the shipping department, has succeeded to the position of booker.

Returned Soldiers Benefit at Lyceum.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Lyceum theater was on Sept. 25 and 26 conducted by ladies connected with the Returned Soldiers' Toy Factory, the occasion being a benefit in aid of this institution. In addition to the regular program of pictures, local people contributed vocal and instrumental selections.

W. F. Dunlavy Is General Film Booker.

Vancouver, B. C.—W. F. Dunlavy, former manager of the Consolidated Film Exchange, has accepted a position as booker with the local branch of the General Film, under Manager Meagher, and replaces Harold F. Moore, who recently left to assume his new place as booker and assistant manager of the Famous Players office in Calgary.

Mr. Dunlavy has lately been in charge of the Princess and Rex theaters in Prince George, B. C., operated by the Prince George Amusement Company, but reports that the business is now practically at a standstill in that vicinity, and that the houses are being closed down.

Strand to Be Improved.

Winnipeg, Man.—Manager Seamans of the Strand theater has just taken out a building permit for $10,000, to cover the cost of alterations which are about to be made in the house.

Universal Beauty Contest.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Manitoba Free Press in connection with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has just launched a beauty contest for young ladies aspiring to film stardom, and is boosting the contest lavishly in the moving picture department of the paper. Any girl over fifteen in Western Canada may enter, and the prize is a trip to Universal City, Cal., not only for the lucky winner but also for a chaperone of her own selection. The winner will also be given an opportunity to qualify for work in the pictures.

The judging will be entirely from photographs and the following will be the judges: An executive of the Universal company, J. Warren Kerrigan, Jules L. Steele, moving picture editor of the Manitoba Free Press, Mrs. C. P. Walker of the Walker Theater, and Julius Levine of the local Universal office.

The following Winnipeg theaters have already undertaken the distribution of entry blanks to those desiring to enter the contest: Province, National, Lyceum, Orpheum, Bijou, Starland, Majestic, Monarch, Gaiety, Globe, Strand, Fort Rouge, Furby, Mac's, Garden, Corona, Karnac, Star, King's, Baldwin, Elm, Palace and Grand as well as the Royal at Selkirk, Manitoba. Blanks may also be obtained from the Free Press or from the contest office, which has been opened at 196 Scott Building.

This is the first beauty contest held in western Canada, and the idea bids fair to create intense interest.

Vancouver, B. C.—That Julius Levine seems to indicate our old friend Jules be of the festive motorcycle and the fondness for collisions. Well, Jules ought to make a good judge.

Free Matinee to Convent Children.

Nanaimo, B. C.—Manager George Beattie of the Dominion Theater gave a free matinee recently for the children of the local convent, who were accompanied to the theater by the Mother Superior. In addition to the resident pupils, all those throughout the district who attend the convent school were invited.

Worth Noting Hereabouts.

Brandon, Manitoba.—Manager Semper of the new Bijou theater expects to be able to open the house some time in October. The seating capacity of the Bijou will be about 650.

Chilliwack, B. C.—The "Hospital Night" given recently at the Imperial theater was a distinct success. In addition to a good program of pictures, there were songs and recitations by a number of local people and numerous selections by the Kelland-Chevalley orchestra.

Says Canada Should Make Films

J. Arthur Nelson Comes to Vancouver for Dominion Educational Films, Ltd.—In Interview Says That Canada Is Bakward in Getting the Advertising Value of Home Made Pictures—Statistics of the Local Business.

By E. C. Nelson, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—J. Arthur Nelson, formerly general manager of the Fronti (Universal) company, and more recently president and general manager of the United States Motion Picture Company, arrived in Vancouver recently to ally himself with the Dominion Educational Films, Limited, a Vancouver company which is desirous of expanding its business and entering the field as a general producing organization.

Mr. Nelson had some more or less pertinent remarks to make regarding the film situation in Canada, and in the course of an interview with a local paper said:

"I am very much surprised to find Canada in such a primitive condition, so far as the motion picture industry is concerned. Canada has no doubt been waiting for foreign capital to come in and develop this industry. This seems to me to be one of your prime weaknesses; more initiative should be shown in the development of your own resources. As I am myself an Englishman, though with a long residence in the United States, I may be privileged to speak facts rather than leave to evade them.

"In order that you may appreciate the immensity of the opportunities at hand I will say that the motion picture industry in Canada exceeds both in volume and profits a great many of your principal enterprises, including ship-building, lumbering, mining, fishing, fruit, etc., and yet despite this there is not a dollar of Canadian money invested in the manufacture of motion pictures in this country." (This is not the case, by the way. E. C. T.)

"The United States is concededly the best advertised nation in the world, and the motion picture has been a great factor in making her resources so well known. There are in Canada some 2,000 motion picture theaters, entailing an investment of $15,000,000, with an army of employees estimated at over 20,000 people. Not only should you supply your own theaters with Canadian-made pictures, you should send your own productions out into the world to advertise your own country."

Another statement made by the speaker was: "While I am a firm believer in natural growth, and have no patience with the bombastic mushroom American variety, I am also impatient of the blindness which shuts out opportunities, and thereby permits the astute Yankee to build fortunes under your very noses."

Films and the Local Papers.

Vancouver, B. C.—A special photoplay section, containing the full announcements of the leading moving picture theaters of the city, was recently incorporated in the Saturday issue of the Daily Province, and the result was almost six full pages of moving picture publicity, with a little vaudeville matter thrown in to make up the six pages. Three theaters—the Colonial (Fox), the Dominion (Metro), and the Rex (Triangle)—each took a half page ad, and given the accompanying half pages for reading notices, while smaller spaces were used by the Famous Players Film Service, and by other theaters in all parts of the city.

In addition to this, Manager Herbert Lubin, of the Standard Film Service, distributors of the Metro program, also had a full page in the Sunday News-Advertiser, and the Morning Sun. These are the only local papers published on these mornings.

I. Cook, Oldest Driver in Vancouver, and Friend of Jim Pilling; Bert Lubin, Mgr. of Calgary Metro; Jim Pilling, Orpheum Theater, Vancouver; J. R. Muir, Managing Director, Dominion Theaters, and Herbert Lubin, of Metro, on a Joy Ride in Stanley Park.

Rex at Revelstoke Burns.

Revelstoke, B. C.—A fire which broke out in the Rex moving picture theater here (formerly the Star), just at dusk on a recent evening, for a time threatened the entire business section of the city, but was finally got under control after the theater and several adjoining stores had been consumed. It was owned by W. A. Smythe, and had been dark for several months, and had recently been used as a committee room for the local Conservative Association.

Avenue Theater Solves Fire Escape Discussion.

Vancouver, B. C.—After several years of argument and discussion by successive city councils, the much-disputed question of the exterior fire escape of the Avenue theater is about to be settled. When the Georgis street viaduct was completed it was found that the iron fire escape on the theater extended slightly over the viaduct. The council asked the owners of the theater to remove it, but they did not think that this should be required. However, Alfred Williams & Co., Ltd., have just taken out a building permit in the name of the Western Canadian Amusement Company, for the construction of an interior fire escape at a cost of $1,200.

Found Operators Out Threshing.

Winnipeg, Man.—Clarence Spence, provincial inspector of theaters and operators, has just returned to Winnipeg after a four-week trip through southern Manitoba.

"I went out to examine the qualifications of motion picture operators, according to the provisions of the new act," he said, "but I found most of them out threshing. In the small towns, I found that most of the moving picture men also run an auto business as well. Now that threshing is on, the farmers have no time for shows, so the theaters have been closed, and the operators have gone to the fields, either to operate threshing machines or to repair them.

"Next time I go on an inspection trip," said Mr. Spence, "I'll go in the winter."

Popular Manager Scanlon Weds.

Vancouver, B. C.—The World correspondent is in receipt of an announcement of the marriage of Miss Helen May Covert to Robert H. Scanlon, the popular manager of the Patricia theater at Powell River, B. C. The ceremony took place in Vancouver on September 14, and the newly wedded couple have left on an extended honeymoon, contemplating a return to Powell River about November 1.

Our congratulations and best wishes.

VIM FEATURE COMEDY.

A PERSISTENT WOOING (Oct. 18).—Rose is a rich young woman who has everything she wants. One day while out in her machine she sees Harry in his machine. His appearance appeals to her and she purposely collides with him. When he goes about his business she follows him and later collides with him again. Harry gets angry and when he reproves Rose she asks him to kiss her hand. As she is so coquettish he does, but when she importunes him to kiss her on the face, Harry refuses, saying he is an engaged man. He then drives home unaware that Rose is following him. When he enters his home Rose "buys" his chauffeur to resign in order that she can disguise herself as a man and take his place.

Harry's wedding day arrives and Rose, who is now much in love with Harry, knowing Ruth will marry any man if he has money, decides to prevent the wedding if possible. She drives Harry through mud and water and finally succeeds in putting the car out of commission, thereby preventing Harry from being on time for the wedding. Later Harry finds that Ruth has married someone else and decides to take his chauffeur, having learned who his chauffeur is. Rose, realizing that she has won, looks at him haughtily. He then says, "I'll give you that kiss now," but she tells him to wait until they have been married.

BIOGRAPH.

A TALE OF THE WILDERNESS (Reissue—Oct. 9).—The cast: The girl (Dorothy Bernard); The outlaw (Charles H. Mailes); His younger brother (Edwin August); Leader of the pioneers (Wm. J. Butler); Indian Chief (Dark Cloud).

In the wilds of the Kentucky hills two brothers, the elder an outlaw, view from a distance the approach of a party of settlers moving forward to a new home in the vast wilderness. The younger brother is overwhelmed by the sight of the pioneers, and, unknown to his elder brother, joins their party. The settlers build a stockade home, and the outlook is most rosy, until the outlaw brother meets a girl from the stockade at the spring, he, of course, not knowing his brother is among the party. He forces his attentions upon her, which she repulses, rushing back to the stockade for help. The outlaw's influence with the neighboring Indians arouses them in his plan for vengeance. They attack the stockade, and when the settlers' chance seems hopeless they dig a tunnel from the back of the stockade to the hillside. Most of them have effected an escape, but among the few captured is the younger brother. The outlaw regrets his action, and uses again his influence with the Indians, but with a different effect.

A PUEBLO LEGEND (Reissue—Two Parts—Oct. 10).—The cast: Indian girl (Mary Pickford); The Great Brother's friend (Robert Harron); The Great Brother (Wilfred Lucas).

This production was made in the old Pueblo of Isleta, New Mexico, where the incidents of the story were supposed to have occurred. The opening scene occurs on a feast-day in early times before the coming of the Spanish to that country. During the Spring Dance of the Green Boughs, the Sun Priest tells the story of the turquoise stone that fell from the sky centuries before, and was imbedded in the earth, the recovery of which would mean light and happiness and prosperity to the people of Isleta. The Great Brother, the exemplar of the tribe, is chosen as the one most worthy to be sent on the holy mission. The dangers and hardships which he endures during his long quest go to make a most beautiful portrayal of early Indian symbolism.

THE WHITE ROSE OF THE WILDS (Reissue—Oct. 16).—The cast: White Rose (Blanche Sweet); her brother (Robert Harron); her father (W. Chrystie Miller); outlaws (Wilfred Lucas and Joseph Graybill).

An unsuccessful old gold miner is stricken down and dies, leaving three young children to take care of themselves. They are a boy of seventeen, a girl of sixteen, and another girl of eleven. The boy, inheriting his father's determination, insists that they remain, for he is sure there is gold to be found. Later his efforts are rewarded, and he rushes off to the agent to file his claim. While he is away a trio of thugs break into the cabin, but the pure, innocent girl so impresses one of them that he drives the other two off. Her clear eye of innocence awakens his better self and he goes, asking if he may return when he has proved himself worthy.

CLASSMATES (Reissue—Three Parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: Duncan Irving (Henry Walthall); Sylvia Randolph (Blanche Sweet); Bubby Dumble (Lionel Barrymore); Bert Stafford (Marshal Neilan); Duncan's father (Thomas Jefferson); Phyllis Stafford (Gertrude Robinson).

Bert Stafford is in love with his mother's ward, Sylvia Randolph. She does not reciprocate his feelings as she is in love with Duncan Irving, son of Irving the store-keeper. Duncan Irving's father is a habitual drunkard. On account of Sylvia's preference for Duncan, Bert tries to pick a quarrel with him which results in Duncan being ordered from the grounds by Mrs. Stafford.

Duncan passes his entrance examinations for West Point, and before leaving home tells Sylvia of his ambitions. His father resolves to stop drinking. Two years later, Duncan writes his father of his promotion at West Point. When Mrs. Stafford hears of Duncan's success, she decides to send Bert to West Point.

A year later, the cadets are shown preparing for their annual dance, to which Mrs. Stafford, Sylvia, and Phyllis, daughter of Mrs. Stafford, are invited by Captain Lane. Duncan is not a first class man while Bert is a plebe. Bert naturally resents being compelled to take orders from Duncan or Duncan's friend, Dumble. Dumble falls in love with Phyllis. Bert asks Sylvia to marry him, but she puts him off. Bert becomes furious when he sees her talking with Duncan and resolves to get Irving drunk in order to humiliate Duncan. When Bert takes Irving to his tent, he is seen by Duncan's friend, Dumble, who reports the matter to Duncan.

Duncan finds his father in a drunken condition and Bert gloats over Duncan's humiliation and insults him. Duncan demands an apology and when Bert refuses to retract his accusation, Duncan knocks him down. When Bert is picked up, he is blind and Duncan and his friends Dumble, Clay and Lindsay are put under arrest, suspended and court-martialed, despite the fact that Duncan declares he alone is to blame.

The Staffords move to New York, and although Bert recovers his eyesight, he is declared ineligible for further military service. He proposes to Sylvia and this time she consents to become his wife. They quarrel as to when the wedding shall take place, and Bert accepts an offer from an engineering concern to go to South America. Duncan goes to Washington hoping to induce the President to lift the suspension of his friends. Their reinstatement is made subject to Mrs. Stafford signing the petition, which she refuses to do.

Nothing is heard of Bert, and Mrs. Stafford is led to believe that he has died of fever. Duncan and his friends offer to lead an expedition in search of him. Mrs. Stafford agrees to sign the petition on condition that they bring her son back. Phyllis agrees to marry Dumble and have Duncan act as best man if he finds Bert. Duncan wishes to serve Bert in order to win back Sylvia's respect. She gives him a message for Bert which discloses to Duncan her engagement to Bert, but he refuses to give up hope of winning her.

The relief party soon arrives in South America and is soon in the heart of the jungle. As their supplies are running short, Lindsay volunteers to return for a fresh supply. During his absence Duncan finds Bert, and delivers Sylvia's message to him. Lindsay, after many attempts, eventually locates his friends.

The scene shifts to New York again, where Bert is just recovering from the effects of his trip, and although Sylvia nurses him, she does not show any affection towards him. Dumble, Clay and Lindsay receive commissions as Lieutenants. Dumble cannot understand why Duncan has not received a commission. Preparations are made for the wedding of Dumble and Phyllis. Bert goes away on business. Sylvia reminds Mrs. Stafford of her promise to Duncan and secures his commission for him, but does not want Duncan to know of her part in the matter.

When Bert returns he finds Clay and Lindsay thanking Sylvia for securing Duncan's commission for him. He tries to get Sylvia to make up with him, but she evades him, having realized that it is Duncan whom she really loves. Bert informs Duncan that Sylvia has secured his commission so that she will be under no further obligation to him. Duncan refuses to accept the commission and tells Bert of his love for Sylvia. Sylvia overhears this. Duncan insists that Bert shall tell the truth in reference to getting his father intoxicated, and as Bert is about to strike Duncan Sylvia appears and sides with Duncan. Following the wedding of Dumble and Phyllis comes the engagement of Duncan and Sylvia.

ESSANAY.

MONEY TO BURN (Two Parts—Oct. 10).—The cast: Helen Gray (Lillian Drew); Tommy Lawrence (John Lorenz); Herbert Carey (Edmund F. Cobb); Major Calhoun Gray (Arthur Bates).

Major Calhoun Gray, who lives in a small town in the north, thinks the Civil War is not yet over. He is reputed to be extremely wealthy and when his niece and only relative questions him about it, he insists he is saving the money to further the Confederate cause. Helen goes to work as stenographer in the town hotel. Dislike of Herbert Carew, a guest, is a common bond between the girl and Tommy Lawrence, a likeable young salesman. Carew wants the girl for the money the old man is supposed to possess. Lawrence wins her. Meanwhile, Carew has met and gained the confidence of the major. When the old man dies he finds the hiding place of the fortune. He vanishes with it. Soon after Lawrence and his wife receive the entire treasure. It is in Confederate money.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 17 (Oct. 11). Canimated Nooz Pictorial with this issue maintains its customary standard in giving the news of the world. At Cheeseborough, Colo., Charles Evans Hughes is pictured while admitting he is the best man for the job of president. At Pippin Beach, Cal., the fair bathers have taken up the fad of having fancy hose painted on their limbs. At Eggsoup, Ala., the chief industry is raising egg-plants. Trained hens are taught to plant the bulbs in rows. President Wilson's return to the Capital—in a flivver which possessses plenty of "pep" is pictured. Numerous other events of interest are sketched. A serious cartoon, "Signs of Peace," and a Dreamy Dud episode close the five hundred feet. The rest of the reel is taken up with North American scenic.

LOST TWENTY-FOUR HOURS (Three Parts—Oct. 14).—Dick Swift (Richard C. Travers); Milly Swift (Marguerite Clayton); Adolphus Smiley (Harry Dunkinson); Mrs. Dacre (Warda Howard); Mary Churchill (Gertrude Glover); David Swift (John Junior).

Dick Swift has promised that in the absence of his wife he will attend all meetings of the Society for Furnishing Tooth Brushes to the Natives of Baroola. But instead he falls in with Adolphus Smiley and the two visit several barrooms. Their car wrecked, they take the steering wheel and with it guide an uncertain homeward course on foot at an early morning hour.

Dick falls into a sleep which lasts twenty-four hours, Smiley awakening him by clinking ice in a pitcher after doctors had failed. Mrs. Dacre, whom Swift invited to call on himself and wife, does call. There is consternation. He makes David, his brother, insist the woman is their long lost sister. Mary Churchill, sweetheart of David, and her militant mother suspect the ruse. Sam Golden, the owner of the machine Dick smashed, arrives with a policeman and Swift eagerly submits to arrest. Dick is perfectly contented in his cell, safe from relatives and friends. But they sweep down on the police station and drag him forth. The sergeant finally unravels the mystery of Mrs. Dacre, who confesses she attempted to blackmail Swift. Everybody is happy at last but Adolphus Smiley, who started it all, isn't destined to be happy for long.

THE FABLE OF THE KITTENISH SUPER-ANNS AND THE WORLD-WEARY SNIPES (Two parts—Oct. 17) A Cove with the flossy Label of Adelbert Justitian came back to dazzle the Townsmen with the Wampum he had gathered He learned that he would be expected to pull a few House Parties The first week-end session was to be a Peace Conference for the antique Quackeydoodles and Speckled Hens. MORAL.—Youth is the Time for Gravity DREAMY DUD IN THE AFRICAN WAR ZONE (Oct. 18).—This is another split reel in which Cartoonist Carlson has worked out his humorous incidents by combining, through excellent double exposure, his human figures with his well-known pen and ink characters. Dreamy Dud, Dunk and the dog put out to sea. The captain orders the cook to quit boiling cabbage. The cook produces an alibi and Dunk's cigar is found to be the offensive smell. Before the captain can finish his argument a battleship opens fire on them, the gunners having orders to get the fat fellow. Dud and the dog delight in Dunk's dodging of fourteen-inch shells. Then a gigantic whale lifts the three off the boat and sends them whirling into space, Dud coming down right through a newspaper in which a cannibal chieftain is reading the latest movie news. "Spoila pictura Hank Walthall," says the chief angrily. Dud is chased over the desert and caught, but the chief's daughter pleads for his life. He awakens to find the colored washerwoman telling him to get up, while Dunk and the dog laugh. Five hundred feet of scenic share the reel.

MAROONED (Three parts—Oct. 21) The cast: John Prentiss (Edward Arnold); Nina Holliday (Alice McChesney); Rupert Elliot (Fred Malatesta); Capt. Bruce (Arthur Bates). Nina Holliday gets a chance to experience the unconventional situations she puts in her novels. She goes on a yacht cruise with Rupert Elliot, millionaire. Under the influence of drink Elliot makes bold advances and John Prentiss, a sailor, saves her. The yacht catches afire and Prentiss, plunging overboard to rescue the girl, finally gets her ashore on a rocky island. Unknown to them, the others of the party are saved. They write their names and the location of the island on a piece of paper and place it in a bottle, casting it out to sea.

Weeks pass and the strong John Prentiss finds himself in love with the girl. She, also, begins to love the stalwart seaman. Capt. Bruce of Elliot's yacht discovers the bottle in the [illegible] and [illegible] expedition is started. Prentiss is not to be found when the yacht reaches the island. CONVERGING PATHS (Two Parts—Oct. 9).—The cast: Dan, of the slums (Robyn Adair); Nell, of the green fields (Virginia Kirtley); Paul, a minister (Leo Pierson); Mary, his wife, (Eugenie Forde). Written by Hettie Grey Baker. Directed by Burton L. King.

Dan never knew anything but the city slums, while Nell was born near the green fields and running brooks. Came a day when Nell left the old home farm and sought the great city, there to earn her livelihood. Dan, of the slums, sank lower and lower in the social strata. Nell soon found that city life was a delusion and a snare. Finally she was given notice that her services were no longer desired by her employer. Then it was that the country girl realized that she was alone and penniless in the heart of a relentless city.

One night she wandered through the slums, finally venturing into the portals of a little mission. There, seeking shelter for the night, she secreted herself while the mission worker and his wife dismissed their little flock and left the house of worship for the night. That [illegible] Dan of the slums was [illegible] by the police and was pursued. Desperate, the young man sought a hiding place in the little mission. After the pursuers had passed, he turned on the light and there confronted Nell.

In the meantime, the clergyman and his wife had returned to the mission and they encountered the two. The clergyman offered Dan another chance if he would promise to be a man. Dan proved his worth, returned later to the little mission and there sought the love of Nell, which was sincerely returned. The minister then made Dan and Nell man and wife.

A MISTAKE IN RUSTLERS (Oct. 14) The cast: Tom (Tom Mix); Vicky (Victoria Forde); Dick (Sid Jordan); Sheriff (Leo Maloney). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

Tom and Vicky are sweethearts and plan to marry soon. There has been rustling of cattle on the range, and the sheriff offers a reward for the capture of the rustlers. Tom prizes a silk handkerchief presented to him by Vicky, and hides it in the bunkhouse. Buck, a cowboy, guilty of rustling, steals the kerchief, ropes a calf and ties the animal with the kerchief that Vicky gave Tom.

The cowboys find the calf tied on the ground, take the kerchief, show it to the sheriff, who at once recognizes it as belonging to Tom. Tom, after a battle, escapes the sheriff, for he does not know what that officer has against him. Buck believes he is safe and resumes his rustling. However, Vicky detects him in the act of branding a calf belonging to her father. She captures Buck, brings him back to the ranch and Tom is exonerated.

ROOM RENT AND ROMANCE (Special Release—Oct. 16).—The cast: Slim Hoover (Victor Potel); Claudius Cupid (Ed. Sedgwick); Peggy Plantem (Eileen Sedgwick); Sallie Sloppus (Jane Bernoudy). Scenario by Roy Clements. Produced by Roy Clements.

Slim Hoover and Claudius Cupid are hall-room boys, both in love with Peggy Plantem, a wealthy young widow. Slim and Claudius, intent on "beating each other" to the pretty prize with a proposal of marriage, race to a tailor shop to have their clothes pressed. Slim arrives first and is placed behind the screen in the "press-'em-while-you-wait" establishment, while Claudius on his arrival is placed in the tailor's living-room. Claudius discovers that the remnants of the tailor's dinner are covered with ants, and manages to transfer the ants to Slim's newly-pressed trousers. They both, after beating the tailor out of his charges, reach the home of the widow.

The ants begin to "work" on Slim, much to the joy of Claudius. But in the midst of the fun he is confronted by the presentation to him of an ultimatum from the landlady to pay his room rent or get out. Slim and Claudius both get "in bad" with the widow and are ordered from her home. When they arrive home they find that their landlady has ordered Sallie Sloppus, her maid of all work, to evict them from their rooms.

MAIN 4400 (Two Parts—Oct. 22).—The cast: Frank Milburn (Herbert Rawlinson); Joyce Bruce (Agnes Vernon); Marvin (Carl Von Schaffer); Du Maurier (Harold Mathews). Scenario by Max Havey. Produced by William Worthington.

Frank Milburn, a novelist, is burning the midnight oil, when his artist friends, Du Maurier and Marvin break in upon his reverie. Frank is annoyed at the interruption and goes for a walk in the park. He rescues a girl from the clutches of a ruffian and escorts her to her home. Frank's friends are wondering what has become of him, when he appears and relates his evening's experience. Upon questioning Frank, who discloses that he has the number of her home, Marvin discovers it is the address of an insane asylum, and all decide the fair unknown must be a nurse in the institution.

For some days after Frank is so obsessed with thoughts of the dream girl that he cannot attend to his writing and finally the boys become worried and arrange to help him. Du Maurier phones "Madison Square 4400, Insane Asylum," and requests that a couple of strong arms be sent immediately to secure a friend of his who has gone "nutty." Marvin suggests they draw up a statement to the effect that Frank is in possession of all his senses, to prove later he is sane, which the three then sign.

Upon finding himself an inmate of the asylum Frank submits to various indignities, thinking to be rewarded by a sight of his dream lady and is not disappointed for while strolling about the grounds the following day he discovers her talking to one of the doctors. He discloses his identity and a week later the boys receive an urgent letter commanding them to get him out immediately, as he wants to leave the place at once with the dearest girl in the world.

Dr. Regan at some distance notices them and orders her to go in. Furiously Frank grabs him and a fierce fight ensues, which is brought to a climax when armed attendants rush up and the doctor orders a strait-jacket for the unruly patient. As the two friends have been arrested on the way to his rescue, Joyce determines to aid him, and, having an appointment to attend a masquerade ball with one of the doctors, manages to secure a cavalier costume and smuggle Frank through the gates. He then suggests a call at the parsonage. When Marvin and Du Maurier, after their thirty days' enforced holiday, return to look up their long-lost friend, much to their amazement they find him, now a happy husband, reaping the benefits of a well-earned reward from his new book entitled "Hearts and Strait-Jackets."

RED FEATHER.

BARRIERS OF SOCIETY (Five Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Martha Gorham (Dorothy Davenport); Westie Phillips (Emory Johnson); Harry Arnold (Richard Morris); Silas Gorham (Mr. Montague); John Phillips (Alfred Allen); Mary Phillips (Miss Whiting). Scenario by Fred Myton. Produced by Lloyd B. Carleton.

Westie Phillips, the son of poor and simple fisherfolk, notices a woman marooned on a rock with the tide rising. He rescues her and ever this memory of her remains with him. To Martha Gorham, the daughter of a millionaire, it is only an incident to be remembered for a short time with gratitude toward the boy.

In love with Martha Gorham is Harry Arnold, a man considerably older, whose one aim in life now seems to be the winning of her, despite her refusal. Her father, Silas Gorham, is fond of Arnold and favors his suit, although he does not urge his daughter to marry. Arnold invites Martha and her father to go on a cruise with him on his yacht and she consents. Arnold has arranged with his captain to have it appear that the yacht is wrecked near an uncharted island, so he can take Martha to this spot alone and after a month or so the captain is to return and pick them up.

About the same time Westie Phillips decides to go out into the world and make his way. He is shanghaied aboard a vessel bound for the Orient and meets with such severe treatment that he manages to escape in Honolulu. It so happens that the Arnold yacht is in the vicinity, and one of the men becoming troublesome, the captain decides to put him ashore. Fate again brings Westie and Martha together, for he secures the sailor's place on board he yacht. He recognizes Martha, but she does not know him.

Westie scents that Martha is in danger, and it is with a great deal of satisfaction that he sees Martha repulse the advances of Arnold. Then comes the time when the yacht is in the vicinity of the island. Arnold's plans work out nicely, as he gets Martha in a boat away from her father, but Westie, though he does not know exactly what is happening, senses that there is danger for the woman he loves and insists upon accompanying Arnold. The captain fells him with a blow. Gorham and the others take to the boats and Arnold and Martha are in a boat by themselves. Westie secures a boat and rows for the island. He hears a woman's screams and again comes to Martha's rescue. Then the three take up their life as they find it on the island. Arnold becomes almost crazed when he finds his plans foiled and offers Westie any amount of money if he will but move to the other side of the island. One night Arnold tries to kill the girl, and Westie again saves her. One day Westie and Martha sight a ship and manage to attract it. Before the boat arrives Westie and Martha recognize their love for each other, and their destiny is fulfilled.

LIBERTY (Episode No. 9, "Trapped.—Two Parts—Oct. 9).—The cast: Liberty Horton (Marie Walcamp); Theresa (Mae) Emery); Pancho Lopez (G. Raymond Nye); Pedro (Eddie Polo); Capt. Bob Rutledge (Jack Holt); Major Winston (Neal Hart); Manuel Leon (Bertram Grassby); Jose Leon (L. M. Wells). Written and directed by Jacques Jaccard.

The last episode ended with Liberty holding the whole band of rebels at bay with the rifle that she had stolen from her guard. After Bob's bonds have been untied he takes the gun. Just at this time the rangers that Pedro has met put in their appearance. There is great excitement and in the confusion Liberty and Pedro escape, but Bob and his men are quickly surrounded and besieged on a little peak in the desert.

Liberty and Pedro are enabled to escape by means of an aeroplane that comes along at that moment. Then Lopez, as he has found out that the troops have been ordered to withdraw, sends orders to all the bands that it is time for another raid and names the meeting place. The couriers set out post-haste to ride the rounds and spread the word.

All the while Bob and his men are held prisoners in the little natural fort and are surrounded on all sides by the Mexicans. They think that Liberty and Pedro have been killed. But the aeroplane that was carrying Liberty and her faithful servant to safety breaks down and they are once more thrown into the hands of the bandits.

TIMOTHY DOBBS, THAT'S ME, No. 10 (Last Episode—"Fame at Last"—Two Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Timothy (Carter De Haven); Jeff (Robert Milash); Tin-Eared Terry (Ivor McFadden); Landlady (Margaret Whistler). Story by Bess Meredith. Produced by Wallace Beery.

Timothy is held by the landlady as security for the back rent, and as a last resort he tries to make his escape in some rugs the carpet cleaning man has called for. He is discovered and the landlady takes him to the Sunset Loan Office to pawn him. At the pawnshop he manages to get a pair of scissors which a man is pawning. With these he cuts the leash that binds him and escapes. He then comes upon an offer of a thousand dollars to any man who will last three rounds with Tin-Eared Terry, the Terror, and determines to get the money. After training he goes to watch his opponent, Terry.

Finally the night of the fight arrives and Timothy has a bad case of cold feet. Jeff has a scheme which gives Timothy heart, and Jeff's proposition is to make Terry lose the fight or kill him with a gun. He tries it out on the Terror. Then the manager comes to Terry and tells him that the receipts for the night are small and threatens to make Terry a dead man if he doesn't win the fight. At last Timothy wins, but the manager has absconded with the money.

The next morning Timothy is accosted by a detective, who accuses him of forgery. He and Jeff jump on a street car, and the detective follows them on a sight-seeing bus, bound for Universal City. There Timothy in the visitors' gallery sees his double, the man wanted for forgery, working in a scene. He follows him when the latter is excused to take a smoke and knocking him out, Timothy dons his clothes and enters the set when they are ready for work again. He makes a wonderful hit, and after the scene is taken he goes to the manager's office and is given a contract at one thousand dollars a week.

Leaving the manager's office he is seen by the detective, who comes to Universal City, and, running around the studio, Timothy outwits and loses him. The detective then comes upon his double as he is awakening from the knock-out potion Timothy administered to him and makes the arrest. Timothy then is advertised extensively by the Universal Company and is on the road to fame and fortune.

THE WRATH OF CACTUS MOORE (Three Parts—Oct. 17).—The cast: Cactus Moore (William V. Mong); Charles, his son (John Ryan); Charles Reeves (E. F. Power); Elizabeth, his wife, and Reeva, his daughter (Peggy Coudray). Written and produced by William V. Mong.

Charles Reeves, Mayor of Bartow, lives with his daughter, Reeva, who loves and is loved by Charles Moore, a prosperous young man of the vicinity. When Charles is placing the engagement ring on Reeva's finger [illegible] her father's consent to their marriage, Mr. Reeves tells them why he cannot freely consent to their marriage.

Twenty-five years ago, he tells them, when he was a young college student, he returned home for a summer vacation. He arrived in the little Western village on the night that the young folks were holding their annual lawn dance. Accompanied by a friend, he went to the dance to renew old acquaintances. He met Elizabeth Willis, whom he greatly admired, and who thought favorably of him. Elizabeth accepted him for her partner for the next dance.

During the evening young Cactus Moore, so called because of his reckless living, was imbibing with his roistering companions at the village saloon. On the way to the ranch where they were employed they happened to think of the dance and decided to attend. Arriving there, Cactus finds the young college student dancing with and showing marked attentions to Elizabeth. This young Cactus resents, and after heaping insult after insult upon young Reeves and being unsuccessful in provoking a quarrel, he vents his spite upon others. Reeves offers himself to Elizabeth as her escort. Their friendship ripens into love, he courts her and they are married. Cactus, in his rough way, loves Elizabeth and cannot become reconciled to the jilt. He marries, however, and to him a son, Charles, is born. Twenty-five years have elapsed [illegible] for the man whom he believes tricked him out of Elizabeth's affection.

After telling the story to the young couple Mr. Reeves reminds Reeva that since her mother is dead she must decide for herself and follow the dictates of her own woman's heart in regard to her love for Charles. Some time later Cactus, now old and bent, is brought face to face with his real self when he appears unforbidden at the marriage feast of Charles and Reeva. His iron will, his temper and his deep-rooted hatred are broken by the sweet, gentle nature of his new daughter, Reeva.

SAFETY FIRST (Oct. 18).—Charlie and Moore at last commit a big robbery, but they cannot decide how the "swag" should be divided. They finally decide to put it in the safe and divide the money the next morning. But there is only one key to the safe, and Charlie keeps that. Moore hears Charlie planning to get the whole amount and plans revenge. He plants a bomb in the safe that is set to blow up at the time when Charlie has planned to get the money.

That night Charlie goes to rob the safe, and when he hears Moore coming hides in it. Moore and his pals close the door and then proceed to take the safe away. They lower it to the ground and then carry it behind an auto all over town. But by this time the hour for which the bomb is set is fast approaching, and all the parties concerned are getting a bit uneasy. The bomb exploded and all the crooks were blown to the winds.

SHE WANTED A FORD (Oct. 22).—The cast: Dan (Dan Russell); Gertrude (Gertrude Selby); Billie (Billie Ritchie).

Gertie arrives at the hotel with her man and then the trouble begins. At the hotel are a great many onlookers and among them is the dangerous Billie, as well as the jealous Dan. Billie at once forces his way to the front as he takes the flower that Gertrude gives the janitor. Then he pursues his advantage until Gertie says she must have an auto ride. He is stumped until Dan says that he will furnish the car.

In the meanwhile Dan and his friends have secured a car that is minus an engine. They plan to get inside and act as the engine themselves. So the two of them get inside and the auto starts. It is all very well until the darn thing starts down hill and then they lose control. They exceed the speed limit by a great deal and the cops follow. But in the end the motor gives out and the whole party comes to grief. Billie and his fair inamorita are left in the lurch with no car.

LAEMMLE.

PROWLERS OF THE JUNGLE (Special—Oct. 2).—Dr Lutton is a missionary who has determined to convert the savages in Africa. The district in which he settles has been colonized by some Arabian traders, and one day he receives a call from one of these people. He leaves his sister in charge of another doctor named Rane and goes to the aid of the native who has called.

In the meantime the chief of a band of marauding savages is taken ill and sends for the doctor. Dr. Rane responds to the call, but finds that he can do nothing for the sick man, and the chief dies. The savages think that some wrong has been done, and at once go on the warpath. Dr. Lutton's wife takes the baby and hides in the woods. After an exciting time they are rescued from the dangers of the jungle.

THROUGH BABY'S VOICE (Two parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: The Husband (Douglas Gerrard); the Wife (Edna Maison); the Child (Zoe Rae). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by George Cochrane.

When the little one was four years old the mother returned to the old life of parties, dances, theaters and midnight suppers. The father accompanied her, but neither found any real happiness in life and soon came quarrels. Then they decided on a separation. A consultation with the old family lawyer, who had been her guardian prior to her marriage, resulted in the shrewd old gentleman conniving with a judge, who was one of his cronies. A separation was agreed upon and papers were drawn up, it being set forth in the agreement that neither party was to see the other, nor the child, who was to be left in the guardianship and care of the lawyer. It was also stipulated that the only means of communication between the two parties should be through the child.

As time went on, in their loneliness, came visions of their baby. And the little girl missed her mamma and papa. When her fifth birthday came around the lawyer planned a party for her. She called up mamma and invited her to the party. That afternoon the mother came to the lawyer's, but he would not permit her to see the little girl. While they were in the library the father called and the lawyer received him in the hall. The baby had phoned him, too, and invited him to the party. Then the instinct of paternity asserted itself, and he declared that he would see his child, "law or no law," and bounded up the stairs. In a moment the little one was in his arms and then he began helping her fix the electric light fixture candles.

Mother, meantime, had seen him run up the stairs, for she had overheard the loud talking in the hall. The lawyer quietly slipped into the library to watch events. Mother quietly slipped up the stairs and through the doorway of the nursery watched "Daddy" and Baby. The child saw her mother, squealed with delight and ran to her. They could not resist baby's appeal and a reconciliation soon followed.

BISON.

THE CONSPIRACY (Two Parts—Oct 21).—The cast: Dick Olney (Harry Carey); Matthew Montague (E N. Walleck); Hodges (L. C. Shumway); Majorie (Edith Johnson). Written by William Parker. Produced by Henry McRae.

Accused of stealing the annual report of the Great Western Railroad, thereby blocking a big deal, Dick Olney is discharged in disgrace by Matthew Montague, president of the road. Dick, a young man of good breeding, became an underling in the railroad office when his father lost his fortune. The president's daughter, Marjorie, knows this and is interested in Dick. Hodges, the president's secretary, is jealous. A money lender's note falling due, Hodges steals the annual report and sells information in it to the opposition road. To clear himself he throws suspicion on Dick. Dick saves the life of Marjorie and her mother, and Montague wishes to reward him. Dick pleads for reinstatement to prove his honesty. Montague decides to give him another chance.

Dick becomes suspicious of Hodges, and Jimmy, the office boy, learns that Hodges and a money lender, Gentry, are plotting to buy land through which the Great Western extension must pass, and to sell it to the railroad at a big price. When President Montague leaves on his special train to buy the land, Hodges and Gentry drug him. Dick discovers the conspiracy after the train leaves and he and Marjorie begin a mad race in her auto to catch the special. When the auto breaks down Dick gallops forward on a horse, hoping to flag the train at Charing Crossing. But he reaches there too late. The horse stumbles and falls on the track and Dick is pinioned under the animal.

A freight train is rushing upon them. A motorcycle officer saves Dick's life, so Dick borrows the motorcycle and he rides from an embankment onto the freight train. The train stops and Dick explains the situation. The engine is uncoupled and speeds after the special. The special arrives at Sanger Station. Hodges remains with the drugged president, while Gentry goes to buy the land. When Dick reaches Sanger, Montague is revived and sees Hodges' perfidy. Marjorie comes up in her auto and Dick, Marjorie and Montague race madly to the farm and block the sale in the nick of time. Gentry tells of Hodges' part in the conspiracy. Dick then marries Marjorie, as his future is assured.

BEANS AND BULLETS (Oct. 21).—The cast: President (Charles Conklin); his daughter (Lillian Peacock); Major, her suitor (Milburn Moranti); General, his rival (Jack Francis); Pedro, a peon (William Franey); his wife (Gale Henry). Scenario by Harry Wulze. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

A Major and General call on the President's daughter and make love to her. The officers fight over the girl's favor and decide to have it out in a duel. They each hire Pedro, who has escaped a wife, to throw pepper in the opponent's eyes to spoil the other's aim. Pedro does the same to both, and when they discover they have been unconsciously duped they take a few shots at Pedro to soothe their feelings.

They then decide to revolt in order to get the girl. They secure their army, consisting of two men, and secretly hold drill. This drill is discovered by two soldiers of the President's army and they hurry to tell the President of the revolution. The soldiers desert and Pedro volunteers. The President is so tickled he promises Pedro the girl and future presidency.

The battle takes place, but Pedro runs away. His wife, on her way to deliver washing, discovers him. Pedro retreats and the wife hurls a stick of dynamite after him. He ducks, but it lands in the midst of the revolutionist army and subdues it.

The President forgives the revolutionists and all go to a garden fete in honor of Pedro, the hero. The wife, having been looking for him, sees him enjoying a fandango, and she routs the whole of both armies and leads Pedro to the washing.

requests that he may be present at the "killing." Later Harry takes Lucile to the cabaret, where Antonio is playing. Harry asks Antonio to meet his lady friend and as he is about to introduce them it is discovered that Lucile is the runaway wife and Antonio suspects Harry as the lover.

Antonio opens fire upon Harry and a general uproar in the cafe follows. Gaston succeeds in quieting Antonio and explanations follow and there is a reconciliation between husband, wife and friend.

PAT'S PASTING WAYS (Oct. 20). The cast: Pat (Pat Rooney); the Village Constable (Charles Briden); Vivian (Jane Bernoudy); Her Husband (Ed. Brady); Katie (Marcia Moore). Written by Chas. J. Wilson, Jr. Produced by R. A. Dillon.

Pat, the village bill-poster, is in love with Katie, daughter of the constable. All goes well until Pat comes upon the notice that the village council has decided to prohibit posting bills on stationary objects. It means that Pat is out of business. Vivian, the advance agent for the one-night-stand company, arrives in the town broke, and depending on the advance sale to bring the company from the last stand. She hunts up Pat, who tells her of the new order.

She starts flirting with Pat, and finally wins him over completely. Pat decides to take a chance and post the bills. He throws Katie aside for Vivian, and Katie is heartbroken. Pat attempts to evade the law by posting the bills on moving objects, such as cows, pigs, chickens, etc. He even discovers the constable asleep, and in his haste pastes one of the bills on his back. In the meantime Katie has gone to see her rival, and discovered her replacing her wedding ring and gazing at a picture of her husband, the manager.

The novelty of the advertising attracts the villagers, and Vivian is doing a good business. Katie decides to take a hand, and recognizing the husband at the depot, she tells him that his wife is going to run away with the billposter. As the picture ends, Pat has to flee, and pastes his last poster on a moving freight train.

PHILIP HOLDEN-WASTER (American—Five Parts—Oct. 9—No. 142). The cast: Philip Holden (Richard Bennett); Miles Holden (George Periolat); Louise Holden (Adrienne Morrison); Helen Landon (Rhea Mitchell); Robert Landon (Clarence Burton); Paul Merwin (Orral Humphrey).

Philip is a great discouragement to his brother, Miles, in whose home the young dilettante is living when the story opens. Louise Holden, wife of Miles, labors valiantly to interest her dreamy young brother-in-law in something besides literature, but fails in this until after great urging, Philip is induced to attend a bridge party given at the house. This marks the turning point in his career, for while marking time among the fashionables in his brother's drawing room, he is presented to Helen Landon, daughter of a wealthy banker.

The moment that Philip looks into the eyes of his adored, he loses interest in the book he is trying to write. He falls deeply in love with the girl. But he dares not tell her in so many words of his love, for just a few hours before they met he was informed that his account is overdrawn at the bank. Miles denounces Philip as a waster, doomed to a miserable end.

Helen's father, Robert Landon, is in league with Miles to corner a certain mining stock, D. L. & B. Their intention is to hammer the stock until nobody wants it and then buy in the concern on inside information they have obtained as to its real value. Pushed to consideration of material matters by the constant urgings of his brother and by the necessity for bestirring himself if he is ever to meet his beloved Helen on equal terms financially, Philip starts out looking for work.

When the young dabbler in literary wares announces to the head of a big business concern that he wants a job at $6,000 a year as a starter, the situation is irresistibly comic. The young fellow is turned away wherever he goes, until, entering the office of a mining stock shark, he finds an opportunity to sell stock on commission, taking his commissions in stock, which the promoter himself believes worthless. It is real artistry that accuates Philip laden with a collection of pictures of the mine location to sell stock. With the soul of an artist he expatiates to wealthy women on the beauty of the scenery surrounding the mine property, and with the luck that provided for shorn lambs, he sells it like hot cakes on this extraordinary plea. Then comes the surprise. The promoter receives a telegram which apprises him that immense quantities of ore have been uncovered.

The stock which Philip has been carrying round in his pocket is now worth a fortune. While trying to talk to his fiancee, for by this time he has proposed to Helen Landon, he overhears a plot between his supercilious banker brother and Landon, the father of Helen, to corner the market in D. L. & B.

Philip enters the stock market against the two plotters and buys in stock as fast as they hammer it down, obtaining it practically at his own figure before Landon and the elder Holden realize that they have been caught short. In this dilemma they discover that much of the stock they have been selling has fallen into the hands of Philip and Landon telephones in desperation to his putative son-in-law to "come on over." Philip is appealed to by the two market riggers to let them have enough of his stock to cover their shortage. Copying the superciliously superior air of his brother, Philip keeps them on the anxious seat for a time, but finally yields with the smiling consent of Helen.

REDEEMED (Turner—Five Parts—Oct. 9—No. 143).—The cast: Roma Sano (Maud Stewart); Father Anselm (Henry Vibart); Harry Somers (Tom Powers); Marea (Florence Turner).

The plot is centered about Roma Sano, an Italian actress, who has achieved success on the London stage, but whose popularity and prosperity have caused her to become arrogant to the extent that she ignores her peasant uncle and aunt, who befriended her when she was a child in Italy. Roma has been receiving the attentions of Edward Grimshaw, a man about town. Grimshaw is married and dependent on his wife's income for support of his profligacies. In order to bring Grimshaw, whom she loves, to her feet, Roma carries on a secondary affair with Harry Somers, a wealthy young London bachelor.

Roma learns that her little cousin, Marea, has been left destitute by the death of her parents, and that the priest of the Italian village in which she was born is sending Marea to her. The parents of the little girl, Marea, are the uncle and aunt of Roma, who cared for her when she was a child. In a letter, Marea implores her cousin to aid her in recognition of the aid that was once given the actress. Roma is furious at what she considers the burden of caring for Marea. She receives the news with every evidence of displeasure. Marea arrives at Roma's home while the latter is at the theater. She is taken in charge by Roma's housekeeper.

In the next few days Marea becomes somewhat accustomed to her new surroundings. When Harry Somers calls at the house he is attracted by the beauty of the little Italian girl and volunteers to teach her English. A friendship is thus established between them. Roma becomes jealous of Somers' attitude toward the girl. Somers takes advantage of Marea under a promise of marriage and the child is frantic with shame, urging that they be married immediately. Confronted with this situation, Marea goes to Roma for aid and comfort, only to be denounced as a schemer. Marea is turned out of the actress' home and becomes a wanderer. When she is almost in the depths of despair her child is born, and, having no means of caring for it, she leaves it at the gate of a mansion.

This turns out to be the home of John Gordon, a wealthy philanthropist, whom Roma has married since the collapse of her affair with Grimshaw, though she maintains a liaison with the latter. Roma has refused to accept the responsibility of motherhood and so it comes about that Marea's child is adopted by the Gordons. Soon after, Roma is caught in a compromising situation with Grimshaw. Gordon turns her off. During the dramatic scenes that attend Roma's exposure, Father Anselm, a fine old priest, tries to compose the family difficulties, but without success. Gordon attaches himself to the mission conducted by Father Anselm, settling part of his fortune on his faithless wife.

Marea, reduced to penury and want, enters the church in which Gordon is playing the organ. Gordon insists upon aiding the girl. Marea discovers plots laid by bad characters to attack Gordon because of his crusade against vice. One day when he goes to the theater in an effort to induce Roma to surrender the boy. Marea follows him, with the idea of protecting him from harm. There she finds the little boy at play. By a cross about his neck she recognizes her own child. Confronted by Marea, Roma becomes panic stricken and sets fire to the structure accidentally. Marea seizes the child and escapes. She is overpowered by smoke and is fainting when rescued by Gordon who later marries her.

BLUFF (American—Five Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Louie (C. William Kolb); Mike (Max M. Dill); Claire (May Cloy).

Louie, the janitor of a large New York building, leaves New York for a small town to try to work out his formula for the "manufacturing of gold from baser metals." He has picked at random numerous chemicals and intends to try them out. He arrives in Solemn, where lives Mike, a confectioner, and Claire, a young school teacher. Mike and Louie become friends and both are working on the chemicals. Into the town comes a young millionaire, who falls in love with Claire, but she will have none of him until he proves that he can do something. He hears of Mike's discovery and persuades Mike and Louie to form a company with him, and they call themselves "The Big Three." They go to New York, and there by bluff interest a Wall Street magnate in their proposition. After many difficulties it is found that Mike's formula will not make gold of baser metals, but that it is a perfection of "puncture proof rubber." This formula brings Mike and Louie riches and Claire discovers that her millionaire can do something and agrees to marry him.

BEAUTY.

THAT SHARP NOTE (Two Parts—Oct. 19).—The cast: Beezer (John Sheehan); Vivienne (Carol Halloway).

Beezer leaves America with a note for Ambassador Jones to deliver from "Filson" to "the Flyser." After beating up a bunch of "Kingland's" spies, and some other adventures, he hands the note over, and the Ambassador starts out to deliver it. Soon after, Beezer receive word that "Filson's" quarrel has been patched up with "the Flyser" and the note does not reach its destination.

VOGUE.

DUCKING A DISCORD (Two Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Rube (Rube Miller).

Rube's wife is an expert at the Dutch In and Out. The house is filled with the music of the old accordion from dawn to dark. He decides to get rid of her, puts her in a bag and throws her in the river. She is rescued by Ben, who loves her devotedly. Together they plan to give Rube a scare. They cover their faces with flour, and she walks in on her husband in the midst of his lovemaking with Lillian. He thinks she is a spirit. Another time, when the pickpocket gang to which Rube belongs meets at their rendezvous, she appears again, and succeeds in crabbing the game forever for her erring husband.

AMERICAN.

CITIZENS ALL (Two Parts—October 9).—The cast: Johann Wagner (Clarence Burton); Karl—his son (Edward Coxen); Henri Dupin (George Field); Elsie— his daughter (Winnifred Greenwood); Mrs. Flannigan (Louise Lester).

An argument between Johann Wagner, a music teacher, and Henri Dupin, a fencing master, is the cause of blighting their warm friendship. Intending to separate their son and daughter, Karl and Elsie, who are in love, they both seek new quarters, but unknown to each other, come to the same boarding house. Thus reunited, Karl and Elsie determine to marry. The two young people follow the advice of Mrs. Flannigan, the landlady, and hasten to the city clerk's office and declare their intentions of becoming citizens of the United States. Next they proceed to the parson's and are made man and wife.

Time passes very slowly for the two old fathers, but not even Mrs. Flannigan, the genial landlady, can effect a treaty of peace between them. Neither can she prevail on them to forgive their children. At last one day Mrs. Flannigan comes with the good news that an heir has been born to the young house of Wagner. Both fathers don their best clothes and go to their home prepared to forgive all. When they meet at the crib side of the infant, however, their animosity returns, only to be soothed away forever by their grandchild's gurgle.

Deciding that the most fitting celebration they can indulge in will be to take out citizenship in the grand old U. S. A., Grandfather Wagner and Grandfather Dupin leave arm in arm for the clerk's office.

THE FRANCHISE (Two Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Gilbert Warren (Edward Coxen); Louise Talcott (Winnifred Greenwood); Arthur Fenton (George Field).

Gilbert Warren and Arthur Fenton are law partners. Fenton is dealing in some crooked deals, and after continued reprimands, Warren severs his connection with the firm and opens an office of his own. Both men are in love with Louise Talcott, daughter of Colonel Talcott. She favors Warren, but when he leaves town Fenton begins to make things look black for him. The street railway franchise is about to be brought up and is given into the hands of Warren to check up. Fenton hears of this and reports to Colonel Talcott and the Mayor of the town that Warren is a grafter. The Colonel puts up a deal on Warren to test him out and he is found to be strictly honest. Later the Colonel and the Mayor apologize to Warren and Louise creeps into his arms.

GAUMONT.

REEL LIFE NO. 22 (Oct. 1).—The baseball game played by marionettes announced for Gaumont's "Reel Life" Number 21 has been changed to Number 22. It has been replaced by a series of scenes showing "Raising White Leghorn Chickens." In addition to the baseball game, which is a reproduction of a world's series game last season, there are two other interesting subjects. One shows "The Wood Workers of the Southern Mountains." The other records adventures during "A Night With a Police Dog."

The wood workers are mountaineers who with a few simple tools make furniture that is notable for its strength and real beauty. There is nothing ornate about the various pieces, but each is a charming example of simplicity in design and construction.

The night work of the police dogs is interesting. The manner in which the dog is sent scouting by the officer it accompanies, and how it has been trained to meet any emergency is vividly portrayed.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 56 (Oct. 4).—This release pictures the charming spots in Baltimore, which city contains so many beautiful monuments, parks and squares.

Druid Hill Park, Mount Vernon Place, the beautiful new home of The John Hopkins University, the inner harbor with its fleet of oyster boats, and the magnificent public buildings are among the more important views recorded by the camera.

On the same reel with Baltimore there is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic entitled, "Abe's Opossum." In this picture a whimsical pickaninny goes in pursuit of the little marsupial that is the goal of every ebony-hued American.

STEPPING FORWARD (Two Parts—Oct 19). The cast: Elisha Graham (George Larkin); Prudence Brown (Mabel Van Buren).

Justice Brown refuses to allow his daughter, Prudence, to marry Elisha Graham, a poor young farmer, and tells her that she must marry Sprague, a rich man, who is to succeed him as justice. Fearing the justice will foreclose a mortgage on Elisha's farm, Prudence leaves home. President Lincoln has called for volunteers—and in a distant town Prudence is inspired to sing a patriotic ballad at the recruiting office. She is adopted by a famous singer who hears her.

After the war Prudence is known as Mlle. Levain, the prima donna. She writes to the postmaster at her former home and is told that Elisha was killed in battle. But Elisha recovers and after a vain search for Prudence, whose identity is hidden in that of Mlle. Levain, he surrenders to the charms of another girl.

Many years later, after achieving fame and fortune on the operatic stage, Mlle. Levain retires and tells her friends that she is entering upon the evening, or westward journey, of her life. She returns to her old home.

Because of the bickering of his son and daughter-in-law, Elisha gives them his farm and pension money, and becomes an inmate of the Soldiers' Home. He and Prudence meet and decide it is not too late to consummate their romance. Justice Sprague, who has never forgiven Elisha, tells the son the wedding can be prevented because Elisha and Prudence are paupers. Elisha declares that he is still strong enough to support Prudence. The daughter-in-law discovers that Prudence is the wealthy Mlle. Levain, and Prudence and Elisha find a happy destiny in stepping westward together.

INOCULATING HUBBY (Oct. 13).—The cast: Hubby (Neal Burns); Wife (Betty Compson); Mother (Stella Adams); Prof. Pill (Harry Rattenberry).

Peace prevailed in the Newlyweds household. An announcement from Mrs. Newlywed's mother that she is coming to teach the young people how to run their house does not appeal to Mr. Newlywed and he consults his friend the doctor, who offers him but little consolation.

Mother-in-law arrives and at once sets about running things. Mr. Newlywed, unable to stand it, comes home only after mother has retired. This state of affairs is not to be tolerated and when mother sees an ad. in the paper of a discovery by Prof. Pill she fancies she sees a way out of the difficulties. The serum discovered by Prof. Pill when injected into a wayward husband makes him gentle and home-loving.

Mother goes to see the professor and arrives in his office as he is in conference with the doctor. Overhearing the plot against Newlywed, the doctor, while the professor and mother are viewing the laboratory, substitutes plain water for the serum. Later hubby is put wise and when mother stabs him with the "hypo" he at once begins to meow and purr in a most feline manner. Mother and wife are horrified as hubby laps the cream from his saucer.

Finally mother calls Prof. Pill to restore her son-in-law to reason. Ere he can do so the adoption of three kittens by hubby causes both the wife and the doctor friend to upbraid mother so terribly that she grabs her belongings and hurriedly leaves for home. THOSE PRIMITIVE DAYS (Oct. 14).—The cast: Heela Hoola (Betty Compson); Stony Kone (Dave Morris), Willy Walla (Neal Burns).

It was in the dawn of civilization and Heela Hoola was the belle of Stonycave. Her admirers loaded her with beads and bear claws. Now a certain rich citizen of Stonycave, named Stony Kone, although he owned the largest cave in the city, could never get a mate and his only admirer was Miss Stone Hatchet, who was neither beautiful nor young. It chanced that Willy Walla, who was a young swell of the town, saw Heela Hoola, and his heart beat violently against the wolf skin which clad him and he decided then and there to have Heela Hoola for his own.

Among the domestic unhappiness in Stony Cave the most violent was that of Leaping Loo, and to increase it was the fact of the "other man," Little Big Club, whose infatuation for Leaping Loo was the gossip of every cave in the town. Willy Walla having made a good impression with Heela Hoola, is knocked on the head by Stony Kone and the fair Heela Hoola is violently dragged away to Stony Kone's cave.

Meanwhile Little Big Club has taken a violent fancy to Leaping Loo and pursues her with his love. Her husband, Hairy Hand, is furiously jealous, and, not knowing where his mate is, goes in search. He is told by Miss Stone Hatchet that Stony Kone has a woman in his cave and Hairy Hand goes in to see if it is his own woman. A terrific battle ensues and Hairy Hand emerges from Stony Kone's cave bearing Heela Hoola, whom Stony Kone had captured.

He turns Heela Hoola over to Willy Walla and together they go to Willy's cave in great happiness. Stony Kone's heart and bruises are healed by Miss Stone Hatchet, and the fair Leaping Loo elopes with Little Big Club and leaves Hairy Hand to shift for Himself.

THEIR COLLEGE CAPERS (Oct. 14).—The cast: The Boy (Harry Ham); The Girl (Billie Rhodes); Prof. Snitch (Eddie Barry); The Lady Principal (Stella Adams).

The co-ed college is kept lively and the Lady principal and professor are kept alert by the pranks of the lively boy and girl students. Ringleader among the boys is Harry; Billie among the girls. It being a sober college town, prize-fighting and such inhumane sports are tabooed. Harry learns that there is a secret prize fight held. He tells the boys and all decide to go. Billie and the girls decide to break the monotony of life with a feed in their dormitory and invite the boys to come. Harry sneaks from the football practise grounds and Billie from the basket ball court and the two hold a little love feast by the wall which separate their school grounds.

Prof. Snitch, who is by no means a favorite with the boys, misses Harry and suspects where he is. He at once sends the rest of the boys to their rooms and goes to the basket ball court, where he reports to the lady principal, who misses Billie and at once accompanies Prof. Snitch to the wall where the guilty parties are found and sent to their dormitories for twenty-four hours. This happens the very day of the fight. Harry declares he will go nevertheless. The girls' feed schedule is for the same evening. Boys send the message that they cannot come, as they are going to the fight. Billie wishes the girls could go and the boys say they will take them if they will wear boys' clothes. They decide to do so and in male attire all sneak out of the dormitory and go to the fight.

Prof. Snitch also decides to sneak to the fight. The police are apprised of the fight and the place where it is held is raided and all the students with Prof. Snitch land in jail. A phone call brings the lady principal and faculty to the jail, where the young folks are released. Prof. Snitch, who loves the Lady Principal, is rejected by her and is left weeping by the wall. The girls end their eventful day with a pillow fight.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES.

A WOMAN'S DARING (American—Five Parts—Oct. 5).—The cast: Philip Rogers (Edward Coxen); Claire (Winifred Greenwood); Louis Harding (George Field); John Black (Chas. Newton). Directed by Edward Sloman.

"The Woman" is brought up on a farm by a miserly uncle who denies her the company of other young people. It is no wonder then that she is ensnared by a Have-a-good-time-Jack type. When the uncle learns her plight he puts her out. A storm is raging. The girl seeks shelter in the same place as the man who has seduced her. He persuades her to go to a nearby town and marry him. She does but shortly after the ceremony he discovers that he is already married, when his wife and the police come and the man deserted and alone the girl learns not that her uncle has been killed in the storm, and has left her no money. She takes it and goes to a small city where she lives.

Five years later her little son is quite a lad, and they are living happily. The woman is known as a widow. Two men fall in love with her, a prominent physician, and a broker. The broker wins his suit. Later her husband engages a chauffeur for the woman. When the man arrives at the house she discovers that it is the man who betrayed her. He threatens to expose her unless she keeps him supplied with money. She dares not refuse. He treats their son cruelly. One day the broker sees the chauffeur hit the lad and discharges him on the spot.

The chauffeur again threatens the woman, this time telling her that if he does not get his job back he will reveal the truth about her. The woman goes to her husband's office when he is not in, and meets the chauffeur there. He flourishes a gun and a struggle ensues. The man is shot and the woman runs away.

The coroner finds a locket in the hand of the dead man that belongs to the woman. He keeps the incriminating bit of evidence for the trial. The woman hides herself, unknowing that her husband has been arrested for the murder. A vision of the penitentiary causes her to hasten to court where she tells of the man's attack upon her. This testimony clears the husband, and both are discharged. She determines to have her mind free of the shadow of her secret, and tells her husband the true story of her life when they return home. She is forgiven.

THE VOICE OF LOVE (American—Five Parts—Oct. 19).—The cast: Philip Morse (Edward Coxen); Marie Osmond (Winnifred Greenwood); Franklin Davis (George Field); Henry Martin (Harvey Clark); Violet (Laura Sears).

Marie Osmond is an astrologer. Among her patrons is Henry Winters, who is in love with her. She tells Winters that she cannot marry him because of her being suspected of the murder of her husband some years before. Davis, who was present at the time of Marie's husband's death, is also a frequent caller at her house. Philip Morse comes to Chicago and here meets Marie, who falls in love with him. He is fascinated by the woman. He is called to New York and there meets Violet, a young girl, who is in reality Marie's daughter. Marie hears of his meeting the girl and sends Davis to New York to separate them. She later finds out that Violet is her own daughter, and after many troubles she is cleared of the murder of her husband and makes Morse happy by becoming his wife.

IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE (Quality Pictures Corp.—Five Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Dick Stansbury (Francis X. Bushman); Beverly Ryerson (Beverly Bayne); Mrs. Ryerson (Helen Dunbar); Doctor Montell (Henri Bergman); Helen Wardlow (Belle Bruce); Major Blaine (Edmund Elton); Mrs. Blaine (Mrs. La Roche); Lynn Hardi (William Davidson); Chinese Valet (Charles Fang); Negro Butler (Harry D. Blakemore); Mammy (Liza Miller). Directed by Frances X. Bushman.

Dick Stansbury chooses a life of travel and pleasure rather than a more useful career. He returns from three years of foreign travel. His uncle, Major Blaine, interests him in a bold breach of ethics made by one of the foreign diplomats, Doctor Montell, but as yet nothing has been proved against the doctor, as he knows all the men in the Secret Service in Washington. Dick met him abroad, and Major Blaine persuades him to undertake the task of Doctor Montell's unmasking.

Beverly Ryerson has a friend, an eccentric young authoress, Helen Wardlow, who is disgusted because, she says, there is no more originality in life. Beverly assures her that such is not the case. Dick, Beverly, Doctor Montell, Helen, Mrs. Ryerson, Beverly's step-mother, and her nephew, Lynn Hardi, who is loaning her money to pay her bridge debts, and who in return demands that she aid his cause with Beverly, are all at the Diplomats' Ball. Montell interest the girls and they induce Mrs. Ryerson to invite the men to a party at her country-house. Dick seizes the opportunity to ensnare the doctor in a plot that will prove his deceptions against the government. Dick has invented a "machine gun," supposed to fire a bomb that will burst anywhere within several hundred feet of an airship, asphyxiating the pilot and passengers with poisonous gas. He brings the model of the gun with him to the house-party, and takes care to talk about his invention where Montell can overhear him. He is soon approached by Montell with a proposition to deceive his own government, and sell the model to a foreign nation.

Dick asks for time to consider the offer. Montell is determined to have the invention at once, and Hardi attempts to steal it for him, but is prevented by a Secret Service man. His reason for this move is that in trying to discredit his rival he has told Beverly that Dick is a traitor to his country. He has arranged for Beverly to overhear Dr. Montell and Dick talking about the invention. Though Dick has so far refused to sell, she fears he may succumb to the doctor's inducements, and to save him Beverly surreptitiously takes the model to her own room, though it is soon returned to Dick by one of his detectives.

Montell and two accomplices then try to steal the model. Dick has been warned of their approach. He extends a wire from one of the house-lights to the model, and gets the janitor to operate a magneto at a signal. When the three malefactors step on a wet rug with the machine, they are held fast by the sudden shock of the electricity and caught by Dick. The ignominious recall of Dr. Montell by his own country is inevitable. Dick spares Hardi, since he has plotted against him only as a rival, not against him as a representative of the foreign government.

In order to clear Beverly's mind of any possible doubt as to his loyalty to the nation, Dick next day asks her to accompany him to a junk dealer, to whom he offers his "wonderful invention." The junk-dealer finally consents to give him twenty-five cents for it. Out of sentiment, however, Beverly buys it back for $25. A happy denouement follows, and Helen, having found ample material for a plot, types busily away on her new story.

ROMEO AND JULIET (Quality Pictures Corp.—Eight Parts—Special Release).—The cast includes Francis X Bushman as Romeo and Beverly Bayne as Juliet. Scenario made from William Shakespeare's drama by John Arthur, Rudolph de Cordova and John W. Noble. Directed by John W. Noble, Edward Elsner and Rudolph de Cordova.

The Montagues and the Capulets, two noble houses of Verona, are at enmity with each other. Romeo, the heir of the Montagues, fancies himself in love with Rosaline, a pale beauty who scorns all men. In order to make him forget, his friends, Benvolio and Mercutio, persuade him to go with them masked to the great Capulet feast. There he sees Juliet, the daughter of the Capulets, and the two young people fall deeply in love with each other at their first glance. Juliet secures permission to go to Friar Laurence's cell for confession, and accompanied by her old nurse, she joins Romeo there and they are married.

Meanwhile, quarreling has continued between the hangers-on of the two houses of Montague and Capulet, until the loftiest members are drawn into it. In a street brawl Mercutio, Romeo's friend, is killed by Tybalt, a nephew of Lady Capulet, and Tybalt is himself killed by Romeo. Prince Escalus banishes Romeo from Verona. At the risk of his life Romeo postpones leaving the city in order to visit his young bride and bid her farewell.

Scarcely has Romeo taken his departure when Juliet's parents tell her that Count Paris has asked for her hand in marriage. They will listen to none of her entreaties and refusals, but tell her to prepare at once to be married to Paris. In despair she goes to Friar Laurence, who gives her a medicine which apparently causes death. Her family mourns her as dead and she is taken in state to the ancient tomb of the Capulets.

Friar Laurence has given to a brother monk, Friar John, a letter for Romeo telling him that Juliet is alive, so that he may be at the tomb when she awakes and take her away to Mantua. But Friar John is unable to deliver the letter and Romeo is left in ignorance of the fact that Juliet's death is feigned.

He goes to her tomb, and there meets Paris. The two fight, and Paris is slain. Taking his farewell of Juliet, Romeo kills himself on her tomb. Awaking at the appointed time, Juliet sees Romeo dead beside her, and, snatching his dagger, buries it in her own heart. There they are found by the guard and Friar Laurence. Both Montagues and Capulets come to mourn. In their mutual grief, the hatred of years is forgotten, and a statue in pure gold is raised to commemorate the story of the two noble lovers.

THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY (Episode No. 8—"In the Shadow of Death"—Two parts—Oct. 9).—The morning after the ball at which Mrs. Clayton's necklace was stolen by a Crimson Stain henchman and passed to Stanley, who was in disguise as Pierre, Stanley visits Florence to explain the circumstances. He shows her the necklace and as she is looking at it a hand reaches out through the portieres and grabs it.

Stanley tears down the portiers and reveals the masked figure, whom he engages in a fight. In the melee, the masked figure drops the necklace. Stanley tears off the figure's hood, but under it is another hood, and before Stanley can unmask it, the figure eludes him and runs up the stairs. Stanley follows. The masked figure, however, makes good its escape.

Confident that Vanya can throw some light on the mystery, Stanley goes to her apartment. Vanya makes love to him and while in embrace, she extracts his revolver from his hip pocket and later, when opportunity presents itself, she substitutes blank cartridges, and slips the gun back into Stanley's pocket without Stanley's knowledge. Returning to his house, Stanley puts the necklace in the safe; then hurries away to keep an apointment.

In the meantime in the den of the Crimson Stain, Pierre is exorting his gang for permitting themselves to be fooled by Stanley at the ball. Pierre wants the necklace. Not knowing where it is kept, he decides that Florence is the medium through which he must discover its hiding place. Florence is inveigled to Clayton's studio.

As Pierre and Vanya are waiting in Clayton's studio, an automobile drives up and someone disguised as Pierre enters the studio. The real Pierre attacks his imitator and after binding him tears off his disguise, revealing Clayton. Shortly after, Florence comes to the studio and the waiting chauffeur follows her into the studio and attempts to prevent her from entering. Florence screams and as she runs into the studio she is dumfounded to see Pierre. The chauffeur attacks Pierre

Pierre hurls the chauffeur from him and escapes through a door leading to the roof of the house. The chauffeur throws off his disguise, revealing Stanley. By the time Stanley reaches the roof, Pierre has succeeded with the help of the masked figure in getting a rope stretched from that house to the one across the street.

As Pierre crawls hand over hand on the rope, Stanley pulls out his gun and fires at him. Not knowing that the bullets were changed by Vanya, Stanley is amazed at the futility of his shots. Throwing the gun down, Stanley takes out a knife and cuts the rope just as Pierre is half way across. As he falls, Pierre swings into a window, escaping with minor bruises. With a mocking laugh Pierre disappears, leaving Stanley to wonder whether he is man or devil.

THE YELLOW MENACE (Episode 8—"The Time Clock Bomb"—Two parts—Oct. 23).—The action in this episode shows Official Circles in Washington to be even more alarmed at Ali Singh's deeds and the extent of his resources. Manning works under strict orders to run him down in any possible way, and to see that the formula for quadrinolite does not leave the country. A fortunate accident helps in this when Margaret Bronson, recuperating at the seaside, sees Hong Kong Harry negotiating with the captain of a tramp steamer. Ali Singh's messenger is seized and the formula recovered, whereupon the messenger commits suicide. Margaret Bronson in terror of the safety of her lover and her brother, insists that they leave their present residence. They succeed in escaping just before the house is blown to pieces.

THE SOCIAL BUCCANEER (Five Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Chattfield Bruce (J. Warren Kerrigan); Marjorie Woods (Louise Lovely); Miss Goldberg (Maud George); Caglioni (Harry Carter); Nathan Goldberg (Marc Robbins); Sir Archibald Bamford (Hayward Mack). Scenario by Fred Mynton. Directed by Jack Conway.

Chattfield Bruce, in China, buying goods for an American firm, is impressed by the conduct of Wong Lee, a pirate, who plies his occupation solely for the purpose of giving to the poor the rice and treasures he steals from the rich.

The Chinese pirate has been particularly active in his depredations against the rich shipowner, Fong Wo Chong. The merchant offers a reward for the pirate's apprehension and Caglioni, one of Wong Lee's henchmen, betrays his master. Bruce discovers the fact in time to notify Wong Lee. In gratitude, the pirate gives the American a ring, guaranteed to give the wearer the allegiance of Chinamen in any part of the world.

When Bruce returns to America he resumes his position in good society and becomes noted for his generosity to the poor. He is reputed to receive large incomes from his estates, but in reality Bruce has adopted the Wong Lee method of equalizing the wealth of the world. Wong Lee's son comes to New York and opens a store in Chinatown, as the base of operations for Bruce's activities.

To provide himself with an occupation that will give him wider scope for his practicing his peculiar style of philanthropy, Bruce retains his position with Nathan Goldberg, a merchant with social aspirations for his daughter. Marjorie Woods, a schoolmate of Miss Goldberg, arrives from Europe with Sir Archibald Bamford, a bankrupt nobleman, following closely in her wake, his eyes upon the fortune Miss Woods is reputed to possess.

Goldberg has purchased for his daughter a string of pearls of great value. There is arranged a lawn party by the Goldbergs as a welcome to Marjorie. To this the Goldbergs invite everybody listed in the social register. Goldberg hires detectives to guard the pearls. Unknown to Bruce the betrayer of Wong Lee has come to America and Caglioni is now a member of the local detective force and in charge of the arrangements for protecting the Goldberg pearls.

Bruce has arranged that Wong Lee's son shall act as one of the waiters at the garden party. At an opportune time Bruce gets the Goldberg pearls into his hands, and clumsily drops them to the ground, when, in picking them up, the young Chinaman substitutes worthless imitations for the string of expensive pearls and slips the real ones into his wide sleeve. The Goldberg pearls were intended to be subsequently disposed of through the Chinaman's source of distribution, Bruce to use the proceeds to build a hospital for the infirm and afflicted poor.

Bruce and Marjorie have been invited to spend the night at the Goldbergs. Bruce wanders into the Goldberg drawing room in time to witness the burglary of the wall-safe where Goldberg deposited the spurious pearls for safekeeping. Caglioni is concerned in the burglary and has also recognized Bruce as the man who, in China, warned Wong Lee of his danger.

Marjorie, restless, wanders into the drawing rom and is another witness to the burglary. The girl is mystified by Bruce's strange conduct. Bruce confesses to Marjorie that he is a social buccaneer. Miss Woods induces him to abandon his peculiar pastime and become a good and dutiful husband.

PARAMOUNT.

HER FATHER'S SON (Morosco—Five Parts—Oct. 12).—The cast: Frances Fletcher (Vivian Martin); Lieut. Richard Harkness (Alfred Vosburgh); William Fletcher (Herbert Standing); Betty Fletcher (Helen Jerome Eddy); John Fletcher (Joe Massey); Williard Gordon (Jack Lawton); "Mammy" Chloe (Lucille Ward); Mose (Tom Bates). Directed by William Taylor.

Frances Fletcher is the daughter and only child of John Fletcher, the poor brother of wealthy William Fletcher. The two brothers have been long separated by a quarrel but William, the rich southern planter, writes in his old age to John, saying that he has heard of John's youngster and would like to adopt the "boy" as his own son to be co-heir with his only child, Betty, who is about the same age.

Dying after being crushed by a tree, John Fletcher binds Frances with the promise to go to her Uncle's masquerading as a boy. Her name is changed to Francis and as a boy accompanied by "mammy" Chole she goes to the wonderful Southern home of her uncle. Francis does not come up to her uncle's expectation of what a fire-eating Southern gentleman should be, but she does make a warm friend of cousin Betty.

The night of Betty's coming out ball, Francis dresses up as a girl in the crinolines of the period and Lieut. Richard Harkness, a West Pointer, believing her "Betty's girl-cousin from St. Louis," falls desperately in love with her.

In the midst of the gaiety a courier brings the news of the Southern States seceding. It turns friend against friend.

Her Southern sympathies get Francis into many difficulties for she masquerades as a spy and deceives her lover, the Union officer, Richard Harkness. But when everything seems wrong and Francis is challenged for "the satisfaction due a gentleman" by Harkness on the field of honor appears the Southern beauty, Frances Fletcher, and, learning all, Harkness wins the hand and heart of the South's fairest.

GREATER VITAGRAPH (V-L-S-E).

THE FIRM OF GIRDLESTONE (Five Parts—Oct. 9).—The cast: John Girdlestone (Charles Rock); Ezra Girdlestone, his son (Fred Groves); Tom Dimsdale (Hayford Hobbs); Major Tobias Clutterbuck (Wyndham Guise); Kate Harston (Edna Flugrath); Rebecca (Molly Terraine). Scenario by Bannister Merwin. Directed by Harold Shaw.

John Girdlestone, the head of the firm of Girdlestone, is a puritanical old merchant, with religion ever on his lips, but who has neither morality nor even ordinary decency where his business is concerned. When his life-long friend, John Harston, is deadly sick, Girdlestone obeys the summons to his bedside. He sees in his friend's daughter, Kate, whom the dying man commits to his guardianship, only a source of revenue for the firm of Girdlestone.

He plans to marry her to his son, Ezra, a disagreeable youth. Ezra has been carrying on an intrigue with Rebecca, one of the maids in the house. Kate fears her guardian's son, and is overjoyed when some distant relations, the Dimsdales, insist on her visiting them. Young Tom Dimsdale and she are soon the best of friends, but the romance is cut short by Girdlestone, who takes his ward home. Ezra meets a club friend of Tom's, the impecunious Major "Toby" Clutterbuck, who has no objections to winning Ezra's money, but who becomes indignant when the young man, trading on the Major's empty pockets, suggests a cheating partnership. Unfortunately for Ezra he puts his proposition in writing, and the Major subsequently blackmails old Girdlestone to the tune of a thousand pounds. The Major is later accepted by Mrs. Scully, a moneyed widow.

Tom Dimsdale joins Girdlestone as a partner, he investing 7,000 pounds. Only old Girdlestone and Ezra know how serious their financial position is. The old man is determined that his ward's money shall save the firm. He is horrified when Tom announces his engagement to Kate, and forbids all communication between the two until his ward is of age, merely allowing Tom to write one farewell letter, which he undertakes to deliver. It never reaches the girl, who cannot understand Tom's silence, though her guardian provides an explanation when he tells Ezra, in her hearing, that young Dimsdale is going to marry one of his mother's poor relations.

The ruse is not successful, for when Ezra proposes to Kate, she refuses him. His passion for the business has become a devouring mania. Girdlestone, studying his dead friend's will, observes that if Kate dies before she comes of age, her money goes to her guardian. So old Girdlestone plans Kate's death. He takes her to his lonely country house, Hampton Priory, and first tries to frighten her into her grave by personating the monk who is supposed to haunt the place. Then he decides on actual murder, and summons Ezra to the Priory.

But Kate, though a prisoner, has managed to convey a message to a lady driving past. It is the Major's fiancee, Mrs. Scully, and she writes to her dear Toby about old Girdlestone's treatment of his ward. Soon the Major and Tom Dimsdale are speeding to the Priory. They would have been too late had not the jealousy of the maid, Rebecca, proved her own undoing and Kate's salvation. The note which Ezra writes to Decoy Kate into the grounds that night is read by the maid, and interpreted as a lover's assignation. She steals Kate's hat and cloak and keeps the appointment herself, and it is she who receives the murderous blow and it is her body which the two ruffians carry to the railway line. They are just placing it on the rails when Kate confronts them, and in terror at the apparition father and son rush blindly away.

Tom and his party just reach the spot in time for Tom to catch the fainting girl in his arms. The two murderers in their headlong flight miss their footing and are dashed to death down a steep quarry. With the marriage of Tom and Kate, an era of happiness and prosperity opens both for the young lovers and the old firm, of which Tom is now the sole surviving partner.

A PRINCE IN A PAWNSHOP (Five Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: David Solomon (Barney Bernard); Maurice (Garry McGarry); Bobby (Bobby Connelly); Ethel (Charlotte Ives); Mary Brown (Edna Hunter); Thomas W. Stevins (Brinsley Shaw); Abe Goldstein (Lester Bernard). Directed by Paul Scardon.

David Solomon, a wealthy banker, is merciless in his dealings with his rich clients, from whom he exacts the highest interest. He aids the poor as much as possible. To facilitate his kindness among the people of the Ghetto, he runs there a pawnshop, unlike all others, for to the needy he measures out money, not according to the value of the articles they offer, but according to their needs. David's son, Maurice, is given to high living. It grieves his father, who is, however, consoled by the fact that his daughter, Ethel, seconds her father's charities by maintaining a day nursery for the children of the poor.

One day David sees a young girl fall unconscious in the street. He takes her to the hospital where the doctor tells him that the girl, Mary, is suffering from exhaustion. David's heart is touched and he resolves to make Mary's future his own care. When she has regained her strength he finds her a position as a model in a dress house of a friend, Silver. Ethel visits the dress house to buy gowns, bringing Maurice with her. He sees Mary for the second time, having noticed her upon the street. Maurice arranges to meet Mary under an assumed name, and pursues his courtship with all seeming love. She so learns to worship Maurice that she gives him all, not stopping to count the cost, nor to demand the wedding ring.

For a brief while Mary tastes of a great happiness, but Stevins, the man for whom she once worked, and who, because she would not encourage his advances, drove her from every honest position, naming her as a thief, visits the dress house to get gowns for "The Bunch of Flowers," a set of girls so termed by Maurice who has been much in their company. He recognizes Mary, repeats the accusation, and her employer discharges her. Mary returns to the little flat supported by Maurice, where she tells her story. Maurice has begun to tire of her. He seeks Stevins, who tells a seemingly truthful story. Maurice believes it and leaves Mary, writing to this effect. He, however, does not know that the girl he has wronged is about to become a mother.

Six years elapse, and we find Mary and her little son, living in poverty. Again she is rescued by David Soloman, who has called to see a deserving case next door to Mary, the object of his charity being Mrs. Payne, the landlady who drove Mary from her door, and who is now a paralytic. Mary tells David her story, showing him the letter from her lover. He recognizes the writing of his own son. He takes his grandson home with him where the child is seen by Maurice, who is conscience stricken. He institutes a search for Mary. Stevins, the man who hounded Mary, needs a further extension of his loan from David. But David, having learned what he has done, Mary forces him to the wall and ruins him. Goldstein, who has been a faithful secretary to David resigns. He loves the daughter of David, but being a poor man, does not declare his love and so decides to leave for other parts of the country.

David has watched the love which has existed between Ethel and Goldstein, and gives Goldstein a check for a large amount, quite sufficient to start them on their honeymoon. David informs Maurice by telegraph, not signing his name, where Mary may be found. He then goes to her with her little son. Maurice arrives, and makes reparation by marrying Mary.

THE MASKED BALL (Episode No. 3 of "The Scarlet Runner"—Two parts—Oct. 16).—Christopher Race is engaged to take in his Scarlet Runner Ponsonby Fitzgerald, an eccentric novelist, and a party of friends to a ball. The affair as planned by Fitzgerald is to end in a great joke, whereby his party will be awarded the prize for the most sensational entrance to the ball. Christopher looks forward to the adventure as a lark. He receives quite a shock when a revolver is given to him by Miss Dauvray, of the party, with instructions to use it if necessary. He begins to suspect that all is not as it should be, and that Fitzgerald and his friends are after more than the prize. At a critical moment of the ball Christopher halts proceedings with a shot, and makes Fitzgerald return the jewels he has taken from the dancers in his act as a highwayman. Fitzgerald makes the best of the situation and the affair is passed off as a joke. Miss Dauvray afterwards thanks Christopher for what he has done and tells him something of her relations with Fitzgerald. Christopher becomes interested, whereupon the girl suddenly changes her manner and laughs, declaring the whole thing, after all, to be a joke.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX—(Episode No. 8—"At the Ainsley Ball"—Two Parts—Sept. 25).—The cast: Jimmy Barton (Harry Fox); Beatrice Fairfax (Grace Darling); Martha Ainsley (Mae Hopkins).

Beatrice Fairfax receives a letter signed "Robert Wells," who writes: "Is there any way an honest man can prevent his girl from falling in love with a fascinating foreigner?' At Jimmy Barton's request the letter is handed to him, for he knows Bob. Jimmy visits Bob at his office and finds him much excited over the attention paid to his fiancee, Martha Ainsley, by Andre Versale.

A scene shows Versale calling upon Miss Ainsley. He is a fortune hunter and has established an accomplice in the Ainsley home as Martha's maid. Versale urges Martha to elope with him from a masque ball that is to be held at the Ainsley home on the following night. Jimmy and Beatrice secure cards to the ball from Bob, who also furnishes them with a description of the costumes to be worn by Versale and Martha. On the night of the ball the two men and the two women, their faces covered by masks, look exactly alike.

Versale mistakes Beatrice for Martha and urges her to elope. She agrees. He tells her he will go to her room and instruct the maid to prepare for the trip, taking all her jewels with her. Beatrice tells Jimmy and then detains Versale. Jimmy goes to the room, but after the jewels are in a hand-bag, the maid becomes suspicious and tears off Jimmy's mask. She sees she has been imposed upon, but Jimmy overpowers her and takes the bag with the jewels. He hurries downstairs and gives the bag to Beatrice.

Versale has completed all his arrangements. Jimmy leaves Beatrice a moment. While he is gone, Versale, believing Beatrice to be Martha, carries her bodily, despite her struggles, into a waiting automobile. When Jimmy gets back he is amazed to find Martha instead of Beatrice, and Beatrice, the jewels and Versale, gone. He tells Martha of Versale's duplicity. Accompanied by Bob, they jump into a high-power automobile and start in pursuit of Versale and Beatrice. A wild ride follows. Just at dawn, they come within sight of Versale's car. He starts shooting at them. Bob, who is driving, puts on the greatest speed and the car dashes alongside that of Versale, just as the adventurer puts a bullet into the front tire of Bob's car. As it explodes, Jimmy leaps

While Bob takes Martha home and policemen take charge of Versale and the chauffeur, Jimmy and Beatrice hurry to the office where they write the story of their night's experience.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX (Episode No. 9—"Outside the Law"—Two Parts—Oct. 2.)—The cast: Jimmy Barton (Harry Fox), Beatrice Fairfax (Grace Darling), Madeline Grey (Mae Hopkins).

Simeon Gold, editor of "The Vampire," a scandal weekly, is seated in his office. Madeline Grey, a pretty young matron, enters. She has been summoned by Gold who has in his possession some indecent letters she wrote to another man, prior to her marriage. Gold demands a large sum of money for them, under threat of publishing them. She is unable to secure the money and, terrified, writes to Beatrice Fairfax for advice.

Beatrice shows the letter to Jimmy Barton, and they decide to go together to Mrs. Gold's home and from her learn her story. Jimmy later calls on Gold under pretext of interviewing him for his paper. The only information he gets from the blackmailer is that he keeps all of his private papers in his bedroom.

Jimmy watches the Gold home and forms the acquaintance of the vegetable man. By a liberal use of money the vegetable man consents to let Jimmy take his place. Thus disguised, Jimmy gains access to the Gold kitchen and makes love to the maid. She is baking a pie, and while her back is turned, Jimmy secures an impression of the key to the kitchen door in a piece of dough. That night Jimmy, learning that all of the Gold household is out, visits the house. Beatrice, despite his protests, accompanies him. They have assured Mrs. Gray that her letters will be returned to her within a few hours.

Meantime Gold again visits her. He demands the money. In her eagerness to ward him off she declares she will have the letters within a short time despite him. Gold, alarmed by the threat, hurries home. There is a light in his bedroom. Taking his chauffeur with him, he hurries there and surprises Beatrice. She and Jimmy have just located the Grey letters in the hall safe, but have not secured them. Beatrice pretends she is a friend of Mrs. Grey. Gold backs her into an adjoining room and leaves the chauffeur to guard her. Then returning to the bedroom, he takes the letters from the safe.

Jimmy is hiding behind a curtain and when Gold turns, he finds himself looking into the muzzle of a revolver. Before he can move, Jimmy deals him a blow that renders him unconscious and secures the letters. Beatrice and the chauffeur in the next room hear him fall. The chauffeur rushes to his side, but also finds a revolver at his head. The maid, who has returned, enters the room, sees Jimmy and collapses as she exclaims:

"It's the vegetable man!"

With the letters, Jimmy and Beatrice back out of the room and escape. They hurry to Mrs. Grey, who burns the letters as the episode ends.

Subtitle: To The Huns, for the huge guns, an endless stream to the batteries. (2) A detachment of the infantry leaves its supply base for another attack.

London, England.—Australian and New Zealand troops, spared by the fierce battles on the Western Front, leave on their long journey home.

London, England.—A large audience hears the Bishop of London describe war conditions at an open-air service in one of the parks. Subtitle: He admonishes the public to aid their brothers in the field.

Chicago, Ill.—The treacherous deep is no longer to be feared as a new life belt, easily worn under the coat, is put into use on Lake Michigan. Subtitles: (1) You can even read your newspaper while calmly reposing on the water. (2) This belt also introduces a new water sport which promises to become very popular.

RAGTIME REVIEW

EDITED AND PUBLISHED BY
AXEL CHRISTENSEN
Vaudeville's "Czar of Ragtime," and a Leading Authority on Picture Music

It's a monthly musical magazine devoted to picture music and players, ragtime and popular music.

It will enable your pianist to strengthen your dramas and to make bright and snappy your comedy pictures.

It contains every month corking good piano pieces, rags, songs, etc., in fact, the music alone is worth several times the subscription price.

Our instruction department answers questions pertaining to picture playing, vaudeville or ragtime—free to subscribers.

All the new music of the country is reviewed every month so that the pianist can be up to date at all times and know what's good, what's new, what music to get and what not to get. This feature alone will insure your audiences getting only the best and most appropriate music and will make your player the musical leader in your locality.

The above are only some of the features of the Ragtime Review we haven't space to tell you more here, but we can assure you that it is of vital importance to you, your pianist and your audiences.

PATHE NEWS NO. 80 (Oct. 4).

Jersey City, N. J.—New Jersey National Guardsmen returning from service on the border receive an uproarious welcome from the huge multitudes that crowd the line of march. Subtitle: With a smooth and even step they swing into their armory after an absence of three months.

New York City.—A twin engine hydroplane built for the United States Government is capsized by collision with a launch while undergoing its first trial test.

Sheepshead Bay, N. Y.—Driving his perfectly timed racer at the record-breaking pace of 105 miles an hour, Jack Aitken captures the 250-mile Astor Cup motor classic. Subtitles: (1) The racers maintain the same clip around the steeply banked curves. (2) The victor and the trophy which he wins.

Sea Girt, N. J.—President Wilson pays a visit to the military training grounds to review some of the troops recently returned from Texas. Subtitles: (1) He mounts a prancing army steed to inspect the men of America's larger army. (2) The troops then file past the Chief Magistrate of the land.

Newport News, Va.—Owing to cramped conditions of this port caused by the work on the battleships of Uncle Sam's new naval program, the interned German liners move to Philadelphia. Subtitles: (1) The sailors dismantle their miniature German village and make their pets ready for the journey. (2) A powerful fleet of ten warships convoys the vessels to prevent escapes or an attack by allied battleships. (3) Arriving at the League Island Navy Yard. (4) The interned sailors land at the yard to explore their new surroundings. (5) Their task accomplished, the mighty guardians of our peace steam back to sea—the neutrality of the country preserved.

Brewster, N. Y.—The price controversy between the dairymen's league and milk distributors has become acute and farmers are destroying all milk they find going to the market. Subtitle: The surplus milk is even used to feed pigs.

Chelmsford, England.—The Right Honorable Winston Churchill, former First Lord of the Admiralty, arrives to open a fete for the benefit of the Russian Red Cross. Subtitle: He makes a stirring appeal on behalf of the nation's stanch ally.

On the Eastern Front.—Fully recovered from the setbacks received last year, the Russians have now turned on their enemy and are pushing their victorious campaign over the Transylvanian hills. Subtitles: (1) Greatly improved artillery is an important factor of their success. (2) Officers examining Austrian prisoners.

An Animated Map of the Allied Offensive in France. Subtitles: 1. The French and British concentrate men and munitions in the Somme sector, June 25-30. 2. The great offensive of July 1 breaks the German first and second lines. 3. The Allied method of attack is to work on both sides of a strong position, such as Fricourt, and then attack from three sides. 4. During August the Allies consolidate their gains, and gradually creep towards the German third line trenches. 5. The advance of September 15 drives in further wedges around Combles and Peronne, leading to their capture.

THE GRIP OF EVIL (Episode No. 14, "Humanity Triumphant")—Balboa—Two Parts—Oct. 15).—The Hellcats, their anger riled at John Burton's reforming influence on important members of their gang, and seeing a means of extorting money, make him a prisoner. When he refuses to pay the fabulous sum demanded to free him they threaten him with death in an hour.

Burton makes one last appeal—he reminds them of their mothers. At first they laugh at his gentle questions, then as he brings out of the haze of years memories long forgotten, a [illegible] faces have taken on a softer light. Grace Coe, with [illegible] at the retreat. The union of the gray-haired old mother and the son adds the final touch to a human scene.

Burton, after his release, generously uses his fortune and influence to help the reformed gangsters on the right path. With the passing days the answer comes to Grace and Burton that Humanity is not in the Grip of Evil, but that Humanity and Love are triumphant.

THE SHIELDING SHADOW (Episode No. 8, "The Mystic Defender"—Two Parts—Astra —Oct. 15).—One Lamp Louie, who has forged a paper for Sebastian, holds the disclosure as a cudgel to blackmail him. Sebastian is forced to take Louie to his club. There they make the acquaintance of the Mysterious Stranger—Ravengar. A party is formed at Ravengar's suggestion to see the latest music hall favorite, Muriel Mason. Louie, fascinated with her, becomes a nightly patron.

Muriel's brother has stolen a thousand dollars and if unable to return it the following day prison faces him. While Muriel is alone in her room striving to think of a means to raise it, a roll of bills appears and a pencil picks itself up and writes: "Lure a confession concerning a forgery from One Lamp Louie and this will be increased to one thousand." Just as she is securing it from Louie a fire breaks out in the theater and a falling beam hitting Louie makes his mind a blank. Muriel disheartened, reaches home and again the pencil writes: "You tried your best," and the balance of the money appears beside it.

During the fire, Leontine, cowardly deserted by Sebastian, is rescued by Ravengar. Sebastian, jealous and goaded by the fact that he has been unable to win her love, threatens her violence. Suddenly the Shielding Shadow appears with its burning eyes and dead white hands and protects her.

THE LIGHT THAT FAILED (Gold Rooster —Five Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Dick Hedlar (Robert Edeson); Bessie, the model (Jose Collins); Maizie (Lillian Tucker); Torpenhow (Claude Fleming).

After many years, Dick Hedlar, a staff artist, stationed in the Soudan, returns to England to find his pictures have made him famous. He has always cherished memories of his childhood sweetheart, Maizie, and at an exhibition of his pictures he meets her again and the old romance is revived. She, still struggling to make a name for herself in the world of Art, refuses his offer of marriage, fearing that her acceptance would mean a hindrance to their careers.

Dick tries to comfort himself with his painting. Bessie, a model, comes into his life and makes love to him. In the meanwhile love overcomes Maizie's decision and in a sudden resolve she goes to Dick's studio to tell him that she will marry him. She finds Dick repulsing the advances of Bessie and mistakes the situation as being Dick's overtures to the demi-monde. She leaves in disgust and refuses to hear his explanations the next day.

An accident affects his eyesight and, gradually going blind, he completes his master picture. His bosom friend, Torpenhow, brings some of his friends to Dick's studio to admire the picture, only to find that Bessie has ruined the masterpiece. They keep the fact from the now totally blind Dick, and he as a last gift to Maizie sends the picture to her unknowing what has happened to it. Torpenhow, horrified at what has happened, goes to see Maizie, and she learns of the injustice she has done Dick. She and Torpenhow make haste to Dick's studio only to find him gone.

Cursed with his blindness and with a deep ache in his heart, Dick has heard the call of the East. They follow the trail of the "mad Englishman," as he is called, for many hundreds of miles and reach him just as a horde of Dervishes are about to make an attack. In the skirmish both Maizie and Dick are wounded and die in each other's arms. In Dick's clenched hand Torpenhow finds the verse of their childhood dreams, cherished through all the years.

A NATION'S PERIL (Pathe—Two Parts—Oct. 15).—A plot to discover our military secrets is frustrated by one of the spies, a Russian Countess, who at the last moment sacrifices her fellows for the sake of the man she loves, a captain in the United States Army.

LUKE AND THE BANG-TAILS (Rolin—Oct. 15).—Luke and Snub become deep-dyed race track villians and try to brace up "Little Eva," a sagging specimen of horse flesh whose future is all behind her.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS NO. 6 (Betty at the Wedding) (Pathe—Oct 15).—Beautiful creations for the wedding and the honeymoon shown to their best advantage on exceptionally pretty models.

Triangle Film Corporation

A CORRECTION.

The Ince five-part picture, "The Jungle Child," a synopsis of which was published on page 300 of the issue of October 14, was released on October 1 instead of October 8. "Plain Jane," which was originally scheduled for release on October 1, was released on October 8. A description of this picture was printed on page 138 of the issue for October 7.

THE OLD FOLKS AT HOME (Fine Arts—Five Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: James Colburn (Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree); Mrs. Colburn (Josephine Crowell); Steve Colburn (Elmer Clifton); Eleanor (Mildred Harris); Lucia Medina (Lucille Younge); Mr. Fynes (W. E. Lawrence); the Judge (Spottiswoode Aitken). Directed by Chester Withey.

James Colburn and his wife have grown old and gray. He is elected to Congress and his wife and son, Steve, leave his farm home. Steve's country sweetheart, Eleanor, later is employed in the same city in a candy factory. Steve spends his father's money in dissipation, and one day Eleanor discovers Steve in the streets, where he had fallen. In an endeavor to keep Steve's condition a secret from his parents, Eleanor calls on a middle-aged man friend, Charles Fynes, who supplies Steve with funds for a doctor and a nurse.

Fynes buys the girl fine clothes and takes her to dinners against the warning of Steve. Finally the girl confesses to Steve that Fyne has promised to marry her and that they are going to sail on a South American steamer. Steve, believing that Fynes has betrayed the girl, shoots him.

In the meantime the parents call upon Steve in his apartment. He comes down stairs with the revolver in his hand after killing Fynes. Steve is arrested and held for trial. The father spends much of his money in fighting for the boy, two trials having been given him. His mother, who is a star witness, perjures herself to save her son.

Finally Eleanor in a South American city hears the news of the trouble and through council is brought back to America. Through the grief of the mother the jury declares that Steve is not guilty and he is freed. In the general courtroom Eleanor is welcomed, and back at the farm the old couple begin life anew, where Steve makes their last days happy and marries Eleanor.

THE RETURN OF "DRAW" EAGAN (Ince —Five Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: "Draw" Eagan (William S. Hart); Poppy (Louise Glaum); Myrtle Buckton (Margery Wilson); Arizona Joe (Robert McKim); Mat Buckton (J. P. Lockney).

"Draw" Eagan, a notorious bandit of New Mexico, has come to the end of his tether. His gang has been dispersed, many slain, and more in jail, and there is a reward of $1,000 offered for Eagan, "dead or alive." Eagan, while drinking in a saloon at Muscatine, chances across Matt Buckton, a leading citizen of the neighboring village of Yellow Dog.

Yellow Dog is a town infested with gunmen who make life miserable for the few respectable citizens. Buckton is on a still hunt for some strong men who will shoulder the unenviable responsibilities of sheriff, and put the fear of God and the law into the hearts of his undisciplined fellow-citizens. While Buckton is thinking over his seemingly impossible quest, the bully of Muscatine enters the saloon and accosting "Draw" Eagan, finds himself crumpled upon the floor without opportunity for repartee.

Buckton is so much impressed by the quietude and deftness of "Draw" Eagan's work that he immediately offers him the job of cleaning out Yellow Dog. And so "Draw" Eagan, as William Blake, is installed as sheriff of Buckton's promising community. William Blake soon has the bullies and gunmen of Yellow Dog well in hand, with law and order restored by the capable ex-bandit.

At the time when the respectable citizens are singing the praises of the new sheriff, one of the worst of Eagan's old gang, Oregon Joe, strolls into town, sizes up the situation, and, holding a threat of betrayal over the sheriff's head, proceeds with the aid of the tough element to undo the sheriff's good work. For himself Eagan cares little, but while endeavoring to live down his past and lead a clean life, he has fallen in love with Buckton's daughter, Myrtle. And so day by day he submits to Oregon Joe's insults and the tough element gradually gets the upper hand.

Things have reached such a pitch that one day the gunmen, headed by Oregon Joe, decide to drive the respectable citizens out of town and run the place for themselves. It is up to the sheriff to decide, and his manhood asserts itself. He confesses the evils of his past life, throws himself on the mercy of his fellow-citizens and promises to surrender to the government if they will allow him one day to restore order. He makes good; the gunmen are whipped into submission and Oregon Joe, the blackmailer, meets his just reward. The sheriff surrenders and is locked up in the caboose, but the next morning a delegation of citizens greet him with the assurance that to them "Draw" Eagan has ceased to exist and that Yellow Dog only recognizes Sheriff William Blake. Myrtle Buckton is one of the delegation.

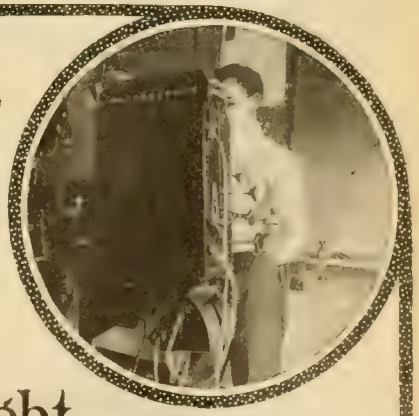
Free Your Operator



Note in the picture to the right how the operator is enslaved at the carbon feed rod trying to maintain a perfect, continuous white light on the screen. Then note in the picture below how he is freed by the AUTO-ARC to attend to other important details in his booth while the AUTO-ARC goes right on automatically controlling the light at the arc, throwing a perfect, continuous white light on the screen, saving current and adding to the reputation of your house for perfect projection.

Have a Perfect Light

by putting in the AUTO-ARC. It is a wonderfully simple little mechanism invented by a practical operator for maintaining a steady, perfect light at the Arc, something that can't be done by hand feed. The AUTO-ARC feeds the carbons automatically, continuously, after it is once set by the operator and gives the operator a chance to attend to other things that need his attention. To prove its merit to your utmost satisfaction, we will send you the AUTO-ARC on 30 days' trial with the understanding that if you are not perfectly satisfied we will take it back at our expense and refund you your money. Fits any standard lamp. Price $60.00 f.o.b. factory, Owensboro, Ky. Address

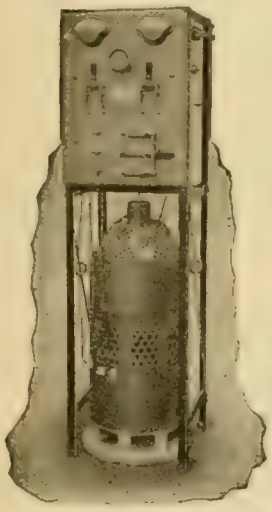
Hill Motor Generator

For Moving Picture Arc Lamps

DELIVERS true direct current from alternating current, producing

STEADY WHITE LIGHT PROJECTION OF TRUE COLOR VALUE, NO FLICKER OR FLARE



And three times the illumination is obtained on a standard screen up to 120 ft. throw as compared to the alternating current arc for the same current.

It is most economical for voltage reduction of direct-current service lines to the 60 volt, required at the arc. It eliminates current wasting resistances, and gives the greatest flexibility for accurate voltage control. The capacity is sufficient for two lamps burning simultaneously and the dissolve is accomplished without a break.

Vertical in form, with base covering 15"x15", it takes up the minimum of space in the booth; and running in ball bearings, it operates noiselessly and without vibration. It is a special machine, designed especially for motion picture work.

YOU HAVE HEARD THAT OLD SAYING—

"THE BEST ADVERTISEMENT IS A SATISFIED CUSTOMER"--
ALL HALLBERG CUSTOMERS ARE SATISFIED!!!

Here is one of hundreds like him who tell you his experience with

HALLBERG 20th CENTURY
MOTOR-GENERATOR

DIXWELL THEATRE

Highwood, New Haven, Conn., Aug. 18th, 1916.

J. H. Hallberg.

Dear Sir—I want to say for your Motor Generator that I consider it the best investment we made when fitting up our house, and, in spite of the fact that it got terribly damaged in the fire that we were so unfortunate to have, it is still turning out the same bright and thoroughly lighted picture that it has always produced.

Did you notice in an issue of the M. P. World that the Projection editor had made calls on most of the houses in New Haven as a guest of the local M. P. Operators' Union and said that we put on an ABSOLUTELY PERFECT picture- and that he, as critical as he naturally is, could find no fault at all with our projection.

We attribute this faultless picture to the perfect white and strong light produced by your HALLBERG MOTOR GENERATOR, as no machine, no matter how good, nor screen, no matter how efficient, can produce the results without the good strong and steady white light generated by your machine.

Respectfully,
WOOD & WHITMAN.

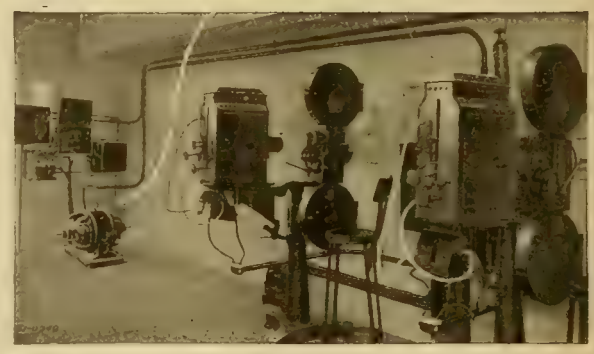
Mr. Exhibitor:



sit right down in your own theatre and consider your pictures from the standpoint of your patrons. Does the light flicker? Are there projection ghosts in the pictures? Does your operator have difficulty changing from one arc to the other? Is your competitor giving better projection to his patrons and to yours?

Talk this over with your operator. He can tell you how the service can be improved. Send for Bulletin 10923, Subject, the Wagner White Light Converter.

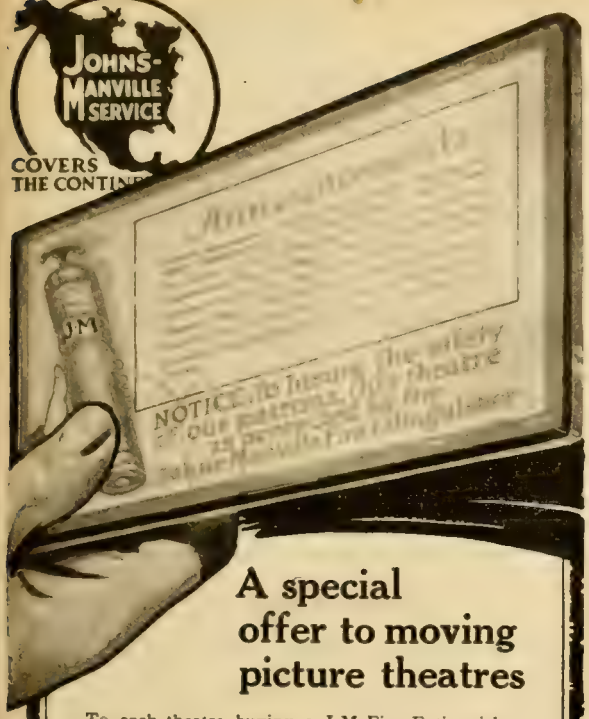
JOHNS-MANVILLE SERVICE
COVERS THE CONTINENT



A special offer to moving picture theatres

To each theatre buying a J-M Fire Extinguisher, we will deliver a free slide for announcements, as illustrated.

ADVERTISE THE SAFETY OF YOUR THEATRE

Here's a real opportunity to add to your reputation for up-to-the-minute service—to protect both your patrons and your theatre, and to "cash in" on it at the box office. Let your audiences know you're securing their safety—It's sound business, because such service pulls patronage. With a you can smother any incipient fire even gasoline or electrical arcs. And it's the only one-quart extinguisher that discharges either by pumping or by stored-up air pressure an invaluable feature in tight corners. Liquid is non-deteriorating, and harmless to skin, fabric or machinery.

Johns-Manville Fire Extinguisher

Examined, approved, and labeled by the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., under the direction of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Price, brass or nickel finish, bracket included, $8.00.

Take advantage of this special offer write today to the nearest J-M Branch for full details.

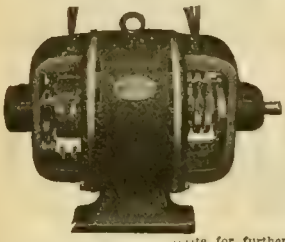
"MARTIN" ROTARY CONVERTER



FOR REAL SUN-LIT PICTURES

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" polyphase converter is maintained constant, so that the starting of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first, making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensarcs and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

Be particular, examine the seemingly little things about the projector you buy.

It's the "little" things that make a projection machine give perfect results.

The projector you have been thinking about—does it have parts that received a special heat treatment and were ground to insure accuracy? Can you remove the framing device in a second if necessary, are the gears made of solid high grade cold rolled steel?

Does it have, as the MOTIOGRAPH has, all these important points of merit, an enviable reputation and an unequalled record for endurance and economy?

This is a matter of vital importance to you. MAKE SURE

All Eyes on a Line

A NEW CHAIR

That Enables Everybody to See and Be Comfortable

Can be changed from an adult's chair to a child's chair by pressing the catch and raising as illustrated. Returns to adult's position and locks just as easily.

It provides a child with a seat proportioned to his body, a foot rest the right height and puts the child's eyes on a line with those of adults, enabling him to see without annoyance to others or discomfort to himself. The offers theatre owners something for which there is a real need. Fortunately it is not an extra expense but an added source of profit because it—

"All eyes on a line"
FOCO
Adjustable Chair

Does away with the free kids.
Increases the patronage of children; also the adults who come with children.
Attracts patronage of adults who won't now attend because of discomfort of holding children on their laps.
Attracts patronage from theatres not equipped with Foco chairs.

FOCO Chairs cost new only a few cents more than ordinary chairs. Made in all sizes and finishes, both veneered and upholstered. Old chairs can be converted into Foco Chairs at considerably less than the cost of new chairs.

Write for booklet showing reel of actual chairs in use.

TRADE MARK

It's the surest and quickest way to show better pictures; build a bigger business and make larger profits.

Don't be criticised by your patrons because of blurred pictures, slip-ups and delays. Don't put up with the inconvenience, annoyance and expense of inferior projection equipment. Take a lesson from hundreds of the largest and most prominent picture houses who have been through it all and now won't have any generator but the Transverter in their booths.

Economy of Cost and Operation

The Transverter is compact, simple and easily installed in any booth; operates on A.C. power circuit and meets every requirement for a steady, brilliant, easily controlled light for artistic projection of any pictures.

Considering its capacity, efficiency, and economy of power and maintenance, it is lower in price than any other make.

EXHIBITOR'S FILM REVIEW SERVICE

In the department headed Reviews of Current Productions in each issue of the Moving Picture World thousands of the successful and wide-awake managers of the country find the most helpful and most necessary service of the many rendered by our paper.

Each week from fifteen to twenty or more of the leading film releases are reviewed at length by seven or eight expert and experienced members of our own staff.

These reviews are written primarily from the Exhibitor's viewpoint and are absolutely independent and impartial in every respect. No such valuable service is offered elsewhere at any price.

Hundreds of programs are arranged weekly by managers only after careful study of this Department and our condensed or shorter reviews of all films, entitled Comments on the Films.

Mr. Theater Manager, if you are not making use of these will you not test them for the next few weeks? You will find no more dependable criticisms and trustworthy film information week in and week out than these two Departments in the

BLUE BIRD PHOTOPLAYS, (INC) PRESENT-

THE END OF THE RAINBOW

A THRILLING DRAMA OF THE BIG TIMBER, AND THE POT OF GOLD AT THE END OF THE RAINBOW

WITH MYRTLE GONZALEZ, VAL PAUL, GEO HERNANDEZ, & FREDERICK MONTAGUE.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, (Inc.)

Saturday Evening Post Advertisements appearing every week a huge factor in building that prestige and popularity which all Exhibitors are seeking.

THE fundamental principle of the BLUEBIRD is the good play by the good author. If our stars fit the parts we use the stars; if they do not fit, we do not use them. Some producers use stars whether they fit or not, and the result is a poorly balanced production. You leave the theatre dissatisfied, naturally. You can't always get plays to fit your stars; but you can always choose stars to fit your plays. That's the only sure way to please. And that, in brief is what the term BLUEBIRD stands for. It is insurance of consistent entertainment.

The growing popularity of BLUEBIRDS is evidenced by packed houses wherever they are shown. The BLUEBIRD policy of "The Play's the Thing," is being told in half page advertisements to over ten millions of people every week. You can get your share of this profitable business by showing BLUEBIRD Photoplays in your own theatre.

TRIANGLE

RELEASES FOR WEEK OF OCTOBER 22

H. B. Warner in "The Vagabond Prince"

KAY-BEE

Little need be said of the popularity—and drawing power—of the TRIANGLE PLAYS in which H. B. Warner has starred. Most exhibitors know that the reputation which this star acquired on the stage has been more than lived up to on the screen.

And when you have seen "The Vagabond Prince" you will again see why this is true. You will understand the difference between this play and others. You will see why Warner can take the part of Prince or an Indian beggar with equal success.

In this latest picture Warner does take the part of a foreign Prince who, tiring of the pomp and pettiness of his father's domain, ventures out in the great world to seek adventure and forget court etiquette. You'll enjoy it—and so will your patrons.

Norma Talmadge in "Fifty-Fifty"

FINE ARTS

A TRIANGLE PLAY with Norma Talmadge as the star is sure to be a success, and this latest picture is no exception. Based on the "sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander" idea and the necessity for compromise in a happy marriage this play is not a preachment. It moves along swiftly with a rapid-fire, deeply engrossing action that will appeal to every person who is married—or ever intends to be.

Keystone Comedies Two as good as ever this week

NORMA TALMADGE IN Fifty-Fifty
FINE ARTS

She was an artist's model—young, pretty, fascinating. Full of energy and vivacity she delighted in playing near the fire without getting burnt. Then she fell in love and when she married she wanted to settle down, but her husband wouldn't so they began to drift apart.

Your patrons will love this picture, and they'll tell their friends about it. Of course, it's a TRIANGLE PLAY.

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

OCTOBER 28, 1916

Mutual Managers Are Always Ready To Aid Exhibitors

Real "service" is the prime motive underlying the success of the Mutual Film Corporation. No Mutual exchange manager is satisfied until his patrons are satisfied. No Mutual exchange manager feels that he has given a customer Mutual service when he gets his name on the dotted line of a contract and sees him leave for his theater with the day's "show" under his arm. He is just as much interested in that customer's box office as the exhibitor himself. He is willing and anxious to help each customer solve his problems. He is ready to consult with each exhibitor on the best way to advertise the films he is showing. He is prepared to offer the exhibitor helps of every kind.

By making the exhibitor's business better, the Mutual exchange manager knows he is making his own business better. The satisfied patron is the customer he wants. Unless the exhibitor is getting everything possible out of his theater there is, of course, room for improvement. And right there is where the manager of each Mutual exchange seeks to make himself valuable to his customers, for he is delighted to have the patrons of the exchange come to him for advice and help. More often than not he can solve their problems.

Gold and White Chosen As Mary Miles Minter Colors

Gold and white have been chosen as Mary Miles Minter's own colors.

Exhibitors are thus given an opportunity for creating attractive lobby displays and decorations. By using the Mary Miles Minter colors generously whenever they have a Minter picture on their screens, they can soon teach their patrons its meaning. Soon a mere glance at the front of a theatre will tell the regular patron that it is "Lovely Mary day" at that house.

Colleges and universities are known by their colors. Now the Mutual Film Corporation has given Mary Miles Minter a set of distinctive colors. Hereafter Miss Minter will be known as the "gold and white" girl. Any number of attractive lobby displays have been devised for Mary Miles Minter Gold and White days. They may be obtained at any of the Mutual's sixty-eight film exchanges.

Max Dill of Kolb and Dill and Miss Josephine Clarke were married at Los Angeles recently.

Next Chaplin on Nov. 13th

"Behind the Screen" is the title of the next Mutual-Chaplin Special feature The release date is November 13. This date is two weeks later than the scheduled date, but the coming production is so stupendous and required so many special sets, that it was deemed best to postpone the release date and make the production one which will be talked about for months to come. It deals with life in a motion picture studio.

William Russell In "The Love Hermit" Released This Week

William Russell and Charlotte Burton are the stars of this week's Mutual Star Production. It is five reels length. Its title is "The Love Hermit." It is a story of society and Big Business. Mr. Russell appears as Tom Weston, a stock broker in the office of James Bolton. Miss Burton is Marie Bolton, the daughter of Tom's employer.

Tom, after making his employer a fortune "on the street," is rewarded with an invitation to spend a week-end at the Bolton country home. There he meets Marie Bolton and the two are instantly attracted. A moonlight stroll ends in a proposal. Tom is enraptured to find Marie returns his love. Marie has another suitor in Jack Hillman. Hillman complains to Bolton that Marie is throwing herself away on Tom. A love scene between Tom and Marie is interrupted by Bolton and Hillman. Tom is rebuked and ordered out of the house. Marie spurns him publicly. He then becomes a woman hater.

Tom vows vengeance on all womankind, and ultimately he brings about the ruin of Bolton on Wall Street. The picture is one that presents William Russell at his best. Exhibitors all over the country have found the Russell Mutual Star Productions big money makers. This one is no exception to the rule. Bookings on "The Love Hermit" can be made at any of the sixty-eight Mutual film exchanges.

"The Undertow," A Powerful American Five-Reeler, Has An All-Star Cast

The American Film Company., Inc., presents on the Mutual Program this week an unusual five reel photoplay. It tells the story of an humble day laborer who rises to great wealth by might of intellect and will. His struggle is no easy one, for he is handicapped by a wife who is devoid of ambition. Franklin Ritchie and Helene Rosson have the leading roles. They are supported by a really all-star cast.

James King, by dint of study and industry, rises from the estate of a common day laborer to a position as the head of a huge felt hat factory. His wife is a constant handicap to him and he finally secures a divorce. Hammond, a foreman in the hat factory, mistreats the hands. Esther Mordon, a girl left suddenly penniless, becomes a toiler in the plant. When the employees threaten to strike against Hammond's tyranny, Esther appeals to King himself. Her sweetness and sympathy win his attention. Later Esther is the means of exposing Hammond as a thief. She oils his plot to burn the factory and ends the strike. King effects a change in working conditions and, having been won completely by Esther's shy mastery of him, declares his love for her. As the story ends Esther agrees to become Mrs. King.

The celebrated American photography was never more in evidence than in this five reel subject, "The Undertow." The picture can be seen and booked now at any of the sixty-eight Mutual exchanges.

Bigger Than "THE GIRL AND THE GAME"

Back Again! Helen Holmes in a master chapter play bigger and better than the big success, "The Girl and the Game." In response to the requests of more than 6,000 exhibitors all over America who found "The Girl and the Game" the biggest serial success ever produced, Helen Holmes is back again in a newer and bigger chapter play of the Great North Woods—"A Lass of the Lumberlands."

Audiences everywhere will welcome the announcement of this spectacular chapter play. The story by E. Alexander Powell, the noted novelist, is unique and profoundly interesting. It will appear in hundreds of newspapers. It depicts, in truthful fashion, life in the logging camps of the virgin Northwest. Love, adventure, thrills—all are possessed by this story in a combination never before seen.

"A Lass of the Lumberlands" is in fifteen chapters. A new chapter is released every week thru the sixty-eight Mutual Exchanges in America. The rental price is very low. It is within the reach of every exhibitor. Wire, write or visit your nearest Mutual Exchange now for prices and dates.

AROUND THE WORLD

THE NEW GAUMONT SINGLE-REEL

"Mutual Tours Around the World" is a Gaumont Scenic of Foreign Lands. It will present not only each nation's places of pictorial beauty and historic interest, but also customs, pursuits and pastimes of the people.

"Mutual Tours" is a Film Travel Magazine, such as you can get nowhere else, because the Gaumont world-wide organization is unequalled.

This makes the fourth single-reel you can secure from Gaumont that will actually strengthen your program. Book all four and feature each a certain night every week. Being highly entertaining, they build and hold regular patronage.

You know Ty Cobb and you know that everyone, whether a baseball fan or not, will want to see him on the screen.

The Greatest Star of the nation's Favorite Sport, featured in the People's Most Popular Amusement, "The Movies", with a story by Grantland Rice, of the New York Tribune, America's best known Sporting Writer.

Can you see what that combination will mean at the box office?

"SOMEWHERE IN GEORGIA" is not merely a vehicle for showing Ty Cobb to advantage. It is a big, vital, interesting story by and for red-blooded human beings; a story of love, ambition and the National Game.

Without Ty Cobb and Grant Rice it would be a big feature. With them it will be a record-breaker. Ty Cobb is not only the greatest ball player of all time but an accomplished actor as well.

We will release this picture on the open market. No territory has been sold in advance of this announcement, but hundreds of inquiries have been received. We therefore advise quick action.

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

TO THE

PRESS, THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY, AND THE PUBLIC OF ALL COUNTRIES!

Without intention to deceive, some of the most reliable trades papers have published certain news items which have placed the credit for the Submarine scenes in "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" where it does not rightfully belong.

THEREFORE BE IT KNOWN THAT:

The Williamson Brothers ALONE are the originators and sole producers of this latest and most valuable addition to the Motion Picture Industry.

Only TWO pictures now before the public, have been manufactured with the aid of the WILLIAMSON SUBMARINE INVENTIONS and DEEP SEA PHOTOGRAPHIC DEVICES.

Namely:

"THE WILLIAMSON SUBMARINE EXPEDITION" pictures which are now being shown in nearly all parts of the world, including a run of 21 weeks in Philharmonic Hall, London, England, and

"20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA," which had had its premiere at the Studebaker Theater, Chicago, on October 9th.

Nearly half a million of dollars have been expended during four years of research work in the ocean's depths, with submarine chambers, collapsible tubes and special photographic devices, all of which are fully protected by United States and Foreign patent rights, under which The Submarine Film Corporation operates.

THE FABLE OF

THE BIG HEAVY MAN AND THE SMALL HAPPY MAN

Written for Children but Exhibitors may read between the lines.

ONCE upon a time there was a big Impressive Man. His name was HEAVY FEATURES. "I will teach people the tragic lessons of Life," he said. "I will make them sad. I will make them think about the horrors of Crime and Poverty. I will make Pictures that will startle them and stir them up. They shall know how serious and complex Life is. They will call me an artist." And all the little Heavys struck heavy attitudes.

"Well, well," said the SMALL HAPPY MAN, "He has left out something. I will show people sunshine and laughter. I will make them glad. I will point out the bright spots in daily living. I will make Pictures that are clean and simple, I will make them funny. The people shall laugh. They will call me their friend because I make Life easier for them." The small Happy Man's name is CHRISTIE COMEDIES and he is constantly attended by a host of little Happys who are always glad.

Now the WISE OLD EXHIBITOR spoke: "People like to laugh," he declared, "they like to go home with a good taste in their mouths. They like CHRISTIE COMEDIES. He is the Thought Child of Al. E. Christie. I can get his Pictures on the Open Market from reliable Independent Exchanges. That lets me pick what I like — so he has to give me something good. I am going right now and book the Open Market release for October 30th, Billie Rhodes and Eddie Barry and Harry Ham are in it. It's called 'What's in a Name.'"

Facts and Comments

REPORTS from South America tell of the wonderful success of several big American-made features. The Buenos Aires Herald speaking of the success of one famous American feature says that "it marks a new epoch in the theatricals of the Southern Republics and the fame of the producer now extends around the world south of the equator with the same distinction as that with which the theatergoers of the northern nations recognize it. This American masterpiece has been given over 200 performances in Buenos Aires, a record never before equaled by any theatrical attraction in this city. Another organization has visited all of the important cities of the Republic of Montevideo and the principal towns of Chile, Peru and Bolivia." What a tribute to American screen genius. The Latin-American market is hungry for good pictures and Cine-Mundial points the way, giving its subscribers not only full information but actual service in providing valuable "leads" to the American producer who wants to go into this promising market.

CONCILIATION is good business policy most of the time and we feel sure that conciliation on the part of the exchanges toward the exhibitor is the best kind of business policy. The exhibitor is not as dependent upon the producer as he used to be; competition is keener than it ever was among the exchanges. A courteous word, a spirit of conciliation have a business value which only the short-sighted manager will overlook. One of the oldest film men and one who is well acquainted with film conditions here and abroad recently commented upon the fact that so many exhibitors had a hard struggle to make ends meet. At such a time as this, courtesy and conciliation are especially profitable.

THE National Board of Review has just issued a most interesting pamphlet entitled "Principles Governing the Selection of Motion Pictures for Young People under Sixteen." There are some excellent chapters in this booklet such as "The Mental Attitude of Children," "Juvenile Actors," "Comedy," "The Use of the Subtitle," "Posters," etc. We feel sure that the exhibitors of the country will be very much interested in this booklet as it contains many valuable suggestions and offers good material for formulating replies to "cranks" and agitators. The pamphlet may be had for the asking from Dr. Orrin G. Cocks, Secretary of the National Committee on Films for Young People, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City. The pamphlet is a most interesting and instructive contribution to the current literature of the motion picture.

ONCE more we beg to remind the secretaries of exhibitors' organizations and indeed anybody who is interested in organization to tell us of any interesting meetings and events generally in organization circles. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has made a feature of reporting these events as a glance at our pages will show. We want to make our Exhibitors Department as complete and as accurate as possible and that is why we invite the co-operation of secretaries and of all exhibitors who take an interest in organization.

"VAMPIRE" films are going out of fashion. They are being killed by ridicule just as the melodrama was killed in this generation. It is a very healthy sign to see exhibitors denounce the "vampire" and other nuisance films. The public detests films that smack of the studio and reflect the mind of a dime-novel director. Naturalness is demanded as the first condition of box office success. The morgue of the industry, the huge Saragossa sea of failures in filmdom of which promoters never say anything, is full of concerns that could not make the screen a true and simple reflection of life as it is lived about us and in us.

A VERY remarkable fact about the international film market: In the course of the last two years the number of producers in Italy has increased at least twenty-five per cent. Of course only a small part of this increased output in films is sold in Italy or anywhere in Europe. Germany and Austria, formerly two of the best customers of Italy, are inaccessible to Italian-made films. We know that the consumption of Italian films in our country is negligible. Strange as it may seem, no Italian product is marketed now on a regular schedule in this country. Where, then, is all this increased output going? It is all going to South America, the great film market of the future, the same great market which we Americans are persistently overlooking or neglecting. This market invites us, but we seem to be painfully slow about responding.

Producers Non-Progressive

By Louis Reeves Harrison

NO MATTER how willing the leading producers may be to move forward and onward, they are human and under the restraining influences which have made the whole world move as slowly as the great armies now facing each other in Europe. The irregular and labored action of the nations at war is that of the race in its advance toward superior enlightenment. But for a few bold minds, the inventors and discoverers and idealists, each generation would remain passive, content to stand on the sure ground of what has been long established. Even today, when we pride ourselves on our intelligence, a man of advanced thought is often treated as a nuisance, if he is not regarded with suspicion.

Any thinker who originates stories in scenario form today, particularly if he is unfamiliar with those selective methods through which the material of a rejected scenario is retained for the use of some sister, cousin or aunt of the second-story thief in charge of the department, may find it necessary to give up a direct attack upon the formidable defenses set up against true authorship and execute some indirect or flank movement in order to get the kind of audience he deserves.

Let it be taken for granted that a leading producer is in dead earnest about securing bright plays and is willing to pay liberally for them, almost the first thing he does is to neutralize his own purposes by putting artistry on the same plane as artifice. He selects bright department men who are familiar with the cunning devices of those writers who try to sell imitation pearls as the genuine article, valuable eliminaters of the undesirable, and a number of assistants are engaged to search through a haystack of scripts for one needle of an idea.

This is an old method and one almost purely negative. There have been thousands of good original stories already shown on the screen, but it is extremely doubtful if a list of their authors is to be found in any scenario department. It is a little bit early to expect those authors, no matter how successfully their efforts have withstood the strain of directorial inefficiency, to write masterpieces with offhand frequency, but the fact that they have made good puts them in an artistry class far removed from that of skilled substitution or mere imitation.

Authors who have made good with original stories and the unpromising amateur are treated with a lofty impartiality that would be amusing if it were not destructively stupid. An author who draws honestly from his own creative font is a candidate for the dependable class, even if his script contains serious faults of structure or does not meet requirements in other respects, and before his effort is returned it deserves the scrutiny of two or three judges—it may not be impossible to nurse him with a little encouraging criticism and even bring about a new draft of his story which will prove satisfactory.

A large number of these true authors—they belong to a sensitive part of humanity—become discouraged, if not completely disgusted, by the treatment they receive in offices and studios. In its lowest and simplest exercise, Imaginative Effort is an idea formulated purely by the mind, a Conception, and all the highly cultivated taste and power of concentration required in superior image-making creations involves a certain refinement of sensibility rarely understood by those who become callous in the business struggle. Methods of digging for gold require more skill than the hiring of men to shovel sand.

To those incapable of comprehending the difference between artifice and artistry the distinction may seem unimportant. They will continue to exert a nullifying influence upon brave original effort, while declaring from the housetops that they are seeking it. They are not seeking it at all—they are merely expecting it. Such producers are the outgrowth of blind circumstances, spontaneous enough, enthusiastic over unexpected returns for investment, but without original intention to deal with pure artistry and unequipped to grasp its relative value.

It is even irritating to some producers of established wealth to consider for one moment that their profits must ultimately depend to any extent upon contributions from individuals wholly outside of their organization and beyond their immediate control. Hence the salaried writer of screen stories, who grinds out so many a year until he runs stale. But there are producers who DO know the difference between artifice and artistry. They are giving stimulus to their directors and opportunity to their interpreters with the best stories they can find. Their trouble lies almost altogether in methods of selection and production.

In arriving at a rational conception of story value while examining a scenario, should a producer not put himself in the unbiased position he expects the critic to occupy when reviewing the completed picture? The critic is expected to be guided by principles, not by personal preference. What kind of an art principle is it that selects a choice specimen of gold filigree work merely that it may be hammered out of shape for the value of the precious metal contained? If the original form lacks grace here or utility there, is it not in accord with true art to have the originator reshape his own creation?

There are other agencies of progress in this new art than production, those of publicity, distribution and exhibition, but they are largely scientific; they are fully comprehended; they have been given free scope, and their development has been rapid. The whole world rejoices that this is so. We enjoy a new and popular means of intercommunication. Through these agencies we have increased our means for the dissemination of instruction, entertainment and happiness. An international language has come into existence, one easily read by all classes of people.

The means provided, what kind of material should be placed on the screen to satisfy aspiring people wherever they exist? For some it may be gratifying to scan the past; for others the present and its needs are of absorbing interest, and there are bolder minds delighting in speculation concerning the future. Of these three, the story of the day, the hour, we live in takes front rank. What concerns now, rather than what concerned us a few years ago is of deep import, yet in spite of this, a very large majority of the visualized stories make no appeal to modern intelligence and appreciation whatever.

There are men capable of writing stories for visualization which would not only add immensely to the enjoyment of people all over the world but contribute to making intelligence universal, but they insist upon terms of compensation such as they receive in all other arts of expression. Is it progressive to ignore them entirely? Is it progressive for wealthy producers to hold out their hats to authors of any kind and say, "Please help the blind?" No art of expression can progress without the application of that faculty we call ingenuity, another name for genius.

Two Great Blows to Censorship

By W. Stephen Bush.

RARELY has the Moving Picture World carried two more important news items than were found in last week's issue. Our readers may well reach the conclusion that a crushing blow has been dealt to all censorship agitation and that the idea of an exclusive Federal control over motion pictures has been killed and buried beyond the possibility of resurrection.

While the candidates for the presidency of the United States nominated by the two great political parties differ on all the great issues now before the American electorate, they are in absolute harmony in their views on censorship. Both of them being scholars, both of them being familiar with the political history of England and of America, both of them being statesmen of a progressive type, it was not to be thought of that they would favor censorship. The Moving Picture World never for a moment entertained the fear that either of these men would stultify his record and his political convictions by favoring such a monumental failure as censorship has proved itself to be among all nations and in all ages.

Both men spoke clearly, but it seems to me that Mr. Hughes went further than Mr. Wilson. Mr. Hughes has held the office of Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States with great credit to himself. He is particularly familiar with questions involving Federal control. He struck the keynote of the situation in these memorable words: "The pursuit of the idea that there can be any Federal control where there is no Federal exigency is a will-o'-the-wisp." We hope that after this we won't have to listen to any more learned lawyers in the industry who have just talked with other learned lawyers and who are perfectly clear that Federal censorship will abolish every other form of censorship. Candidly, we are very sick of hearing this nonsense repeated by men who claim intelligence and even legal training.

The industry, it must now he plain to all, has taken the only right and proper stand when it declared itself against all forms of censorship.

The value of the declarations just made by Hughes and Wilson can hardly be exaggerated. Eight and thirty states will have their legislatures in session this coming winter and spring. If attempts are made to enact censorship legislation anywhere the words of the two statesmen who are now appealing to the suffrages of the people will be cited against censorship whether that legislation emanates from Democratic or from Republican sources. The difference between censorship and regulation has been clearly set forth by both Mr. Wilson and Mr. Hughes. Both have echoed the fear of arbitrary power and "graft" so often spoken of in these columns. Both have damned censorship because of its miserable history, because of its ineffectiveness and because of its un-American character.

Our readers will agree with us that the position taken by the Moving Picture World and faithfully adhered to and defended on all occasions has now been fully vindicated. If this industry is to endure, if it is to develop artistically and ethically, if, in short, it is to fulfill its great mission to mankind, it must be free like the press and responsible to the law for any abuse of its freedom.

We hope that the timid souls who but lately cried out that "censorship is bound to come" will subside and find inspiration and courage in the words of President Wilson and Mr. Hughes, a former judge of the Supreme Court of the United States. Salvation to this industry must come from within and not from without. Admitting that there have been offensive pictures, admitting that there have been errors of judgment and that there have been abuses, we feel confident that the history of the screen from a moral point of view has on the whole been a most creditable one and that it compares favorably with the history of any other amusement, and indeed with the history of any other human institution.

"Fakes" and Facts

By W. Stephen Bush

ANYONE who cares may find out with very little loss of time and very little expense the size, the nature and the character of the circulation of the Moving Picture World. We do not care in what direction you may go and whether you travel ten miles or a thousand miles, the result is always the same: The Moving Picture World is the inseparable companion of the exhibitor. You find it on his desk and very often you find another copy in the operating booth. There are a large number of theaters which keep three and four copies of the Moving Picture World, because they find its pages an inexhaustible mine of valuable information, and this applies to the advertising pages no less than to the text.

What moves us to write of this subject at this time is the exclusive special exhibitors' news which the Moving Picture World carries in issue after issue. Wherever exhibitors gather, whether at local meetings or at state conventions, or for special purposes, the Moving Picture World is represented and prints a full report of all the proceedings. No other paper in the field makes even an attempt to do this. Exhibitors' news is live matter—it carries current interest—it is read by exhibitors all over the country. In nine cases out of ten a matter which interests an exhibitors' organization in one part of the country is equally interesting to the exhibitor of every other part of the country. We have been told that by giving these meetings our attention we have been of service to the exhibitors. We cannot help believing this to be true, because there is a steady flow of renewals and fresh subscriptions to the Moving Picture World. No canvassers for this paper come back to the office with a moving tale of woe and a few subscriptions as the result of several weeks' hard work. We do not have to listen to excuses and explanations and dwell on "faked-up" statements. The Moving Picture World makes no apologies, but gives value in every issue to every man who uses its advertising space.

How can any advertiser or publisher swallow a statement from his canvasser that he has found eight exhibitors out of less than forty "who never have and who never will read a trade paper"? These apologies for a lack of circulation are pitiful and may move the charity of the advertiser, but we fail to see where his business instincts are appealed to.

A man who looks at the exhibitor from the top of a ladder may swallow such preposterous statements. If he were in actual daily contact with the practical side of the business he would know that such statements are silly and reflect little credit on the intelligence of the man who is willing to take them seriously. To go to the length of printing them even in a paper with an artificial circulation shows an abysmal ignorance of conditions as they exist all around us. Imagine an exhibitor of motion pictures unable to read or talk English. We have been on the lower East Side, where much of the advertising in the lobby is in Yiddish or in Italian, but we have never found the exhibitor who could not make himself understood in English and get at least the releases out of his paper.

The Moving Picture World, giving full value and more than full value to every reader, gives to advertisers the sort of value which cannot be obtained elsewhere at any price.

Exchanges to Correct Abuses Legally

J. A. Berst of Pathe, Defends the Organizing of Exchange Associations and Points Out Abuses to Be Remedied

THE movement to correct various abuses in the renting of films has gained considerable headway recently. It is manifesting itself in the formation of associations by the exchange men in the various film centers and the members of these associations agree upon the line of conduct that best adapted to combat these abuses and then act as a unit to stamp them out.

Because the various Pathe Exchanges are vitally interested in anything that helps the industry as a whole, J. A. Berst, Vice-President and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has devoted considerable time to the study of the legal standing of these various associations and their rulings. Mr. Berst, in speaking of this subject for publication, said:

"In every large body of retailers there is bound to be a small percentage of those who, for the profit of the moment, lose sight of the question of right or wrong altogether, and adopt methods that are tricky, ill advised or positively dishonest. The retailer in the film business is the exhibitor. The large majority of them do business along strictly honest lines. Corrective methods are not meant for them but for that small percentage in the business who impose such a burden upon the exchanges that the honest exhibitor must indirectly be affected likewise.

"It frequently happens that motion picture exhibitors refuse to pay their bills with one film exchange, and upon the refusal of the latter to give them further service, get their films elsewhere until the same thing happens again. The process is then repeated until they have tried out all the exchanges in their territory. In large cities this operation may last several months. Sometimes these exhibitors pay one exchange for the purpose of preserving credit with one place, while doing the bulk of their business with others, whom they refuse to pay.

"Again, film exchanges are subject to inconveniences and positive loss at the hands of another class of exhibitors who fail to make prompt returns of films. Sometimes these films are exhibited beyond the contract period or they are even sub-leased to other theaters.

"Film exchanges are also caused loss by refusal of exhibitors to pay for damage of one sort or another suffered by films as the result of negligence on the exhibitors' part.

"Nor are the annoyances and abuses named all that the film exchanges have to deal with. For instance, a number of exhibitors, without rhyme or reason, allow themselves to "feel" that the film exchange with which they are doing business owes them money. In such cases there is nothing owing and not the slightest excuse for a claim that there is. Yet it not infrequently happens that a film comes back with a C. O. D. charge for some more or less petty sum which the exchanges have paid in many cases rather than have their films held up pending a discussion of the alleged claim.

"Until recently one exchange manager was not aware of the difficulties experienced by another exchange, but the boldness and ingenuity shown by a number of exhibitors have caused the exchanges to consider ways and means to combat the dishonest practices to which they have been subjected and, accordingly, all over the country, a number of exchanges have come together and organized what are practically protective associations, the object of which is to safeguard the members from a continuance of injury at the hands of dishonest exhibitors. Among other things, these associations keep their members informed as to all unfair acts committed by exhibitors which may come to the association's attention and the membership co-operates individually by refraining to supply films to any exhibitor while in default or until he has purged himself of unjust practices.

"During these times of anti-trust laws and trust-busting enterprise of those in authority, not to mention treble damage suits and other actions for so-called conspiracy and what not, the question naturally arises as to the extent to which the members of these or similar associations may go in protecting themselves from unfair dealing, or positive dishonesty on the part of certain exhibitors. The question is a very important one and has been carefully considered by our counsel who have expressed the view that such protective associations are entirely lawful and that the members may agree not to deal with exhibitors of the class mentioned.

"Two principal legal propositions are involved, viz., liability under the libel and slander laws, and liability under the laws relating to conspiracies in restraint of trade.

"As to the risks incurred by a member of such an association in reporting derelictions of its customers, it need only be recalled that commercial agencies, such as Dun's and Bradstreet's, and many others of equal standing, have long been engaged in reporting upon merchants and others engaged in business. These agencies are fully recognized and their confidential reports, made in good faith, to an interested party, are regarded as privileged communications, but a mercantile agency report is not within the privilege, if it be made to one not interested in the given matter, or if it be published for general circulation among the subscribers; and the same principle would apply to reports made by a mutual protective association, as well as to reports made to such an association by its members, with this most important qualification and exception that if the report be made not for the purpose of keeping members informed as to the credit and standing of the parties with whom they deal, but of blacklisting delinquent debtors in order to compel the payment of debts already due, such report might well not be regarded as within the privilege. As remarked in one of the reported cases:

> To blacklist a person in writing and thus publish of and concerning him that he is a delinquent debtor, when in fact he owes nothing, tends to injure his reputation, render him odious, and expose him to public contempt.

And the same is the case in regard to all other derelictions. In practically all of the States the truth of any statement is, however, its justification and a defense to an action for libel or slander. "Privilege" is a party's refuge when there is a mistake as to facts. But giving out information about another is essentially a dangerous matter and the branch manager who contemplates so doing should be most careful as to his facts.

"The so-called conspiracy phase of the matter need give no concern so long as the associations confine themselves to measures of a strictly protective character—that is, for the prevention of dishonest practices and unfair dealings on the part of their customers. But the instant that these associations would do anything like regulating prices or saying who shall or who shall not do business, or anything that is in restraint of trade, they would put themselves on a very dangerous ground. It is always better, of course, for dealers of all kinds to keep out of trade associations of a so-called protective character, and act upon individual decision lest some undesirable feature develop; but, where abuses can be corrected in no other way, it is proper—as it is certainly legal—for individuals to combine for mutual protection.

"In New York such associations have the sanction of law. Section 180 of the Membership Corporation Law, provides that > five or more persons may form a corporation, commonly called a board of trade or exchange, or a building exchange or association for the purpose of fostering trade and commerce, or the interests of those having a common trade, business, financial or professional interest, to reform abuses relative thereto, or to secure freedom from unjust or illegal actions, to diffuse accurate and reliable information as to the standing of merchants and other matters, etc., etc.

and was said in the case of Reynolds vs. Plumbers' Protective Association, 30 Miscellaneous Reports, at page 715:

> Merchants have a right to deal with whoever they choose. They have a right to sell their goods on credit or to demand a cash payment, and it is not unlawful for any number of persons to organize under the statute to protect themselves in trade, and they may agree not to sell their goods on credit, and such an act would not be in restraint of trade or against public policy.

Some years ago a case arose in Kentucky in which the law was squarely set forth. A brewery claimed that one of its customers owed it $184.50. The brewery belonged to an association composed of all the breweries in Cincinnati. When the $184.50 was not paid, all the members of the association were notified of the fact and the dealer brought suit against the members of the association for damages, alleging that there was a conspiracy and that he had been libeled. The court said:

> It is not unlawful for several persons in trade to confederate together to protect themselves by lawful acts from dishonest debtors.

and there is no principle of law that compels a man to have business relations with a dishonest person. It has also been decided that whatever one man may do all men may do and what all men may do might they may do in concert if the sole purpose of the combination is to advance the proper interests of the members, and it is conducted in a lawful manner.

and as late as last year it was decided in a case in the Federal Court in Massachusetts in which conspiracy in retraint of trade under the Sherman law was alleged, that persons have a right to associate for the purpose of advancing their own interests by discriminating against other persons, if such discrimination is based upon proper and legal grounds, e. g., failure to pay bills due to members of the association.

"The C. O. D. and delayed-return abuses are not limited, in so far as redress is concerned, to such action as an association might take. If an exhibitor is bound by the terms of his lease to return films at a certain date and withholds them from the leasing exchange or if he attaches to the return conditions which he has no right to make, for instance, a C. O. D. charge, he commits what in law is called a conversion and is liable for the damages occasioned by his act. The damage would not be measured in a C. O. D. case, by the amount of the C. O. D. charge; for one is not allowed to derive any advantage from his own wrong. Some day an exchange will sue one of these people on account of substantial losses and recover a substantial judgment. Furthermore, an action might be brought to recover the specific property. The exchanges are not obliged to submit to these abuses."

Bosworth and Marshall Join Lasky Forces

Two Well Known Figures on Stage and Screen Will Soon Appear on Paramount Program.

HOBART BOSWORTH and Tully Marshall, well known figures on stage and screen, have signed contracts with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to appear permanently in its productions on the Paramount program. The engagement of these two distinguished actors by Lasky has in itself an element of drama. They were originally engaged by Cecil B. De Mille solely for his great production based on the story of Joan of Arc, in which Geraldine Farrar is soon to star. So striking was the work which these two players did in that production that Mr. De Mille enthusiastically recommended that they be engaged by the Lasky company for its regular program features, and his suggestion was immediately adopted.

Hobart Bosworth.

When Mr. Bosworth appears in his first production under the new agreement, he will in fact make his reappearance on the Paramount Program after a long absence. Those who have been in the motion picture industry for a few years will remember that at the formation of the Paramount Program the contributing producers were the Famous Players, Lasky and Bosworth Companies. Hobart Bosworth was the star of the pictures which were produced under his name. This company has since been expanded on the Paramount Program into the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures. Bosworth, meanwhile, tired of the managerial end of the business, which proved too much of a burden in addition to his work before the camera, resigned from the company in order to devote himself entirely to screen work. Now he returns to the Paramount Program solely in the capacity of a player.

Tully Marshall is one of the best known actors on the screen to-day and has had a distinguished career before the footlights, appearing in "Paid in Full," "The City," "The Talker," and numerous other plays. He is a valuable addition to the company assembled at the Lasky studio.

Brenon's Pretentious Plans

Engages Florence Reed for "The Queen Mother"—Mary Garden Heard From.

HERBERT BRENON has engaged Florence Reed for his next Selznick Pictures production following "War Brides," which is now virtually completed. The photodrama in which Miss Reed will appear is "The Queen Mother," a powerful drama of the Middle Ages.

"The Lone Wolf," a picture play based upon Louis Joseph Vance's popular novel of the same name, which was announced last week as Mr. Brenon's next production, has been postponed temporarily. Mr. Brenon discovered that Miss Reed was available for an immediate engagement, and as he had been looking for a star for "The Queen Mother" for several months, he closed a contract with her, and will begin working on this new production as soon as "War Brides" with Nazimova as the star is off his hands.

Meanwhile Mr. Brenon has received a cablegram from Mary Garden, who has been passing the summer in Paris, stating that she will be returning to America in December. She will fill her engagement with the Chicago Grand Opera Company for the regular season, and in March will begin work under Mr. Brenon's direction in her first photodrama. Miss Garden has been receiving alluring offers from many moving picture producers for several years, but finally elected to make her screen debut under Mr. Brenon's direction, after seeing "A Daughter of the Gods." It was this picture also which made Nazimova a convert to Brenon's advanced ideas in photoplay art.

In "The Queen Mother," Mr. Brenon has an entirely new theme, so far as the photodrama is concerned. For several months he has been working out for the camera a version of one of the most dramatic stories in all history. It is ideal for a production of the Brenon quality, for it combines with an absorbing story an opportunity for magnificence of settings such as cannot be found in modern stories. The play deals with the Middle Ages, the time when the Italian renaissance influenced all art, literature, life and politics of Europe, especially in the countries along the Mediterranean. Luxury and splendor such as had not been known since barbaric times was indulged in by the royalty and nobility, but redeemed from the crudities of ancient times by the fact that there arose a great host of masters in all the arts who, under the patronage of the rich and powerful, produced classics in painting and architecture that are still the despair of their modern worshipers.

It was also the period of social and political unrest, court intrigues, and innumerable other complexities. Many of Shakespeare's greatest plays were created upon this splendid background. The atmosphere of "Romeo and Juliet," "The Merchant of Venice," "Two Gentlemen of Verona" and numerous other great classics was taken from this medieval kaleidoscope.

All this magnificence, however, while it will be reproduced faithfully in "The Queen Mother," will not be permitted to interfere with the carrying out of Mr. Brenon's cardinal principle, that no play is greater than its story, and that spectacles must never be allowed to interfere with the direct telling of the story. The plot of "The Queen Mother" has been adapted by Mr. Brenon from an obscure source, and is of a nature which demands regal setting. The queen from whom the play takes its title is one of the most tragic figures in all history. A young woman, of the most opulent charm, she wielded almost absolute power, and many stories are told of her cruelty. There was, however, a softer side to her emotions, a love which influenced her every action. This was her affection for a son who, by force of circumstances, owing to the intrigues of court, was never permitted to know the identity of his mother. From this complex situation there has been evolved a drama which, for intensity of interest and magnificence of investiture, has seldom been equaled.

This production completes the Brenon program of Selznick Pictures until next summer. "War Brides" will be released in November, and "The Queen Mother" and "The Lone Wolf, completed in the course of the fall and winter, so that Mr. Brenon will be free by the time Miss Garden is ready for the great production which he has in contemplation for her. It has been widely reported that "Thais" would be the Garden spectacle, because this was one of her greatest operatic triumphs. This, however, has not been finally decided. There are several other roles for which this most popular of all operatic actresses is equally well adapted, and the selection will not be made until she has consulted with Mr. Brenon after her arrival.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

ONTARIO EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION.

Holds Annual Meeting and Election of Officers at Toronto, Ont.—Business in Good Shape.

ANOTHER milestone in the history of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario was passed on Sunday, October 8, when the third annual meeting was held in the Carls-Rite Hotel, Toronto, in the presence of fifty members of the organization. The exhibitors first gathered around the merry tables for a feast and business matters received attention only after a complete measure of mirth had been enjoyed. It was the biggest show that the association had ever staged, so far as annual confabs are concerned. The multiple reel feature was, of course, the election of officers, but with the unwinding of the celluloid it was found that the cast became practically the same as the previous year's selections. A. Bailie, manager of the Cumbac theater, proved as popular as ever in the contest for the executive seat and was re-elected. He now shares some of the stage setting with Leon Brick, manager of the new Regent theater, who was picked out for the honorary presidency. The remaining principals of the company for the ensuing year are as follows: Vice-president, H. Alexander, Doric theater, formerly on the executive committee; secretary-treasurer, W. Liscombe; assistant secretary, H. Jennings, Mary Pickford theater, a former member of the committee also.

The single and split-reel items of business on the program had to do with war tax arrangements and amendments; a campaign for the enlargement of the membership and a forecast of the social events of the coming season.

The association is making efforts to have the war tax removed from admission tickets for children while representations are also being made to the Ontario government to secure the sole privilege for the sale and distribution of war tax tickets among the exhibitors of the province. At present some of the exchanges and a number of government representatives in outside centers, as well as the government itself, are looking after the sale of the tax rolls to the theaters. The association wants to handle the tickets in order to secure the commissions and a little prestige as well.

Not one exhibitor present would listen to hard time tales and it was the consensus of opinion that the film business throughout Ontario is in a very satisfactory shape. Further, there was no complaint regarding a shortage of operators, although war's demands have been heavy. There are enough operators to go around, but no one is enjoying any holidays, enforced or otherwise.

The association enjoys a ninety-five per cent. membership in the city of Toronto, but the exhibitors in outside centers are still somewhat delinquent in responding to the invitations to support the association. Plans are being laid to bring the attention of out-of-town exhibitors to the advantages to be gained through co-operating with the Ontario organization, the machinery of which is well-oiled and running smoothly.

The exhibitors will stage several spectacular features during the winter, including another screen ball.

The club quarters of the organization border closely upon an elaborate scale and are practical. These headquarters will be maintained throughout the coming term.

CINCINNATI LEAGUE MEETING CALLED.

Tuesday evening, October 31, has been fixed as the date for the first regular fall meeting of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, according to Secretary H. Serkowich. At that time an informal dinner will also be held, Wielert's, a famous eating place, being the scene of the affair. Nominations will be announced of tickets for the several offices, to be voted on at the coming December election, and plans will be discussed for the fall and winter business of the league. It is expected that there will be some interesting matters coming up regarding the position of the league on the subject of Federal control of films, which the organization is on record as favoring.

NEW HAMPSHIRE EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

Meet at Manchester and Elect Officials—E. H. Horstmann Representing National Organization Addresses the Meeting.

A VERY successful meeting of New Hampshire motion picture exhibitors took place at Manchester on October 5. National Committeeman Ernest H. Horstmann, who has won great credit for himself all through New England by his ardent and intelligent labors in the cause of organization, called the meeting at Manchester to order. In his opening address he spoke of the need of concerted action this coming winter when the legislature of New Hampshire will be session. If any hostile legislation is attempted the exhibitors must be ready to meet it and fight for their rights. His remarks were well received and found an echo in several speeches made by New Hampshire exhibitors. An organization was effected immediately.

The following officials of the new organization were elected unanimously: President, C. H. Bean of Franklin; vice-president, W. H. O'Neil, Manchester; secretary, M. Lorenzo, Manchester; treasurer, A. L. Couture, Manchester. The following exhibitors were elected as members of the executive committee: John H. Bartlett, Portsmouth; G. D. Barrett, Dover; E. L. Campbell, Keene; George Piece, Manchester; Edward Gilman, Berlin.

The meeting was attended by seventy-six exhibitors, representing all parts of the State. An application for a State charter was immediately forwarded to the National President as New Hampshire is anxious to affiliate with the National organization.

MEETING OF ILLINOIS BRANCH.

Open Session Attended by Two Hundred Exhibitors and Members from Other Branches of the Trade.

THE meeting of the Illinois branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held in their hall in the Masonic Temple, Friday, Oct. 6, was the largest regular meeting held in two years. The meeting was called at 11 A. M., and by the time the Dutch lunch was served, over 200 exhibitors were present.

Promptly at 12:30 the president declared the session open, and every seat in the hall was filled with exhibitors, exchangemen and other representatives of the trade.

The opening address was made by M. A. Choynski, who dwelt upon the great benefits of organization, the value of the screen as an advertising medium, and the great influence the League will have in the coming election if the members work in concert.

Sam Spedon, the well-known publicity director from New York, who was in the city in the interests of the one-reel film, "The Government in Action," then spoke on the evils of over-production.

After Mr. Spedon the following speakers made short addresses on subjects specially apt at the present time, in connection with the moving picture industry: H. Schoenstadt, W. J. Sweeney, Adolph Powell, H. Lieberthal, R. O. Proctor, R. Fulton, Sam Katz, Louis H. Frank, Alfred Hamburger, Joseph Hopp, Charles Abrams, Sidney Smith and George Laing.

The following resolutions regarding street carnivals were then submitted and adopted, and a committee including Messrs. Schoenstadt, Frank and Katz was instructed to present them to the Mayor of the City of Chicago, to the Commissioner of Streets, to the States Attorney and the City Council:

Whereas in the past and also at the present time, street carnivals held in the city of Chicago work nothing but hardship on the merchants and exhibitors in the neighborhoods where said carnivals are being held, and

Whereas, said carnivals have a tendency to bring undesirable people to the neighborhood, and

Whereas most of these carnivals hold games of chance offering chickens, ducks, geese, candy and other merchandise as prizes; we, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Illinois branch, hereby protest against any and all carnivals that hold free shows and erect booths in streets for this sale of merchandise, and do most emphatically object to said carnivals holding these games of chance,

The chairman of the Political Action Committee then declared that the committee would meet on Wednesday, Oct. 11, at 11.00 A. M. at the League headquarters.

Messrs. Proctor, Judell and Balaban, forming a committee from the F. I. L. M. Club, of Chicago, then submitted a proposition from a delivery company which guarantees insurance against loss of all films after they leave exchanges, and also guarantees their prompt delivery. The matter was referred to the executive committee of the League, and action will be taken on the same at the next meeting of the executive committee.

A member present then announced that a truce had been declared between the two warring operators' unions in the city, and that all differences for the time being had been settled by a board of arbitration.

The next meeting of the Illinois branch will be held at headquarters on Friday, Nov. 3. Open meeting will be declared at 12:30 P. M., when a free Dutch lunch will be served.

Fifteen new members were admitted to the Illinois branch at the meeting held Oct. 6, and applications for as many more were received.

DEADWOOD EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE.

Motion Picture Men of South Dakota Organize and Elect H. B. Hurst President.

NOT to be outdone by the larger and more pretentious moving picture centers of the country, the theater owners of the Deadwood, S. D., section last week organized the Black Hills Exhibitors' League. The organization was effected at a meeting held at the Deadwood theater, Deadwood, and which was attended by a score or more exhibitors from that and other cities in the immediate vicinity.

Advancement of the interests jointly of the public and the picture show owners is the prime object of the league, according to its constitution and by-laws. The exhibitors banded together for the purpose of co-operating with one another even to the extent of exchanging ideas with the object in view of boosting the film industry.

Following the completion of the work of organizing the first action taken by the league was to adopt a resolution in favor of affiliating with the National Exhibitors' League.

The Black Hills Exhibitors' League also will serve the purpose of a trade bureau and a screen club. It is the purpose of the officers to make the organization a social as well as a business one. The following officers were elected: President, H. B. Hurst of Deadwood; first vice-president, J. F. Parks of Hot Springs; second vice-president, Frank Keys of Rapid City; corresponding secretary, Leo Peterson of Belle Fourche; treasurer, James O'Neill of Spearfish; executive committee, E. L. Crew of Lead, Burt Burton of Sturgis and Arthur Rose of Rapid City.

The Deadwood Exhibitors' League is unique in more ways than one. It is probably the first association of its kind to be formed outside the big moving picture centers and where no exchanges are located. And then it is distinct in that it has for its president probably the most remarkable exhibitor in the whole film world.

H. B. Hurst, head of the league, is owner of the Deadwood opera house. He is blind, but in spite of the affliction, personally manages his own theater and selects his pictures. He "sees" every film that is displayed in his house before he allows it to be exhibited to the public and each photoplay must measure up to a high standard before it receives his approval. Road men and representatives of the various exchanges, who have visited the Deadwood opera house in quest of contracts, declare that this blind genius is the most exacting critic with whom they have had to deal.

Hurst "sees" the pictures through the medium of his 14-year-old niece, Ruth Wrightman. She is his constant companion. When a picture is to be reviewed the pair selects average seats and the performance begins. The girl makes no attempt to foist her own judgment of a picture on her uncle. She merely reveals the plot to him by reading the leaders and describing the characters. According to persons who have attended these unique showings, Hurst grasps the spirit of each picture as readily as if possessed of his full sight, growing enthusiastic when the play is full of action and expressing his disapproval when anything of questionable character appears in the film.

Hurst probably does more work about his theater, personally than any other exhibitor, large or small, in the country. In addition to managing his house, reviewing his own pictures and managing the floor during performances he makes all of his own lobby frames. These are of heavy brass and unusually artistic.

BAY STATERS PREPARE FOR ANNUAL BALL.

Massachusetts Branch of Exhibitors' League Set November 22 as Date of Big Affair.

THE Massachusetts branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is preparing for its annual ball for 1916. The Bay State men hold the reputation of doing things in a big way. The reputation was firmly established by the manner in which they conducted the big shows of 1914 and 1915. Last year they entertained more players than ever before had been known to attend a similar function outside of New York or Los Angeles. Also in the Hub it is undisputed that the two balls of the local picture men have been the largest indoor events in the history of New England.

The ball this year will be held in the Arena, the same building where the preceding functions have taken place. The date has been advanced about a month, the big day this year being Wednesday, November 22. That will bring it just one week earlier than the New York ball.

Sam Grant, as heretofore, will be general manager. Between now and November 22 he will divide his time between his Boston and New York offices, respectively, 127 Pleasant street and Room 904 Columbia Theater Building. The executive committee aiding Mr. Grant is composed of H. L. Asher, G. M. Clark, H. F. Campbell, Richard W. Drown, L. Dadmun, Joseph Di Pesa, H. A. Gilman, F. J. Howard, Ernest H. Horstmann, P. F. Lydon, R. D. Marson, S. M. Moscow, Herman Rifkin, T. Spry, A. F. Washburn and H. I. Wasserman.

Mr. Grant said this week in New York that the 1916 event would be conducted on the same general lines as previous ones, although it was probable there would be no repetition of the popularity contest of last year. The committee would appeal to the general public on the reputation of what had gone before. Mr. Grant intimated that particular attention would be paid to the composition of the grand march, but added he was going to keep quiet for a while as to the details.

The price of tickets has been placed at $1 for each person. Boxes, including four admissions, are $10 and with five admissions are $15.

GREAT NORTHERN CLOSES TEMPORARILY.

The Great Northern Film Company, which was established in New York in 1908 as the American office of the Nordisk Films Company, Copenhagen, has decided to temporarily discontinue its office in the United States for reasons which may be laid down to the conditions created by the European conflict. The company, shortly before the outbreak of the war, had contemplated the establishing of an American studio, and a general expansion of its interests in the American market, but has found it impossible to carry out its plans as originally intended. The regular releasing schedule has been affected more or less during the past year or more, and until these conditions subside, the company has decided to discontinue releasing its product regularly as heretofore. Ingvald C. Oes, general manager, contemplates a trip to Copenhagen just as soon as pending business matters of the office are sufficiently adjusted. He will appoint a representative to look after the interests of his concern, and to arrange for the release of several of the company's six and seven reel special features which have recently been completed.

PRESIDENT LAEMMLE ATTENDS BIG OPENING.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, returned to New York on Thursday, Oct. 12, from Chicago, where he attended the opening performances in the Studebaker of his company's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." The Universal president expresses his conviction that the picture is the biggest thing ever shown in Chicago, and he ought to know Chicago—that's where he started in the moving picture business. He said the Studebaker, seating 1,400, was packed solid for all performances during the three days he was in the town, and that on Wednesday evening a thousand dollars worth of business was turned from the door. The prices of admission run from 25 cents to $1. The production will be put on in New York as soon as possible.

GOLD KING SCREEN RECEIVES AWARD.

The Gold King Screen Company of Altus, Oklahoma, have just received official notification from the Exposition Committee of the National Exhibitors' Association of America that the Gold King Screen has been awarded the Certificate of Honor at the Exposition recently held in Chicago.

Censorship Question in Washington, D. C.

Commissioner Brownlow Objects to a Certain Class of Pictures and Warns Exhibitors Against Showing Them

By CLARENCE L. LINZ.

THE censorship question in Washington, D. C., is right up to the exhibitors and manufacturers, according to Louis Brownlow, member of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who, at present, is right in the limelight as a result of the stand that he has taken in opposing the exhibition of the photoplay "Purity."

There are two sides to every story, and there are certainly two sides to that involving this photoplay, for while Tom Moore, who has booked it for showing at his Strand theater, has many letters from his patrons, who criticize the action of Mr. Brownlow in condemning it, the latter has been importuned to take this stand by an equal number of people. Realizing the possibilities of the situation, the Washington correspondent of The Moving Picture World sought an interview with Commissioner Brownlow, with the following results:

"Pictures are getting worse," was his opening statement. "There is absolutely no question but that the moral tone of the moving pictures has been going down—not of all pictures, but there is an attempt on the part of some of the producers to put out films that appeal to purient minds. I can hardly go out on the street, or enter a club, or enter a street car that people do not come up to me and ask what I am going to do about 'these rotten movies.' I, personally, have left two or three exhibitions lately disgusted with what I saw on the screen.

"I am not narrow-minded. I have been intensely interested in motion pictures for a long time and, in fact, have been classed and class myself as a 'movie fan.' I have also been a consistent opponent of censorships—I do not believe that a censorship is necessary if the producers and exhibitors will take due warning from the signs of the times.

"In the case of 'Purity,' a film which I did not see, and the story of which I knew only from relation by those who did see it," continued the Commissioner, "there was an opportunity to make a general ruling against nudity on the screen which could be enforced without bringing into the question the factor of discretion which is a necessary factor in a general censorship. Whatever the motive of the story, there is no doubt but that the appeal to the public was to go to the theater and see a naked woman on the screen. It was so advertised and so far as the invitation held out to the public, it was the intent of the exhibition. That is the reason I asked Mr. Moore, of the Strand theater, not to exhibit the film in Washington. In future nudity will not be permitted on the screen in the Washington theaters.

"I very much regret the incursion of the motion picture producers into the field of the vampire-type films. If the exhibitors of Washington will exercise their undoubted right and privileges of refusing to book films of an improper character; will refuse to book films which, either in themselves or through their advertising, appeal to the prurient tastes, there will be no necessity of censorship in the District of Columbia. A period of several months will be given to exhibitors in which they will have ample opportunity to demonstrate their willingnes to co-operate with the authorities in cleaning up the screen. If this co-operation is not forthcoming, I firmly believe that a censorship will become absolutely necessary."

Commissioner Brownlow, going over a list of subjects that have been taken as a part of the various photoplays shown in the National Capital recently, stated that there were many things which make films objectionable besides such as would bring them into the class of lewd and lascivious stories. He pointed to one photoplay, a recent release, wherein there was depicted the devouring of the body of a human being by buzzards. This, according to Mr. Brownlow, was carrying out the theme of the story with too much realism. A great many people left the theater before the exhibition was completed and there followed a meeting of a score or more indignant patrons, who condemned the management for allowing such a photoplay to be shown in the theater.

At the District Building it is being pointed out that nothing more is to be demanded with respect to the exhibiton of motion pictures in Washington than has always been demanded from the legitimate stage. It is asked why an exhibitor should be allowed to feature a naked woman on the screen, when a naked woman would not be allowed to appear upon the stage. It cannot be seen where a comparison of these can be drawn with the contents of an art gallery—a marble statue of a naked woman has not the surroundings that would make the naked woman in a film objectionable.

When one comes right down to the fine points of the controversy, it cannot be said that the District Commissioners are asking unreasonable things when they request the co-operation of exhibitors in eliminating from their programs photoplays that are decidedly "off color." The Commissioners and others upon whom the welfare of the city devolves state that they do not have as much trouble with the regular program producing companies as with those who, in motion picture parlance, are known as bookers of "wild cats." This is emphasized particularly in the case of a film recently shown here which had been made by a very well known producer, who, it is said, after having seen what he had made, refused to let it go out with his name attached. He, a producer, was ashamed of the product; yet exhibitors have booked it and brought upon themselves the criticism of many people, thus increasing the demand for censorship.

And films are not the only things that are being criticized just at present in Washington. Some of the advertising, newspaper and poster advertising needs going over with a fine-tooth comb and the removal therefrom of a great deal of material that even the most liberal-minded would deem offensive. Mr. Brownlow is not far wrong when he declares that the business is being brought to a low level by a few who think only of money and not of the future. There are those who declare that they cannot make money unless they cater to the desires of the general public and that those desires contemplate the showing of pictures against which complaint is made. Commissioner Brownlow combats this statement, saying that the exhibitors secure a certain following but do not obtain that increase in patronage which would surely come from the proper kind of entertainment.

From time to time, as reported in the columns of The Moving Picture World, there has been talk of censorship for the District of Columbia. To all who have aproached him on the subject, Commissioner Brownlow has stated that there was no need for such supervision of films, that the exhibitors were taking care to see to it that little if anything objectionable was being shown, but of late it looks, from all reports, as though he would have to go back on these statements and a warning is to be seen in his remarks "if this co-operation is not forthcoming, I firmly believe that a censorship will become absolutely necessary."

"CIVILIZATION" LEAVING THE PARK THEATER.

"Civilization," the Thos. H. Ince $1,000,000 film spectacle, which registers its three-hundredth performance at the Park theater, Columbus Circle, on October 22, has by force of circumstances, to leave that theater the same night, simply because of its outstanding success. It appears that a wealthy syndicate has opened negotiations for the acquisition of the New York State rights of the picture and wants to exploit it in their own way. They figure they can make more money out of the spectacle by showing it simultaneously in as great a number of places as possible, rather than by confining its presentation to one large theater in a town. The negotiations have reached that stage where it is obligatory upon the present owners of the picture to close the run.

JAMES LOUGHBOROUGH JOINS METRO.

James Loughborough, well-known New York newspaperman and magazine writer, has accepted a position in Metro's publicity department. He takes the place in the publicity forces made vacant by Tom Geraghty's departure for Hollywood, where the latter has gone to write scenarios for Lasky.

Mr. Loughborough left the staff of the Evening World to take his present place. He has been a member of the staffs of several New York papers and has been engaged in editorial work for many years. His career embraces terms of service with the New York Evening Journal and New York Evening Sun. Lately Mr. Loughborough has been devoting considerable time to the writing of fiction and magazine articles.

American Films in Brazil

Sao Paulo Has the Best of the Country's Business in Moving Pictures.

Sao Paulo, Brazil, Sept. 19.

WHILE all the American films that come to Brazil have their first runs in Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo surely has a greater business than the capital. The most prominent daily newspaper has a big advertising patronage from owners of moving picture theaters, on Sundays the space passing two full pages. This, naturally, gets full houses, because every film of prominence is fully described in the advertisements. Rivalry between three or four large exchanges controlling their own theaters makes good business for the newspapers. At times there will be a full page describing some important work.

Sao Paulo has not yet arrived at the continuous performance stage, as has Rio. In Rio the theaters are so small that only short sessions can be given. One theater there has two halls, and the film is taken from hall to the other. The waiting time is thus reduced to a maximum of thirty minutes. Sao Paulo gives matinees on important days.

Abraham Carlos, representing William Fox, is doing big business, and predictions are made here and in Rio that the big Fox features will soon displace all others. Evidence of this is seen in the great crowds that are seeing such films as "The Calumniator," "The Family Stain," "A Parisian Romance," "Secrets of High Society," "The Spirit of New York," "The Song of Hate," etc., which are being exhibited in every theater in the city. Nothing has been seen here to compare with the quality of these films. Other American houses are represented by very ordinary films. Pictures of strictly American interest do not draw people to the theaters. The one exception is the film, "The Diary of Lord John," which never fails to interest. Only one section a week is shown, much to the regret of exhibitors, who always want to run serials oftener than is done in America. Another American film that was liked for its theme and execution was the Selig drama, "The Fifth Friend." A film which was out of the common run was the Violet Mersereau feature under the title of "The Road of Adventure." "The Man Inside," under the name of "The Really Culpable," with Edwin Stevens in a dual part, evoked little interest, except for the fine work of the principal.

The last named picture was a joke as to some its translations. People here are ever ready to find fault with little things, and there were titters in the audience when mistakes in translations were noted. Translators should read their own proofs on titles before allowing them to be taken. This is not the only picture with defective work in this line. A notable exception were the translations on the Powers pictures of insect life.

"Hypocrites" did not evoke any unusual interest, although crowds followed the advertising matter in the daily papers. It had only a short run in Rio before coming here.

"The Diary of Lord John" pleases good crowds all the time. The Universal cameraman would have seen evidence of appreciation of his work in the projection of the Egyptian's face toward the audience. As the face with its horror approached nearer and nearer,one or two men in the audience shouted from fear. Another voice at the other side of the house shouted: "Nao chega!" ("It cannot reach you!")

Sara Bernhardt's "Jeanne Doré" had big crowds. Several people noted the lack of movement, but appreciated the reason.

Several used Chaplin films have been seen here.

Billie Ritchie comics are seen daily.

The Universal's "Graft" series has very little that appeals to local taste. There are people who wonder if any American idea is expressed in the acts of those characters who appear to take the law into their own hands as a means of remedying industrial abuses.

Italian films have their place here, since a large majority of the people of this city and state belong to the Italian race. To an American an Italian drama is a sad, agonizing thing that does not appeal to any of his senses. An Italian comedy is something hard to understand. In the words of a famous critic, comedy must be tragedy to the actors if it is to be funny to the auditors. Latins do not as a rule make good actors, because they are mostly all acting in real life, so that when they try to act in reel life they overdo the thing.

The Companhia Cinematographica Brasileira controls the following theaters in Sao Paulo: Pathe Palacio, Colyseu Campos Elyseos, Marconi, Iris, Sao Paulo and Colombo.

The Empresa Cinematographica D'Errico Bruns & Co. controls the Rio Branco, the Royal and the Brasil.

The Empresa Cinematographica Pathe (Zieglitz & Castello) controls a large number of important films, but has no theater.

The Empresa Cinematographica J. R. Staffa has an immense business in films, mostly Nordisks, besides running the Universal theater.

The Agencia Geral Cinematographica (Mattos & Sestini) controls a great variety of films of all makes, running them in the order given at the theaters named: Royal, Brasil, Rio Branco, Campos Elyseos, Barra Funda, Congresso, Colombo, Esperia, Eden, Sao Paulo, Iris, Eros, Pathe Palacio, Vesper, La Paz, Eldorado, Marconi, San José, Minerva, America, Universal, Sant' Anna, Palace and Oriente.

The Empress Peliculas d'Luxo da America do Sul, with Alex. Kenna at its head in Rio, has opened a branch in Sao Paulo. Good business is expected, as only pictures of the best American producers will be handled.

Elaborate Musical Score

Metro Production of "Romeo and Juliet" Will Have a Classical Setting Arranged to Blend with the Situation Presented.

A setting of classical music is announced by the Metro Pictures Corporation for the forthcoming Metro production of "Romeo and Juliet" in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are the stars.

There will be motifs for each of the chief characters, and in the strongest scenes there are special musical settings which blend perfectly with the situations presented. The composers are Irénée Bergé, who was a pupil of the great Massenet in Paris, and Samuel M. Berg, who arranges the musical settings for the feature photoplay productions of the Metro Pictures Corporation and other film organizations. They were aided in their work by B. A. Rolfe of the Rolfe Studios, who himself is a finished musician of distinction. They have taken the music of Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" and Tschaikowsky's famous "Romeo and Juliet" symphony and so synchronized the two that there is a musical interpretation for every situation.

Their first idea was to take only the music of the Gounod opera and rearrange it to fit the screen interpretation of the Shakesperian tragedy, but as they went along with their work they realized that something profoundly beautiful was possible.

The two composers then conferred with Mr. Rolfe and Max Karger, general manager of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. The result of that conference was that the musical experts decided to rearrange the music of Gounod's opera and the Tschaikowsky symphony so that they would harmonize perfectly with the scenes shown on the screen. In this work Mr. Rolfe and Mr. Karger both gave valuable assistance.

When they had finished their efforts there was the overture—a magnificent musical story of the love of Romeo and Juliet. Then came the motifs. Those for Romeo and for Juliet were taken from Gounod. The love motif is from Tschaikowsky's symphony, as is the motif for Friar Laurence. For Peter, the servant to Juliet's nurse, there is a motif which Mr. Berg has arranged from the opera of Gounod. In the Metro production the parents of Romeo and of Juliet appear. For them the composers have arranged the Romeo and the Juliet motifs. In the wedding scene the music from the opera is played.

It took thirteen weeks to complete the Bushman-Bayne production of "Romeo and Juliet" and all of the leading characters spoke Shakespeare's lines while going through the appropriate action. Six hundred players were employed, and in the cast several of the greatest theatrical families of America and England are represented, among them being a Booth, a Sothern, a Mantell, a Kemble and a Hall Caine. The cost of the costumes alone amounted to $35,000.

WALLY VAN LEAVES VITAGRAPH.

Wally Van, who has been with the Vitagraph Company for the past six years, first as player and then as director, has left the employ of that concern and will take a vacation before looking about for another connection. Mr. Van's last production was "The Scarlet Runner," a serial.

Submarine Photographic Rights

Williamson Brothers Will Fully Protect Their Property—Made Undersea Photoplays Possible.

WITHOUT intention to deceive, some of the most reliable of the daily and weekly papers have erroneously published statements and news items which have had a tendency to mislead as to where the true credit for all submarine motion picture photography rightfully belongs.

Ernest and George Williamson.

The Williamson Brothers alone are the originators and sole producers of this latest and most valuable addition to the motion picture industry, and the only pictures now before the public which have been manufactured with the aid of the Williamson inventions and submarine photographic devices, are "The Williamson Submarine Expedition Pictures," now being shown in nearly every corner of the universe, and the unusual and marvelous submarine scenes in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which opened at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, on October 9.

Without the aid of these inventions and devices and the scientific knowledge and accomplishments of the Williamson Brothers, neither of these noted pictures could have been manufactured. In a period of time covering more than four years the Williamson Brothers and the Submarine Film Corporation have expended a half million dollars in continuous undersea research, with submarine chambers, collapsible tubes, diving devices and special photographic appliances, all of which have been fully protected under United States and foreign patents rights. During these years of operations and research work, the Williamson Brothers have gone down under the sea, through the Williamson tube, to the photographic chamber below, and have cruised about over the floor of the ocean, searching out locations of practically all the old wrecks known in the West Indies, and have charted their locations carfeully for future use.

In the unusual undersea film stories that the Williamson Brothers will produce, will be shown clearly these old derelicts of the pirate days, the remains of old Spanish vessels and treasure chests, and the ancient armor and fittings of the vessels of the Spanish main.

In the Saragossa Sea and in sheltered spots of the thousands of islands in the Carribean Sea are to be found the fitting haunts of the deep sea monsters. It is here that scientists, submarine engineers, expert divers, and men skilled in the habits of the shark, the octopus, the sea spider and other monsters of the deep, will battle with them in their natice haunts with the purpose of weaving this most thrilling feature of adventure into the thread of the deep-sea pictures.

Floating studios, fully equipped for the carrying of one or more companies and directors, will encircle the islands of the West Indies, making pictures with tropical background and native environment. Sea-going yachts of sufficient capacity for this work have been contracted for, and in addition to submarine pictures, tropical and marine features will be produced in lengths ranging from five to ten reels.

The phenominal success which greeted the "Williamson Submarine Expedition Pictures," coupled with the later marvelous submarine scenes in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," made under the personal supervision of the Williamson Brothers, have combined in giving them a world-wide reputation.

Executive offices are established on the eighth floor of the Longacre Building, New York City, and branches are being opened in London, Chicago, Los Angeles and Sydney.

Latest Pathe News Scoops

Claims a Beat in Arrival of Submarine Victims and First World Series Game.

THE Pathe News on Monday, October 9, performed a feat that is notable in the annals of news films. At nine p. m. it was showing to the audiences of the Strand, Keith's Palace, Broadway and Loew's theaters, scenes of the survivors rescued from the vessels sunk by the German submarine U-53, off Newport, R. I. The survivors were landed at Newport on Monday morning by the U. S. torpedo boat destroyers which had rescued them. A Pathe News cameraman, sent to Newport on Sunday night when the story was first flashed over the wires, was awaiting them, secured his pictures and then rushed them to Jersey City by special messenger.

At Jersey City they were developed, cut, printed and titled at top speed. Prints were delivered before 9 o'clock the same day to the New York theaters showing the news, and special messengers were sent with them to Boston and Philadelphia. In consequence, according to the testimony of the various theater managers who received the pictures, the Pathe News scored a clean beat.

Only the day before the Pathe News had accomplished another "scoop," similarly noteworthy. Pictures of the first World's Series baseball game at Boston on Saturday were delivered in Jersey City the same night, and were shown in the most prominent New York, Boston and Philadelphia theaters on Sunday. In New York, Keith's Palace, Proctor's, Loew's and the Strand were among those showing them; in Philadelphia the Stanley and the Palace; in Boston the Orpheum, St. James and Fenway.

It goes without saying that the theaters showing these timely and interesting pictures were able to "pack them in" by means of special posters. The Pathe Exchange in New York, Philadelphia and Boston, under the direction of Business Manager Seelye, gave immediate and efficient co-operation in order to "put the thing over" properly in each instance.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, summed it all up when he said: "News events like those of the submarine survivors and World's Series baseball games rival in drawing power in the motion picture theaters the best features, especially when they are put out as quickly as these. We are making special efforts to see that our news pictures are delivered to the exhibitor as soon as possible after the event. Our many successes along these lines is most gratifying to me for I am a firm believer in the value to the exhibitor of the Pathe News. Our long experience in news films, for ours was the first, has enabled us to eliminate waste motion until now feats that would have been a seven days' wonder a year or so ago are of almost weekly occurrence. We expect, however, to do even better in the future.

GAUMONT PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF OCT. 22.

The first release of the week of October 22 from the Gaumont Laboratories and Studios is No. 25 of "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film. The great industrial changes brought about in Europe by the war are shown in startling fashion in pictures of "French Munition Workers." A second section of this issue contrasts Eastern and Western Barbacues in the United States. The third section shows the method of ferrying trains across the Sacramento River in California.

"See America First" of October 25 is devoted to Hot Springs, Va. These pictures make plain to one why society has chosen it for a playground. The hotels, mountain drives, and springs have prominent places in the release. On the same reel is an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer.

The third single-reel release of the week is the Mutual Weekly.

The Gaumont Company will soon issue a fourth weekly single-reel to be known as "Mutual Tours Around the world." This will be a scenic and travel film of foreign lands, released every Tuesday. The first release will be Nov. 7.

Society of Motion Picture Engineers

Permanent Organization Effected at Hotel Astor Meeting—Officers Elected and Committees Named

ON OCTOBER 2, 1916, at the Hotel Astor, New York City, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers called a second meeting to perfect the permanent organization, elect permanent officers, and set the Society finally "on its legs." C. Francis Jenkins, of Washington, was temporary chairman, and Herbert Miles, New York City, filled the office of temporary secretary.

The following applications for membership were received and the entire list was unanimously elected to membership: C. A. Ackeley, Akeley Camera, Inc., New York City; C. F. Badgley, Badgley Cinema Company, Inc., New Rochelle, N. Y.; H. A. Campe, Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Company, East Pittsburgh, Pa.; H. B. Coles, Coles Picture Machine Corporation, New York; H. T. Edwards, Picture Theater Equipment Company, New York; R. G. Hastings, Motion Picture Apparatus Co., Inc., New York; M. D. Kopple, American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company, New York, William C. Kunzmann, National Carbon Co., Cleveland, Ohio; Max Mayer, M. J. Wehl & Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.; B. A. Proctor, Kineiken Apparatus Corporation, Bridgeton, N. J.; F. H. Richardson, Moving Picture World, New York; A. S. Victor, Victor Animatograph Company, Davenport, Iowa; R. E. Von Saal, New York; R. N. Wible, Westingtouse Electric & Mfg. Company, East Pittsburgh, Pa.; and H. T. Wilkins, Special Engineer, Pennsylvania Railroad.

Temporary Chairman Jenkins delivered the only address on the program during the entire proceedings, and it was not really an address, but merely a "talk" in which he outlined the purposes of the organization, and what it was expected the society would accomplish. F. H. Richardson, of the Moving Picture World, was the only other one who spoke at any length at all, and his talk only lasted two or three minutes. Mr. Richardson confined his remarks to calling attention to the fact that the loss to the industry through lack of standardization was something very huge. He said that the lack of standardization in one item alone caused a loss of approximately $50,000 per day.

The election of officers was in all cases unanimous, there being no opponents to any of the nominees. Mr. Richardson, of the Moving Picture World, was nominated for treasurer, but emphatically declined that or any other office on the plea that he could not undertake to be present at all meetings.

The election resulted as follows: C. Francis Jenkins, Washington, D. C., president; Don J. Bell, Chicago, Ill., vice-president for term of two years; E. M. Porter, New York, vice-president for term of one year; E. K. Gillett, New York, secretary; Paul Brocket, of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C.; treasurer. For the Board of Governors: H. B. Coles, New York, two years; H. T. Edwards, New York, two years; H. A. Campe, East Pittsburgh, Pa., one year; W. D. Westcott, Boston, Mass., one year. The organization was completed by the appointment of the following committees:

Friday and Saturday, April 6 and 7, 1917, were selected as the days for the next convention, and Atlantic City as the place.

The new society starts out with a herculean task before it. The waste traceable directely to standardization is something truly enormous, amounting in all its ramifications to very close to $50,000 a day. This seems like an impossible statement, but it really is not.

A glance at the committees disclose the names of men who ought to be able to bring to bear upon the problems presented both knowledge and experience well calculated to bring results. It is not expected that there will be any immediate or radical changes necessary or even desirable. Standardization cannot be brought about in a moment. It must necessarily be the work of time, and the first thing to be determined, in any particular case, is what had the standard ought to be. Perhaps the one biggest problem the society will encounter is that of the optical system of the projector. But even that question has been very greatly simplified through and by reason of the work done by the Projection Department of this paper during the past two years.

The Moving Picture World welcomes the "Society of Motion Picture Engineers" into the field. It wishes for the new society every success in its undertaking and will co-operate in everything under consideration for the benefit of the industry.

Irene Fenwick Joins Famous Players

IRENE FENWICK, celebrated stage star who is now appearing in "The Guilty Man," has been engaged by the Famous Players Film Company and will be starred by that concern in "Princess Zim Zim" on the Paramount Program, with Owen Moore playing opposite. Miss Fenwick is one of the most popular and most talented stars on the stage to-day and has already demonstrated her remarkable ability on the screen.

The record of Irene Fenwick on the stage is an enviable one. To trace only a few of her accomplishments, there is "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," in which she played opposite Douglas Fairbanks; "Along Came Ruth," in which she played the title role with great success; "The Song of Songs," in which she scored a great personal hit—and now "The Guilty Man," which has again proven her to be a supreme actress. Miss Fenwick's first Paramount picture will be "Princess Zim Zim," in which she plays the role of a Coney Island dancer who mixes into New York's most exclusive and uppish upper crust.

Irene Fenwick.

A particularly interesting feature of the engagement of Miss Fenwick is the fact that it was done at the suggestion of Edward Shelden, the author of the script. Mr. Sheldon wrote the play, "The Song of Songs," in which Miss Fenwick scored such a great hit and he declared that he believes her to be an ideal type for the role, after watching her work on the stage. The Famous Players had been holding the script for some time while searching for the right star to play the Princess.

With Miss Fenwick in the role of the princess and Owen Moore playing the young society chap, "The Princess Zim Zim" should prove a success.

"The Scarlet Oath"

Gail Kane Featured in Five-Reel Nihilist Photodrama, Produced by Peerless for World.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THE SCARLET OATH," a five-reel Peerless-World production, is elevated a few degrees above the plane of mediocrity only by the excellent work of Gail Kane. Miss Kane is seen in a dual role—twin sisters whose traits of character are as divergent as their physical selves are like—and she plays the parts in a manner that convinces the spectator that the sisters are really different persons. The production is not a vehicle for Miss Kane—it is she who carries the production, whose plot material has been borrowed in a large measure from Russian Nihilist pictures and plays that have gone before. For instance, there is the situation in which the despotic Russian chief of police offers the girl Nihilist and her father liberty from further prosecution if she will accept the Yellow Ticket if she will give her body to him.

The story by Frederic Kulz (scenariorized by Gardner Hunting) borders on straight melodrama throughout, and plausibility is considerably stretched in the manner of the girl Nihilist's escape from Russia after she has murdered the chief of police, who was responsible for the deaths of her father and of her mother. Her escape comes about when she is recognized as his fiance by the young American diplomatic representative, whose fiance is the girl's twin sister, adopted twenty years ago by wealthy Russians who live in America. The ending of the picture is rather depressing, inasmuch as it shows the girl Nihilist killed by a tool of the Russian police; and this after we have been led in sympathy with the girl who justifiably killed the police chief. Some of the Russian settings are rather "stagey."

Montagu Love makes an impressive chief of police. Philip Hahn plays the father of the sisters in a capable manner. Allan Hale is cast in the role of the young American. Others in the cast are Carleton Macey, Lillian Paige and Boris Korlin. Directed by Frank Powell and Travers Vale.

"The Sultana"

Pathe Five-Part Colored Subject of Balboa Production Interests from the Dramatic as Well as the Scenic Side.

RUTH ROLAND is the featured player in "The Sultana," a five-part release of the Pathe Exchange. The picture was produced at the Balboa studio; the Pathe company has finished it in colors. These add markedly to the attractiveness of the subject, giving the Southern California landscape the verdure of a New England summer. The story, which is by Henry C. Rowland, picks up markedly in interest in the latter half of the picture. In the beginning one of the drawbacks is a large cast.

Miss Roland is seen as Virginia Lowndes, a young woman of means, who gets into danger when she tries to help out of his difficulties a foolish young man. The youngster has entered into a wager that he can stage a hold-up and return the "goods" without being discovered or uncovered. He makes good on the first half of his proposition, but experiences a sinking of the heart when the trail begins to narrow. The entry of real crooks into the story complicates matters. There are melodramatic situations precipitated before young Kirkland sees the jewel "Sultana" returned to its owner.

The director of "The Sultana" has added much to the entertainment value of his story by his judicious selection of picturesque spots. Of these an efficient cameraman has made the most. The cast is composed of William Conklin, Charles Dudley, Frank Erlanger, Daniel Gilfeather, E. T. Peters, Edward J. Brady, Gordon Sackville and R. Henry Gray.

"The War Bride's Secret"

touches of farcical comedy are by the way of relief; they are not a part of the story which is tragic till the happy ending. It is pretty well acted and our chief criticism is that it moves slowly in places. The director has made ample use of close-up views of faces. Close-ups may carry the story on with a leap, but the amount of action that can be got from them in any story is limited. Here this reviewer felt at times that the action remained stationary while the head views of the faces were on the screen. The story is not very original, but has fair quality.

The backgrounds are Scotch and are astonishingly suggestive of the real Scotch country. Robert Burns' poems are used liberally in the sub-titles and the characters also help in the illusion. The heroine and the hero are workers on the great farm of the village rich man, a democratic, likable squire. The only heavy villain in the story is War, though the picture has a hunchback tale-bearer and the usual village usurer. The heroine's brother, a lazy village lad, manages to make things harder for his sister. The rich squire wants the girl to marry him and her stern father naturally demands that she do so. But war breaks out and the young men of the town have to go, the hero with them. He and the girl are married by the blacksmith-minister of the village and later he is reported killed. The blacksmith is also killed and the girl knows that she is to become a mother. She consents to marry the squire, who thinks that the bairn is his. Then the hero returns. The rich farmer sees how things are and leaves the community after making provision for the bairn. The hero and heroine live happily on the rich farm.

Triangle Program

"Jim Grimsby's Boy," Five-Reel Triangle Ince by Lanier Bartlett, Featuring Frank Keenan and Enid Markey, and "Atta Boy's Last Race," Five-Reel Fine Arts with Dorothy Gish in the Lead.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"JIM GRIMSBY'S BOY" is a genuine photodrama, with two very strong characterizations. In the power and consistency of the two leading roles, that of Jim Grimsby, impersonated by Frank Keenan, and the tomboy girl, "Bill," interpreted by Enid Markey, lies the deep human interest of the story. Where there is a strong foundation of character, as in this case, the incidents become of minor import—the story could be developed in a thousand different ways. The author, however, has chosen an entertaining structure, and the treatment is beyond adverse criticism—it is that of Reginald Barker under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Taken altogether, the story has a sincerity which makes itself felt, and a charm which most pictures lack.

Scene from "Jim Grimsby's Boy" (Triangle).

Keenan's interpretation of a dyspeptic old mountaineer, whose viewpoint is primitive and brutally masculine, rings true to the point of arousing deep sympathy for his women folk. His extremely narrow ambition is to have a son, one that he can raise to be as raw and uncouth as himself, the mock hero of a provincial. His wife bears him a girl babe and dies soon after, completely crushed by the harsh and overpowering masculinity of her husband. He seems to be incapable of noble sentiment when the girl grows up. He dresses her as a boy, calls her "Bill," lets her run wild on the mountains without education, yet he is delightfully inconsistent in his insistence that she shall cook, clean house and serve him as he would exact from any woman. He merely indulges a lot of native brutality at her expense.

Engraved upon the girl's nature is the wild and stubborn code of her father—she would not betray him in spite of his brutality—yet it is intermingled with the longings of her sex for what is beautiful and feminine in self-expression. In a revolt against her condition, inspired by an old fashion magazine and the attentions of a plucky young sheriff, she gathers courage to such an extent that her father begins to appreciate the manly side of her, but he is determined to test the bravery of the "tin" sheriff, and he does so by a daring expedient. Most unexpectedly he is caught in his own trap and saved from arrest by poor little "Bill," his neglected daughter. He experiences a conversion of sentiment toward her, and the consistent conclusion points straight to a life of wider opportunity and greater happiness for the brave little creature. A play worth while.

"Atta Boy's Last Race," it is to be hoped, is the last of its kind. It has been done to death in one and two reels and attenuated by every conceivable device of prolongation to five reels for no other apparent reason than play scarcity. With no suspense whatever—we all know that the horse must win to pay off the mortgage—almost without characterization, without vital theme of any kind, this old reiteration should be shelved for good. It wore out its welcome long ago. This utilization of old material is the more destructive that it comes from the source of many bright, strong and attractive releases, a throw-back to what has long been discarded.

Four New Kalems

"The Missing Heiress," Second Episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter," Series; "The Harvest of Gold," Number Twelve of "The Girl from 'Frisco Series"; "The Lost Messenger," a "Hazard of Helen," and "The Bogus Booking Agents," Ham and Bud Comedy.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm

"The Missing Heiress."

FOR thrills "The Missing Heiress," the second episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series, is on a par with the first release. This reel shows Grant in an aeroplane in pursuit of a steamer on which the "missing heiress" is being brought to Europe. The feat of photographing an aeroplane in flight at close range—so that the figures of the occupants of the aeroplane register distinctly—has never, as far as we know, been done in as daring a manner as have the aeroplane scenes in this picture. This reel contains as much melodramatic interest as could be asked for.

George Larkin, as Tommy Grant, reporter, makes a flying leap from a hydro-aeroplane that has stopped at the side of a steamer, to a suspended ladder. The story is interesting, and shows on the screen the manner in which the reporter finds the missing heiress through peculiarity in alignment on the typewriter on which the letter asking for ransom was written. The reporter finds that the butler and private secretary in the home of the wealthy man have conspired to hold the heiress for ransom. Ollie Kirby does good work as the private secretary. Besides Mr. Larkin and Miss Kirby, the cast includes Arthur Albertson, Robert Ellis, William McKey, Betty Dial and G. Chira.

Scene from "The Missing Heiress" (Kalem).

"The Harvest of Gold."

In "The Harvest of Gold," twelfth episode of "The Girl From Frisco"' series, Robert Wells Ritchie has interwoven truth and fiction in a fascinating manner. This two-reel episode of the western series treats interestingly of a theme that is typical of California—the efforts of the fruit trust to gain control of the crops of independent orange growers. Excitement is keyed to a high pitch when Barbara engages in a fist fight with the two men who plan to destroy the irrigation system of her father's grove.

On the screen in this chapter is told the story of the methods employed by the unscrupulous fruit syndicate representative to make Barbara's father's crop fail. Her father has bought options on the crops of orange growers in the vicinity over the syndicate's bid, after their real motives have been exposed. John Wallace, a friend and neighbor of the Brents, also takes a leading part in the fight against the syndicate, whose tool tries to get the orange pickers employed by Brent to strike. Barbara wins the laborers' sympathy when, in a thrilling ride, she rescues the child of one of them from a wagon wildly drawn by runaway horses.

Maris Sais and True Boardman carry the leading parts. Others in the cast are Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury, Edward Clisbee and Hart Hoxie. Directed by James W. Horne.

"The Lost Messenger."

"The Lost Messenger," a number in the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series, contains more stunts than many recent releases of the series. In this reel Helen Gibson, riding on a motorcycle, crashes through the railing of a bridge over a railroad and drops to the tracks close beside a moving freight train; she jumps from a "jack-knife" drawbridge into the water, fully sixty feet below, and swims to shore with a valuable packet in her hands. P. S. Pembroke, as the messenger, also furnishes a thrill when he jumps from a moving train into a river. The story of "The Lost Messenger" holds the interest throughout, and to the melodramatic material is added a compelling element of mystery. Other members of the cast than Miss Gibson and Mr. Pembroke are G. A. Williams and George Routh.

"The Bogus Booking Agents."

"The Bogus Booking Agents" is a Ham and Bud comedy that contains a number of laughs. All in all, it is quite an entertaining film and contains more plot than many preceding releases. Ham, Bud and Ethel are assisted in getting over the humor in this reel by Henry Murdock. Ham and Bud, as well as Ethel and Henry, are stage struck. Ham and Bud reach the booking agent's office when he is out, and decide to run things. Henry, a chauffeur, is put through his histrionic paces when a woman who wants to reform the stage appears. Many involved situations follow, and the picture comes to an end when Ham and Bud, discovered as impostors, are chased up and down stairs and into a police van.

"The Heart of the Hills"

Five-Part Edison Subject Carries a Blending of the Atmosphere of the East and the West.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service will release in the week of October 30 "The Heart of the Hills," an Edison story in five parts, the first one of which is a prologue. The subject was directed by Richard Ridgely and was adapted from "The Girl from the East," a novel by David Whitelaw. Much care has been given to the production. Into the making, too, has gone the work of a goodly number of motion picture players, some of them oldtime Edison favorites. Mabel Trunnelle and Conway Tearle head a cast which contains the names of Bigelow Cooper, Herbert Prior, Robert Conness, Crawford Kent and Charles Sutton.

The prologue is in the atmosphere of the Far East, and the native garb of India is seen much in the main action of the story, which is laid in England. While running through the picture there is an Indian jewel, the Heart of the Hills, at the same time no unusual power is ascribed to the gem—a matter which contributes to illusion. The story is one of love and tragedy, of a child kidnapped by seditionists and in womanhood sent back to her father in England to carry out a mission on behalf of those who reared her. Miss Trunnelle plays the daughter, Hester. Stirring adventures she goes through. She is welcomed to the arms of her father and spurned by her half-brother and half-sister; she is again kidnapped by the seditionists, is accused of her father's murder, but through the aid of her lawyer lover is freed.

The story is well made and will afford strong entertainment. There is a bit of gruesomeness at the denouement, when it is disclosed that in mistake the father had been buried alive and that the traces of poison found days after were the result of the obedience of his servant, who had in accordance with instructions placed the phial in the coffin against the possibility of false burial. If it be gruesome it must be said it fits the story. The revelation of the source clears Hester of the charge of causing her father's death.

"The Blue Envelope Mystery"

Greater Vitagraph Presents Lillian Walker in Five-Part Adaptation of the Story by Sophie Kerr.

THE nicely constructed adaptation of Sophie Kerr's story which was made by the well-known magazine writer, Helen Duey, has met with a kindly fate in the hands of Director Wilfrid North, of the Vitagraph Company. Lillian Walker is especially well suited to the role of Leslie Brennan, a young woman whose wise minded guardian sent her out into the world to learn to earn a living for herself, before breaking to her the news of the depletion of her fortune. John D. Bennet, playing opposite her in the role of the eccentric young chemist with whom Leslie Brennen finds employment, which develops into a pretty romance, could scarcely be improved upon in his interpretation of the character of the stolid, preoccupied worker.

The delination of character throughout has been skillfully done, the theme is clearly outlined, and the best situations of the story have evidently been made the most of. The psychological development of the picture rings true, and the production is altogether a praiseworthy one. The enjoyment one gets from the story as presented on the screen is the result partly of the artistic methods employed in adapting and directing it, the instillation of a delightful vein of comedy in the business of the play, and the co-operation of an excellent cast, consisting, in addition to those already mentioned, of Bob Hay, William Shea, Nellie Anderson, Charles Kent, Josephine Earle, Harry Northrup and Florence Radinoff. A nicely planned adventure in which Leslie Brennan is kidnapped in an attempt to carry to Washington a formula for a new explosive discovered by the chemist, and also a message to the head of the naval department, supplies the sensational element that always helps to popularize a moving picture production.

"Witchcraft"

Fanny Ward Is Featured in a Lasky Story That Interestingly Reflects Old-Time New England.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "Witchcraft," the Lasky release of October 16, Director Frank Reicher has given us a studious, unexaggerated portrayal of the days of witchcraft in New England. Of the several producers who have essayed to treat this subject, he is, so far as this writer has observed, the first to avoid the egregious historical error of burning his victims at the stake—an ending which, as a matter of fact, never befell a white person in New England. The script was Dr. R. Ralston Reed's prize winner in the contest held at Columbia University; it is an interesting story.

Fanny Ward charms as the Huguenot girl who with her mother comes to the settlement to escape the mesh of superstition which gradually had been closing about them. The portrayal of the mother, too, is skillful, compelling. Jack Dean is the youngster who falls in love with the newcomer, only to be euchred by his miserly uncle. Paul Weigel is that uncle, who compels Suzette to become his wife under threats of delivering her mother to the mob clamoring for her blood.

Lillian Lescaton is Nokomis, the Indian woman who befriends Suzette, and is in turn befriended. It is a fine interpretation of a strong character, one that bulks in the story. Then, too, there is an unnamed child, who, with uncanny convincingness, describes to the jury, as she has to the neighborhood, what the witch has done.

"Witchcraft" will be liked. It is a story revelatory of conditions in a black page of New England history, yet always keeping the blacker part in the background. But one gallows appears, and that one is cheated of its intended victim by the proclamation that puts a stop to all similar executions. Perhaps nowhere will the story be more popular than in New England itself. Historical picture it may be, but it contains genuine human interest, heart interest.

"Alice in Society"

Three-Reel L-Ko Number, Featuring Alice Howell, Turns Up Various Amusing and Laughable Incidents.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS burlesque comedy in three reels, extracts numerous laughs from the observer. The action is a little broad in the first reel, but inoffensive and generally acceptable. The last two reels are best and several scenes, particularly those at the reception, are extremely funny.

Alice Howell, Fatty Voss, Phil Dunham and Joe Moore take the leading parts, the former being seen at her best in certain situations. The plot concerns a tailor and his two assistants. The tailor is a man of fiendish temperament who eats his soup noisily and swallows wienerwursts whole. He sends the girl out to rip and tear men's clothing, in order to increase his patronage.

The girl finally brings in a wealthy young man, named Astorbilt, and the tailor drops him through a trap door into a basement. Here he rigs up an infernal machine and endeavors to get his victim to sign over a check to him for ten thousand dollars. The two assistants lead an amusing rescue.

Scene from "Alice in Society" (L-Ko).

The scenes at the Astorbilt reception are very funny. The two assistants have been invited by the grateful host, and the fiendish tailor appears in disguise, without invitation. Numerous complications arise, and Alice Howell does some laughable stunts on the ball room floor and at the dining table. She identifies the tailor by the way in which he eats his soup. The girl imagines the host is in love with her, but learns to her sorrow that his affections are for another.

METRO will release on October 16, "In the Diplomatic Service," a five-part subject, featuring Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Mr. Bushman is credited with the adaptation and direction of the story of John C. Clymer and Hamilton Smith. The production, aside from the care with which it is staged, is hardly up to the average of its brand. There is a notable verbosity in its sub-titles and at times in the dialogues between the principals. Also there is a tendency to overact.

Mr. Bushman carries the role of a man of means and unconcerned about work who is induced by an uncle to accept a place in the Secret Service. The culminating argument is an appeal to him to look on the flag, which is shown in a close-up. To Dick Stansbury is given the job of uncovering a foreign diplomat who is proficient in getting away with some of Uncle Sam's "plans and specifications." Miss Bayne is seen as a young woman, who falls in love with the Secret Service man, only later for a period to be convinced he is working in conjunction with the enemies of her country.

Henri Bergman is Dr. Montell, the diplomat, who is ambitious to take from Uncle Sam the papers he is most anxious to retain. Mr. Bergman gives a good impersonation of a man who will bear watching at any time. Charles Fang as the Chinese valet will interest.

"The Soul of a Child"

Pioneer Feature Film Corporation Presents Five-Reel Drama Featuring Em Gorman, Child Actress.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

WHILE "The Soul of a Child," a five-reel drama to be released through the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, contains a certain amount of heart interest and at times makes a fairly strong appeal, the picture as a whole fails to convince. Em Gorman, a child actress of about six or seven, who is featured in the production, is called upon to portray emotions in certain situations in the action of the story which are far beyond the power of one of her tender year. The five reels embrace many close-ups of the child, and the action suffers somewhat as a consequence.

Scene from "The Soul of a Child" (Pioneer).

The production visualizes the story of Goldenlocks, who is orphaned when her father and mother are lost at sea. She is sent to live with her uncle, who has met with success in the city, and who leads a life of dissipation. The child is neglected and prays for her uncle, who spends his evenings entertaining questionable characters. Goldenlocks becomes sick, and calls for Mollie, her uncle's sweetheart during his fisherman days. The child's illness brings the two together again, and Goldenlocks, when she gets well, brings about a happy reconciliation.

Besides Miss Gorman, the cast includes John Dunn, Wellington Playter, Nancy Baring and Grace Lovell.

Keen Cartoons

A Somewhat New Departure in Animated Cartoons—Three 500-Foot Subjects Shown by Keen Cartoon Corporation.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THE KEEN CARTOONS, produced by the Keen Cartoon Corporation, and to be released through independent exchanges, are a somewhat new departure in animated cartoons in that the humorous stories acted by the animated pen-and-ink characters are visualized much in the manner as are motion picture comedies with human characters. By that is meant that in "getting over" the story close-ups, film tinting, cut-backs, subtitles, etc., are employed. The animation in these cartoons is fair, although a bit "jumpy" at intervals. The drawing as a whole is acceptable.

The Keen Cartoons are to be relased in 500-foot lengths. The subjects shown for review were "Henry W. Zippy Buys a Motorboat," drawn by Charles E. Howell; "Slinky, the Yegg," drawn by Lee Connor, and "Jerry McDub," drawn by H. M. Freck. In "Henry W. Zippy," Henry buys a motorboat and hurries through his work so that he can take her out. His wife ties the boat to the dock. Henry goes out in the boat and is lost in a fog. He swims around and finds himself right at his own dock. "Slinky the Yegg" robs a postoffice and eludes a dog and a policeman via the telegraph wires. He is captured when he is overcome with indigestion after eating panhandled pie. "Jerry McDub" is the funniest of the three. Jerry collects accident insurance when he is hit by a brick. His wife sees a chance to get a new hat and tells Jerry that Mike said something about him. She thinks Jerry will suffer at Mike's hands and that she will then collect insurance. But Jerry comes home whistling and Mike goes to the hospital, and wife gets no new hat.

"Terrors of a Turkish Bath" (Universal).

Gently balancing himself on the telephone wires spanning the Bottomless Chasm, 9,872 feet below, Terence McGillicuddy, knight of the road, contemplated his past career. His companion du voyage, Gilbert the Filbert, with the blackthorn and the feather in his hat, meanwhile read the war news perched on a cross piece and straddling a glass insulator.

All this has nothing to do with the startling events of "Terrors of a Turkish Bath," a two-reel L-Ko comedy featuring Dan Russell (Terence McGillicuddy). These events, because of the many foreign spies hovering about motion picture studios to steal all the good situations, must not be disclosed

Not since "Under the Crescent" revealed the horrors of a Turkish harem, however, has such an expose of turkish bath life been made. The Universal and the Anti-Vice Motion Picture Co. wishes highly to recommend "Terrors of a Turkish Bath" as a highly moral preachment on turkish bath evils such as Terence McGillicuddy encountered after he managed to fall from his perch on the above mentioned telephone wires.

Interned Liners Used in Film.

Director Robert Ellis has put the finishing touches to "The Missing Heiress," second of the one-reel episodes of the new "Grant, Police Reporter" series. For the scenes in this episode requiring the use of ocean liners, the director was fortunate in finding a number of German liners interned at Pensacola, Florida.

Captain Malitz, of the liner Trieste, obligingly put a crew of stokers to work and moved his vessel a half-mile down the bay for the scenes showing the liner putting out to sea. All the officers of the liner take part in the action of the photoplay and are anxiously awaiting the release of the picture to see themselves as screen actors.

Following the staging of the scenes the Kalem players, headed by George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, were guests of the officers at luncheon. It is in this episode that Dare-Devil Larkin, pursuing the liner in an aeroplane, makes a daring leap from the flyer to the ship's ladder.

H. W. Johns-Manville Co. Opens New Branch.

The H. W. Johns-Manville Company has just opened a new branch office at Great Falls, Mont., on the fourth floor of the Ford building, Room 418, in charge of J. H. Roe. With the opening of the Great Falls office the Johns-Manville Company increases its number of branches to fifty-five.

This new branch is made necessary by rapidly increasing business in this territory. Great Falls, with its rapidly growing population of 38,000, is not only one of the greatest hydro power centers of the United States, almost rivalling Niagara Falls, but is known as one of the best wheat-growing sections in the country—its wheat taking first prize at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Unity Branching Out in the Southern Territory.

Owing to the growth of its business in the southwest territory, the Unity Sales Corporation has found it necessary to open a second exchange in Dallas to handle the features now being put out by Unity in Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. The Houston exchange, which has been handling "The Yellow Menace" for some time, has found it necessary to open a Dallas office now located at 1911 Commerce street. These two exchanges will handle "The Yellow Menace," the "Tweedledum" comedies, "The Marriage Boad," "The Lottery Men"' and all new features put out by Unity.

Hawkins & Heaney Enterprises.

F. J. Hawkins, vice-president of the Hawkins & Heaney Company, the general distributors of the Christie Comedy Films, left New York on October 13 for Los Angeles. On his trip West, Mr. Hawkins will stop at a few of the larger cities to confer with some of the exchanges that have already contracted for the Christie Comedies. It is the intention of Mr. Hawkins to open a branch office in Los Angeles. The Board of Directors of the company feel that it will be necessary for Mr. Hawkins to spend most of his time in Los Angeles in developing its interests, and an office will be equipped in consonance with the needs of the company in every particular. The Hawkins & Heaney Co. have already contracted with the Dixie Film Co. of Chicago for a number of five-reel photoplays, which they will distribute on a State Rights basis. The first of these is "Tempest and Sunshine," by Mary Jane Holmes, one of the best known of American authoresses. It is a picturization of life in the South, and is an interest compelling production in five parts. The elements of love, intrigue and chivalry are handled strongly, and the direction is of a high order.

The Hawkins & Heaney Co. have also contracted for the marketing of the E. & R. Jungle Film Co. Productions, featuring the chimpanzees, "Napoleon" and "Sally." These remarkable anthropoid apes have just completed a number of exceptionally amusing comedies. These apes are the nearest to man in his evolutionary climb from the primitive ape to man, and the universities and colleges of America and Europe, have studied these apes with great interest, for the past four years. While these comedies have been made with especial regard to their value as a means for the entertainment of the young, the amusing antics of these highly developed apes will be extremely entertaining to children of a larger growth. Those who are inclined to believe that man is a descendant from the primitive of ten million years ago, will find in these marvelous apes many habits of mind and body to hold their concentrated attention.

Messrs. Hawkins and Heaney have a wide knowledge of the existent conditions, and out of the many disturbing influences that have lately agitated the distribution of motion pictures, they have evolved a solid and substantial plan that contains within it the basic elements of modern business efficiency, and a solidly successful management. In a word, that they are prepared to supply the exchanges with carefully selected productions at a price which will enable the exchange to supply his exhibitors with good material at a moderate price. That this plan is needed is self-evident by the success which Messrs. Hawkins and Heaney have so far had in securing exchanges throughout the United States, Canada, and foreign countries, for the distribution of the various productions handled by them

Additional "'Frisco" Prints Ready.

The Kalem Company announces that steps have been taken to solve the troubles of exhibitors who have heretofore found difficulty in booking "The Girl From 'Frisco" series through the various General Film offices. Within the past week orders have been placed by all the branch exchanges for many additional prints on each episode beginning with the first, released many weeks ago. In addition, the exchanges have placed standing orders for the increased number of prints for all future episodes of the series featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman. Exhibitors who found difficulty in booking the series in the early weeks of its release because of the overwhelming demands on the exchanges are now urged to place their orders as soon as possible to avoid further disappointment when the booking capacity of the additional prints is exhausted.

"Girl from 'Frisco" a Song Hit.

Once the sure proof of an actress's success was the naming of a cigar in her honor. Now the publication of a song carries its own evidence of popularity. The success of Kalem's series of the West, "The Girl From 'Frisco," featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman, has resulted in the publication of a song, entitled "The Girl From 'Frisco," that is achieving unusual popularity throughout the country.

On the cover of the song there appears the striking photograph of Marin Sais on horseback that has become so strongly connected with the publicity on that series. "It is one of the most popular song hits on our list," reports the publishers, the Cadillac Music Company, of New York City.

Julius Steger Begins Production of Unusual Play.

In the Rolfe studio Julius Steger, who has won fame in light opera and the "legitimate," as well as motion pictures, has begun the production of a new and unusual Metro wonderplay. Mr. Steger, in the star role, is seen as a poor and struggling young playwright, and the part is admirably adapted to his rare talents.

No name has yet been selected for the production, which is startling in the number of intensely dramatic situations presented. Supporting Mr. Steger are Arline Fay, Clara Whipple, Harry Burkhardt and Stanhope Wheatcroft. David Thompson is directing the production.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

That Stillman Campaign.

WRITING lately C. L. Madden, in charge of the advertising campaign for the new Stillman theater, Cleveland, remarked that he did not know just why he was sending in his samples. He does not need the advantage of press mention and knows it, and what he does not know is why he sends along the stuff. We know and are willing to pass him the information. It's because he knows it is good because he knows we will know that it is good and because he takes a pride in work well done. Mr. Madden is a member of the Fuller and Smith staff and was given the Stillman account. He is a trained advertiser and copy writer, so he laid in a copy of Picture Theater Advertising and got busy. As soon as they boarded the enclosure he got the daily bulletin idea working and it worked well. Already he had taken up the matter of a house design, for he knows what all practical men know; that a trade mark is the center point of good advertising. He went a little further and took a set of house colors; green and black. He spread this on the billboards, before the opening, a costly but effective device when the capacity of the house will justify the expense. The cut shows four of these painted boards. These are all black letters on a white ground with the border and held of the cipher in green.

When the opening date had been decided upon, invitations were issued. These were in two parts, the invitation proper is a double sheet with only the front page printed. The embossed design shown in green, gold and black, the circled ST. Each invitation is filled in with the name of the person invited and that of the person in whose name the invitation is sent. This gives it a more personal touch than the all-engraved invitation, even where a personal card is also enclosed. A second enclosure is devoted to the more practical matter of tickets and explains that two tickets will be sent if the recipient requests and a return envelope is enclosed that the acceptance may be slipped in. Even the return envelope is on heavy stock and this is the only printed piece, the others being engraved; and the address, for that matter, is so well printed that it looks almost like engraving. In form the ticket slip merely asks you to indicate whether you can or cannot be present. This matches with the statement that tickets are being held. It does not suggest that the replies, whether of acceptance or regret, will form an excellent check upon a select mailing list.

All of that is in conformance with the best usage and is regulation, save, perhaps, the checking scheme. But a few days later more direct press work was started. The theater adjoins the Hotel Statler. Presently came an announcement from the hotel that a special after-theater supper would be served in the ball room following the opening performance with dancing. A card was enclosed for the reservation of places. Of course this was a good business move for the hotel, though the cover price was too small to show much of a profit. The real benefit lay in the additional emphasis on the social side of the opening. The opening of the theater was city news. The supper got into the society column too. And to show the care for the little things, the hotel announcement was printed and not engraved. An engraved advertisement would have been out of place, since it was an advertisement and not an invitation. We are going to follow the opening moves of this house with some care, because it will presently serve as a guide to others. As a sort of general contribution Mr. Madden sends in a clipping from the Cleveland Plaindealer, showing the result of their census of the Y. M. C. A. on what appeals to them in the motion picture theaters. It is surprising that music and attendants come before the bill, but we think that these figures are reasonably accurate if it is understood that many of the respondents evidently made their preference on the basis of programs being equal or nearly so.

Given approximately equal programs, the preference is for the house having the better music, the most courteous attendants and the best interior. Here is the table:

Music appealed as most important to 17 per cent.; ventilation to 14.1 per cent.; courteous attendants to 13.2 per cent.; type of pictures to 10.4 per cent.; general tone of theater to 6.6 per cent.; comfortable surroundings to 4.7 per cent.; attractive interior to 4.7 per cent.; high class of picture and music combined to 3.8 per cent.; reserved seats to 3.8 per cent.; electric fans to 2.8 per cent.; appearance of ushers to 1.9 per cent.; drinking water to 1.9 per cent.; slip-covers on seats to 1.9 per cent.; rest and retiring rooms to 1.9 per cent.; convenience of location to 1.9 per cent.; ability to dismiss audiences quickly to .9 per cent.; attention to children to .9 per cent.; quiet to .9 per cent.; not to be disturbed to .9 per cent.; women allowed to wear their hats in reserved seats to .9 per cent.

Evidently Safety First is not given great consideration.

Tarleton Winchester sends in a scheme reported by the Pathe St. Louis film exchange. From the letter we gather that the cameraman was loaned by the exchange. The scheme was worked by Frank Stanley, of the Garden Theatre, Arthur, Ill., and this dodger tells its own story.

PATHE WANTS
OUR PICTURE

The Great Pathe Film Company have expressed a desire for a photograph showing the crowds at the Garden Theatre on the opening night of THE IRON CLAW MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1916.

We have engaged Mr. Henry E. Wamsley, the Photographer, to make a flash light picture of the crowds in front of our theatre immediately after the first show.

We want to make this an event long to be remembered and have engaged the Monroe Band to give a short concert in front of the theater at 7 p. m. and to pose in the picture. As large a crowd as possible will mean much to us and to you in the betterment of pictures for Arthur.

Put on your best "bib and tucker" and "look pleasant, please,"—and incidentally enjoy the best and biggest serial picture it was ever our good fortune to show.

GARDEN THEATRE, ARTHUR
Frank Stanley, Manager

Naturally, the picture shows a double crowd, for there were two shows and the entering second audience was taken along with the first, but even at that it shows a good crowd, though the photograph is too poor to reproduce very well. We suppose, of course, that Mr. Stanley had a slide made for house use and doubtless there were many who wanted prints. A scheme like this can be made better than self supporting in a perfectly legitimate way.

"Class A" Is Right.

Holmes and Kremer, of the Class A, Hillyard, Wash., send in four programs for inspection rather than criticism, since they must know that the issues are good. The town is five miles from Spokane and the Class A is a 249 house with three thousand to draw from. A thousand programs are put out each week, which seems disproportionate to the population, unless they have a large mailing list. One program to every three people must result in some duplication, though the management writes that the house-to-house distribution is personally supervised. We think that five hundred programs could cover a three thousand town competently and fully. About the only comment is on the lack of talk of any sort. The program [illegible] four on white and a heavy cover. There is a program for each day, one-third of the page, with foreign advertising top and bottom. The program is cut off, top and bottom, by heavier rule than is used for holding the page together, but it would be better to box in with this same rule. This means three pieces of rule to each side, which will make a little trouble for the printer, but he can send in to Spokane and have the rule brazed and never after have any trouble so long as the make-up is adhered to. But before this is done, something should be shoved around so that the house can get a little advertising as well as the program. That inside cover page would do the house a lot more good than it does Wilson's Cash Grocery, and apparently it pays Wilson. It has a finely drawn cover design for one or two colors, though the second color is a needless expense, since the effect can be obtained with one printing by using a little very fine benday instead of the tint. The cover is almost extravagantly good and the stock is almost too heavy to proportion with a four-page insert. It is good enough to cover a sixteen. The best is none too good, perhaps, but by making the program readable instead of sightly it could be raised to a sixteen for about the same outlay at average prices, and a page or two of reading matter would help make and hold fans. As a job it is about as nice as anything of the sort we have seen lately, but we think the pulling power could be improved at the expense of looks, and handsome is as handsome does. Get in touch with your people through your program. Talk to them, interest them and when a second house comes they may even resent the intrusion. Build up loyalty while you have a chance if you are so fortunate as to have a town to yourself.

Matters of Policy.

Harrison Ward, of the Viking, Benson, Mich., sends in some of his stuff and a lot of questions. He writes:

> I am enclosing a few of the programs I have been getting out for the last few weeks, also some newspaper ads.
> I would like to have you comment on these and let me know just where they are at fault.
> I have strong competition here, as this is only a town of 2,000 and the other house is running a big feature every day taken from Paramount, Metro and Triangle programs. He advertises these brands exclusively, in fact he hardly ever tells much about the particular pictures that he is showing, but confines the most of his advertising to saying that the three above named brands are the only and the best pictures made. He advertises trade marks instead of pictures.
>
> By the programs you can see that I do not mention the names of the producing companies and it is an actual fact that I do select all my features on the open booking plan. Which method do you think is the best, his or mine?
> You will notice that I have taken some of the stuff in my programs from the World. I have just received a copy of P. T. A. and I want to say that it is a mighty handy volume to have about.
> You can see from the programs that Monday and Friday are my big show of the week. I confine most of my newspaper and billboard advertising to these two days. Do you think this is right?

Personally we most decidedly favor advertising the house rather than the brand. Mention of the brand is desirable, but do not become known as a house devoted to a certain make or makes of films. Let people come to associate the house with good shows rather than make them think that if you have a certain make you must have a good show. Then you can change, if the need comes, without having to do another elaborate educational campaign. It is foolish to advertise brands to the exclusion of the house. Profit by the national advertising done by the makers, but put your house first and keep it always there. Make it understood that your house is not good because it runs Ten-in-one Films, but that it runs Ten-in-one films because it runs all good films. Make some small capital of the brands, for people are interested in brands, but always make the brand decidedly inferior to the publicity the house gets, not with the old "always a good show," but more along the lines of the "hand-picked program" idea. The first program is a six-page folder, pages 3½ by 6½ inches. It opens out to show all of the program in equal sized boxes on one side. On the other are two good house arguments and a preference list which entitles the person filling it in to an admission on a stated day.

In a second form an eight-page folder is used, with three pages given to a running story of the program, not the film stories, but a story of what is coming. Another page repeats a program pick-up about the use of trade marks taken from the department and originally used by a Western house, the Saxe, Milwaukee, if we remember. But it makes it clear they have a large field to select from. The third form goes back to a six, which is plenty large enough, and runs a page of underline. The proof reading is a bit careless, one statement being that only two "characters" are left in a serial where "chapters" is clearly meant. We think the second six-page form about the best of the three and would suggest sticking to that. The eight-page gives a bit too much reading. Also the eight-page gives too much reading for what should be said. A six is plenty and eight point type is to be preferred to ten point for the text. If the composition cost is too great, use leads to open with, though much lead in a narrow column seldom looks as good as solid stuff.

Most of the newspaper advertising fills the space too full. It is all two fives, and this is apt to get lost in a page of the paper unless it is made to stand out through rule work, white space or some other device. It is better to advertise one thing smartly and strongly than to make ten inches cover the weekly program, as a rule, though, of course, this largely depends upon what the house has to fight in the matter of other advertisements on the same page. Sometimes a ten-inch advertisement can hold its own with double tens, but as a general rule it is better to throw it into prominence in some way, and this means eating up the type space. One advertisement is given to a house talk, but there is so much told in all capital bold face that the eye is afraid to tackle it. You can talk to a man in your program, but in the newspaper you can only give one strong yell. He will not stop for much more.

And we do not think we would concentrate the advertising on two days a week. Favor the dull days a little, but advertise for every day or presently you'll find that the former dull days are not the strong ones and you have a couple of other sick days on your hands.

Something Good.

At last we have reproduced the Theater Louisiana program. This is the house organ of the theater of that name in Baton Rouge, La., and it is about as good an example of how to get a lot on a small piece of paper as we have met with, for which reason we are reproducing the entire sheet, which is 5¼ by 6¾, folded once, as well as a small page packed with display type of all sizes and faces. People read the program you put out to see what you have to offer them. They are not interested in a type catalogue. If you can take a page to a feature, so much the better, but if you cannot, it is better to give them a neat and compact program than a weak and ineffective conglomeration of poor display faces. You can save paper bills on a sheet this size, but the type composition will cost about the same, since the smaller the type the greater number of "ems" to the line and so the greater the cost. But if you pay no more for composition and yet pay less for stock and get a convenient form, you are still not only saving money but increasing the value of your program.

Do Your Own Editing.

Do you edit the stuff that goes into your program or do you merely clip? Better edit. Here's a sample from a generally good program:

On the way Bob shoots at what he believes to be a wild deer His quarry proves to be a singularly attractive young girl dressed in feathers and leaves &c.

We've heard of men shooting at other men in red sweaters, though they never saw a deer in a red sweater in their lives, but in a program edit it out. It may be all right, but feathered bears have no place in your program stories because people may not stop to think and will unconsciously imagine that the fool stuff represents a fool play.

North Knows It.

First read the last line of the accompanying extract and then read it as a whole. It is taken from the V-L-S-E Pals. Evidently they had an advertising show out there, for Tom North says:

Pal Jim Clemmer worked a clever stunt Friday night at the Ad Show here in Seattle. The backers of the Ad Show are a live bunch and arranged all sorts of contests for the amusement of the spectators. Among them was a bill posting contest or rather there were two contests, the first was between expert bill posters from the shops of Foster and Kleiser, and the second was between girls. Each used the same stands and the same quantity of paper.

When Jim Clemmer heard of this he came to this office and purchased three sets of six sheets and ten one sheets. He then went down to the Pioneer Printing Company and had them run off three twenty-four-sheet streamers and several one sheets announcing that "The Conflict" was now running at the Clemmer.

When the contest was staged, paper on "The Conflict" was put up and the Clemmer announcement with it. Everybody attending the Ad Show watched this contest with a great deal of amusement, for while the work of the experts was very interesting and instructive, the work of the girls was highly amusing. They succeeded in getting the paper up after a fashion, and no one went away that didn't know what picture was at the Clemmer this week.

This is what we would call good publicity. Taking advantage of one's opportunities and cashing in on them.

It is a simple little scheme—now that Clemmer has thought of it. Any scheme is simple once it is thought of, but the trouble is to think. North is training his section of the country to think advertising ideas and he had some mighty good material to start with. Mr. Clemmer heard of the contest. He could see it would interest. There he was the same as the rest. But he carried his thought along. They must have something to post, so why not his paper? There would be a crowd there and it was worth the cost of the paper just to get it before the crowd. Now anyone can butt in on an advertising exposition if one is held in town, but why wait for that to happen? Clemmerize your mind and think too. The ladies' aid society of some church or fraternal body wants money. Offer to donate ten dollars if some of them will post your paper one day. Tell the daily paper about it and tell them in time to provide for a "gallery" to go along with the more or less fair pasters. Have a contest in front of the house, just before the second night show and let the first show out early enough to give that audience a chance to see the fun. Have it a contest between women entrants or between women selected by two or more societies. If you are friends with the opposition have his bill poster race your man, make it a schoolboy contest—the possibilities are limitless and they will all make more or less talk. You may have to offer a pretty decent prize to get the interest of some of the contests, but if you make talk you'll get your money back, particularly if you operate in a town of ten thousand or less. If your opposition puts on a specially big feature don't try to beat it. Don't spend ten dollars more to get something even better to lick him with. Just take that ten and put it into a contest. Get the crowd around your house and you'll get a lot of them in.

Here is another scheme from Pals:

At Toledo, Ohio, there is a live wire manager who has charge of the Pastime Theater. When he played "My Lady's Slipper" not long ago he had his printer make several thousand cutouts in the shape of a low cut dancing slipper. These bore the message that at the Pastime theater "My Lady's Slipper" with Anita Stewart and Earle Williams would be shown. Below this announcement was another to the effect that "A dainty pair of slippers will be given free to the lady who can wear them. See them at the Factory Shoe Store, Cherry Street."

These cutouts were widely distributed, both by the management of the theater and the shoe store. The windows of the shoe store were decorated with them. Each cutout was perforated and a string attached. Many patrons of the shoe store wore them out on the street.

This stunt can be elaborated upon somewhat, although very good in its original state. We would suggest that if worked a contest be staged in the store window. The theater should advertise that it will give away a certain number of shoes to those able to wear them. In order to participate in the contest each entrant should be required to come to the store and try on the shoes. At the close of the contest the winners should be shown in the store window.

We do not like this outworking so well. In the first place it keeps the contest too far from the theater. At no time is there contact with the house. Show the shoes in some store window for a week or ten days and have the tryouts there. If possible make it a requirement that those wishing to enter the contests must try on the slippers in the store window and not in the store. There will be a crowd around the place all day. Then, when the contest has been decided, give a pair of tickets to each winner or set off a couple of boxes or a section of seats and make the presentation on the stage or in front of the screen. Don't give it all to the store. It probably would not be possible to hold the contest in the theater, for this would entail the purchase of admission tickets, which might put the scheme into the lottery class, but have the finish of the contest in the house and not in the store. They will get their share of the advertising through the preliminaries.

How Come It?

At last a Philadelphia theater management other than Jay Emanuel has had the enterprise to send in a program. It is the Fifty-Sixth Street theater, a neighborhood house that is practically a center. This is printed on both sides in red and black, which works very nicely. It is one sheet 5 by 8 inches. On the front the rays and the border are in red and on the back only the border is in red. Probably the red form is printed up in quantities and the black imprint put on the weekly lots. In this way much press cost is saved at no loss of effect. This is always the thing to be figured in a two color job. Try to plan to have the color form printed for several weeks at one time and you can afford the double color where you cannot afford it where you have two impressions each week. With but three changes, they manage to get a lot on their program without crowding, largely because they use no big display letters, getting the display through relative size. This is the better way by far. Also it makes it look like a program instead of a poster.

Good Work.

After bragging about "The Victory of Conscience" to its patrons, the Rowland and Clark theatres offered a rather sorry looking thing under that title, and while the patrons were still wondering why so much had been said about so little, it came out with a full list of the Pennsylvania eliminations, enabling the patrons to see what the film might have been had not the truly good mixed in. It shows better than all sorts of arguments could possibly do why some pictures are poor and if all the houses in the state would follow up this scheme, it would not be long before the Censors would get themselves disliked to the point of their own elimination with no appeal possible. The only trouble is that concerted action does not seem to be possible because there are so few managers who realize the damage done.

Live Work.

Tom North seems to sleep only one side at a time while the other half stays awake so as not to be caught. His latest stunt is to publish the route of the Sells-Floto show in his territory. Frank Gotch is with the circus and the Selig-Gotch pictures are in his catalogue. He hippodromes with the circus, but is shown in a real match in the films. One chance to make the circus help the pictures theater.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Chasing Wildcats.

LATELY a subscriber sent in three letters he had sent to as many new concerns whose names he had obtained from the news letters in a single issue. None of the three had been delivered and he sent them in to the paper in the expectation that they would be properly addressed and forwarded. None of these concerns was known to the post office in the town where it was supposed to be located, and yet, knowing this fact, the author had made a still further effort to query these companies as to their wants. No one but a novice is so stupid as to suppose that any company will answer inquiries as to its wants. No one but an ignoramus would seek to sell to a company so obscure that it is not known to its local post office, and yet probably many people who suppose themselves authors have rushed in stories to these same concerns and others of like importance, and these are the same people who presently belch forth complaints to the effect that they cannot get their scripts back.

That is not marketing; it is merely wasting postage, for the scripts are not wasted since they are worth nothing. The real author, the honest-to-goodness author, knows that it is safe to deal only with companies having a name and a known outlet for their wares. They do not send three or four scripts to every new company announced in the list of incorporations or mentioned in the news columns. They deal with the reputable concerns, and only with the reputable companies, and they have no vain regrets. Wait until you see the company releasing, then study the releases and offer them stories along the lines of their general policy, but do not go around with a two-cent stamp sticking to the end of your tongue all ready to slap onto an envelope at the first sign of a new address with the word "film" in it.

Find Your Job.

Making a rather liberal reading of our offer to answer questions, a young man recently wrote that he was not selling any plays and would we advise him what was the most profitable branch of the motion picture business. He was willing to be an exchange man or anything else that paid, well, but he rather fancied advertising writing, in fact, he was willing to throw the pictures overboard and become an ad-writer for a department store if there was more money in that.

That is not the way to go at the thing. If you are going to write photoplays you are going to write them whether you study law, medicine or motor cars. If it is in you, it must come out, but if it is not in you, there is nothing to come out. Call yourself up on the carpet some day and ask yourself questions. If you can convince yourself that you can eventually write plays, stick to it, but do not stick to a losing game just because it is genteel or profitable or because your great-grandmother used to write stories. You are an author because you are and not because you want to be, though if you feel that you want to be an author it may be because you really are.

There are lots of men writing stories who should be driving trucks and some men driving trucks who could write good stories. Find out what you can do and make that what you insist upon doing. Every little while you read of some railroad president who began as a brakeman. He did not stay a brakeman because he was cut out to be president over the other brakemen. He made a good brakeman and a good conductor and a good division man and so he makes a good president. He found himself. Lots of brakemen fail to become presidents, because they are brakeman material and not of presidential stuff, that's all.

Wants Restitution.

William M. McGrew, who writes from a hotel address in Los Angeles, is looking for his money back. He saw a film with our name on it and he writes in part:

> Ye Gods and Little Fishes, I never as yet have seen anything as rotten. And the best of the situation is that you pose as an authority on writing of photoplay scripts. Well, I'll just say this much—what's the use—you know as much about writing silent farce as I do about frying ham. Yes, let's see your nerve—just call me in that wonderful department of yours in the "World."

Mr. McGrew seems real peeved and wants someone to pay him for his wasted time. We don't blame him. We would want to be paid to see the story ourselves if we saw it, but we knew better than to go and see it. In the first place, it was made a couple of years ago by a director just breaking in, and was so bad it was put on the shelf. When it was taken down again lately, it was cut to a half reel (so it would be only half as bad) and fixed up—more or less—by a cutting man, and it stands to reason it must be bad, though not as poor as one put out about a year ago that had three one-reel relics and a cartoon comedy in a single reel. It's one of the things that bring joy to the heart of an author to be blamed for the asinine stupidity of some bungling director. He should wait for some of the Drew comedies that are coming along. We're not ashamed of those; quite the contrary.

Poor Tactics.

A company sends in a letter, evidently a form letter, since this is a poor carbon, which apparently goes out with each script the author submits, since the title of the story and the greeting are typed in afterward. This man is a Bachelor of Laws; presumably a person of some intelligence, and yet his rambling and foolish remarks in no way aid the end he seeks. The editor adds that this man's scripts are fairly frequent, always neatly prepared, but utterly lacking in originality of thought. He has the form, but not the idea, and form is useful only in conveying idea with clearness. It is of no avail where there is no idea. Here are some extracts from the letter:

> As you doubtless know, E. W. Sargent recently said, "If manufacturers only knew the crimes committed against their interests by their employees they would murder them." How stainless your studio may be matters not. If you have not perfect means to secure careful consideration and prevent rejection of good comedies it will cost you much, as it doubtless has, before you achieve, not merely what you ought to, but what you will either have to or go "down the line," like some old companies are doing, and eventually out of business. If you have "boss" employees who have as many friend writers as the plays you buy, it is likely that world of writers are shut out, and, believe me, sir, it is why your success will be, and doubtless has been shut out.
> As a comedy writer of four years, with possibly fair success, I somethimes make good sales of comedies rejected as many as twenty times. In astonishment, I then ask repecting companies, "What in hell ails you?" I never ask that now, as men like Sargent, McCardell and Harrison have "exposed" the matter. As theaters and manufacturers "bust" men like these and plenty others, are proving that they know what they know very powerfully over high salaried "stage directors," who often, because of running away from home when young, have not enough education to write their own names, but humorously are now "judges of art." I mean he who is writing, directing and acting, and nearly all at the same time, and has never performed any one of these one good man's jobs so but what the world really sneered at it, or ever will. "The wise man knoweth that he knows nothing, but the fool thinketh that he knows all." The day has long passed when you can impose upon the public with his productions. * * *
> Could I get rejections through you, or through more than one little "power," I would gladly try to furnish you some comedies, and I can furnish them, unless you have some "notion," or "requirement" that I can get no understanding of.
> Not hearing favorably from you, I must presume you, like some others—"dead."

This is only about half the letter which, by the way, is addressed to the president of the company, which points up the paragraph asking for a personal judgment. The entire letter is both profane and obscene. It is the sort of thing that one might expect from a half-crazed fool, but not from a man with a degree—if, indeed, his degree is genuine. The stuff is printed here because possibly it is the sort of stuff you would like to write to the manufacturers. Don't do it. No such stuff as this will help in any degree. It merely confirms the responsible heads—if it ever gets to the responsible heads—that script writers are a lot of crazy fools. A man like this is a crass idiot and it is unfor- the ravings of the few who do.

Catches.

Look out for the propaganda paper that offers a prize for the best photoplay dealing with its subject matter. Generally you send for reading matter—at a price—and then you send in a script. Perhaps you get the script back, but meantime they have your money and the prize has gone to some "safe" writer, often finding its way back into the treasury.

The THIRD Edition of

Technique of the Photoplay

IS NOW READY

This is virtually a new book under the old title. More than double the text and with an arrangement especially adapting it for the student. The most complete book ever written on the subject of scenario or photoplay construction.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remittin 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Operators' Union Directory.

NOTICE.—Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here once a year, free of cost. Preserve this list as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included, and the address of regular meeting place, if any.

Question No. 160.

What is the average life of a rectifier tube?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 149.

The Roll of Honor on question 149 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; Dean A. Snyder, Bangor, Pa.; W. E. Frisbie, Fort Monroe, Va., Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; F. F. Bell, Sherman, Texas; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; M. M. Moon, Sherman, Texas; Leon Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; G. A. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.; Micheal Capobianco, Roseto, Pa., and G. H. Hopper, Jacksonville, Ill.

There was only one out of the many answers to question 149 who really grasped the idea I desired to convey. What I intended to ask was what attitude should operators assume as to apprentices being permitted or not permitted. I have, nevertheless, put quite a number on the Roll of Honor because, although they did not get the idea I intended, still their answers were carefully compiled along other lines.

I have selected the reply of Brother Snyder as the only man who answered the question I intended to ask, and the reply of Friend Frisbie, who sets forth the best argument along other lines.

Repy to Question No. 149.

By Dean A. Snyder, Bangor, Pa.

The Question:

What do you think ought to be the policy of the operator with regard to the matter of apprentices?

The Answer:

I think that the matter of apprentices ought to be reduced to the least visible form. That is, when an operator has an apprentice, and I have my doubts as to the advisability of using them at all, except where the law compels, he should be in the operating room as seldom as possible. When another person is in the operating room there is always the possibility of a conversation, and conversations distract the attention of the operator from the screen, especially if the operator is of an argumentative frame of mind. An operator is bound to put up the best projection when he is alone, and his attention completely taken up with matters relating to the screen. I am strongly against the idea of having two operators in the room all the time. An operator who is handling two machines by himself, which is made possible by the use of motor driven machines, can, if his port holes are of proper size and correctly located, have his eyes on the screen practically all the time, even though he is not right beside his machine every moment. The danger of anything happening while the operator is not precisely by the side of his machine is very small, as he should not be farther than four or five feet away at any time, and from this distance can jump to his machine in two seconds. While I realize the advantage of being by your machine all the time still I think the advantages of being alone offsets this. Furthermore, the fact that an operator when he has a helper is supposed to be at the side of his machine all the time, does not necessarily prove that he will be there. I will venture to say that many an operator in charge of an operating room by himself who possesses the right spirit will be beside his machine more than will the apprentice aided operator who is supposed to be by his machine all the time. When an operator does have an apprentice, he should secure one who is not less than fifteen years of age, who is trustworthy, smokes little or none at all, does not drink, and establish a set of rules for the apprentice to obey. The apprentice should be paid a salary which is sufficient to make his work of interest. The operator should see that above all the apprentice is capable of making a proper patch in the film, insisting that it be made correctly. It is generally acknowledged that much damage is done to the film by the incapable apprentice. The operator should very seldom, if ever, leave the apprentice in charge of the projection.

Reply to Question No. 149.

By W. E. Frisbie, Fort Monroe, Va.

Without regard to the matter of apprentice employment, I undertake to answer the above question thus:

I take as my premises that an apprentice is a man, not necessarily young, who is really desirous of learning the trade of motion picture machine operating. Without such a desire, by whatever name he may be called, he will never make an acceptable apprentice.

Upon these premises, then, the first thing I would do would be to require him to equip himself with the tools of the trade, viz., the Handbook and other suitable textbooks, and such tools for the mechanical handling of the machines and accessories as are commonly accepted as necessary, and require them to be the best of their respective kinds.

I would then, for the first few months, instruct him in the keeping of the machinery in proper condition, cleaning, oiling, adjusting, etc., but especially the oiling and cleaning. Aside from this, I would keep him away from the machine itself, and never, under any circumstances allow him to touch the business end of a projector—in other words, the crank. After he has gained the fundamentals of the machine, and knows, in a proper way, the why and wherefore of each adjustment, the care of film, proper patching, I would supervise his runing film, all the time requiring him to study, study, study.

After six months of such training a man should know the fundamentals of operating, provided he had studied his textbooks properly, and applied his knowledge to the practical end of things. But he would not be a practical and efficient operator for some years, for he must first have certain experience and learn to work out the various operating room problems for himself, and effectively care for such emergencies as from time to time arise.

But with the course briefly outlined above he would at least be able to project a picture which would be above the average.

Just a word in qualification of the above. If a man, or boy (not under seventeen), who decided to serve an apprenticeship under me did not study, and show that he really wanted to know just what each thing was done for, and why it should be done, and then do it that way, he would never learn to be an operator under me, for he would be dismissed. He would have to study, study, Study. BOOK KNOWLEDGE, PLUS PRACTICAL KNOWLEDGE, PLUS REAL DESIRE AND HARD WORK MAKES OPERATORS out of apprentices; anything else makes "Jimmy-the-Ushers."

[With regard to Brother Frisbie's reply, I think it sets forth what ought to be the attitude of the operator toward the apprentice very well indeed. As to the answer given by Friend Snyder, I would just like to ask him this question. If you don't have apprentices and teach them along the lines suggested by Neighbor Frisbie, where are your operators going to come from? How are you going to get competent men—men capable of doing justice to productions which costs hundreds of thousands of dollars? If the fireman was barred from the locomotive cab, where would you get your competent locomotive engineers? I think that alone is sufficient to condemn Friend Snyder's viewpoint. My own attitude is that we ought to put a stop to Jimmy-the-Usher, and absolutely compel the adoption of an apprenticeship system WITH A MINIMUM OF AT LEAST ONE YEAR, AND PREFERABLY TWO of apprenticeship.]

A Correction.

From Boston comes the following with regard to article entitled "Reason for the Rule," page 1542, September 2d issue:

In view of the substance of the letter you did very well with the answer. In fact if the letter had contained a genuine grievance, instead of being merely the statement of an uninformed, or wilfully malicious writer, who rushes in where wise men dare not, your answer would cover the subject very well indeed. In other words, if the squawk from Lowell were the truth, then the whole thing would be correct, but the fly in that particular bottle of ointment is that the writer did NOT set forth the truth, and I would suppose that my dear and conscientious friend, the editor, after many years of opening mail of all sorts, would have his olefactory organ so well developed that he would, simply by smelling the above letter, have detected an odor of which we all have heard, though some city dwellers have not smelt it. The truth of the matter is that the manager of the Voyons theater in Lowell, in an effort to defeat the Lowell Local of Operators, I. A. T. S. E. brought to the above theater a man named Hill, who was a member of a dual organization of moving picture operators in Boston, the same being known as the "Knights of Labor," which organization is not recognized either in Massachusetts, or elsewhere. This later fact, to give the manager of the Voyons credit, he did not know, but the public of Lowell was wiser than the manager, and since the manager insisted on retaining the man the public failed to dig up the necessary nickels and dimes and the theater closed, and is today standing as a silent rebuke to methods of this kind. The man in question, Hill, was NOT a member of the Boston Local, I. A. T. S. E. I trust that you will, in your usual fair-minded way, give a little space to our side of the controversy, and in closing I wish you the best of luck both at home and on your future trips.

Knowing the sourse from which this statement emanates, I am prepared to accept it as the absolute truth. I do not think any comment is necessary, other than to say that I am indeed sorry that the Boston local was inadvertently made to stand sponser for the acts of a man for whom it was in no way responsible.

Development of the Aperture Lens.

Brother Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., presents the attached drawing and letter which are published without comment, except to repeat that I believe an aperture lens, which will probably be carried in the same mount with the objective, is what we are going to finally come to. That is the way it looks to your Uncle Dudley at this writing.

In Fig. 1, the condenser system is to be regarded as constructed and adjusted so as to work at its maximum efficiency, i. e., the crater is placed as close as practicable to the back condenser, and the spot at the aperture is just large enough to give a clear field. The condenser system is to be thus regarded as standardized and fixed immovable for the above mentioned conditions.

The aperture lens is shown placed between the aperture and objective, and this has been found to be the only position at which it will accomplish the desired purpose, since placing it behind the aperture has been found to not work at all. The action of the aperture lens is seen by observing the drawing. Each diverging cone of light which emanates from each pin point on the film passes through the aperture lens and the divergence of the beam is thereby decreased. The result of this action is to narrow down the beam at the shutter position before the lens. In this connection the aperture lens produces precisely the same results as the well known expedient of increasing the distance between the condensers and aperture, with the exception that in Fig. No. 1 the condenser system is not disturbed.

Again, the action of the aperture lens always concentrates the entire beam which passes through the objective, and thus tends to prevent loss of light in case of insufficient lens diameter. But, on the other hand, this concentrating action is limited by the fact that in proportion as the focal length of the aperture lens is made less, i. e., as the beam through the objective is further concentrated, the ideal shutter position will approach the objective, until, if the beam is still further concentrated, the shutter position will be located within the lens barrel, and this will make conditions bad for the shutter. On this account the converging action of the aperture lens is limited to the extent of placing the narrowest part of the beam at least several inches ahead of the objective. Furthermore, the use of the aperture lens as shown in Fig. 1, alters the E. F. of the objective and the size of the screen picture, and in this, as well as in other respects actually becomes a factor of the objective itself; so in all probability if the aperture lens should pan out at all, it will likely have to be constructed as an integral factor of the objective, and probably be contained within the same lens barrel.

Can't Be Did.

An operator from upper New York State sends in a letter which I cannot publish. He says that a certain theater manager in a city near Albany recently received a big boost in the Moving Picture World, and, in view of that fact wants certain alleged facts printed, the aforesaid facts being substantially as follows. First: The man who writes the letter is an operator of eleven years' experience. When the manager in question took charge of the theater in which he was working he wanted him to do the operating, help sweep, dust, put out posters, paint signs, get stage ready for vaudeville, go home and eat dinner, return at 2 p. m., run the machines until 5:15, go home to supper, get back at 7 and run the machine until 10:30; also get the properties for vaudeville shows, and in return for these trifling services the aforesaid "manager" was willing to pay the truly enormous sum of $18.00 per week, though he did finally pay $20.00, but afterwards discharged the operator and put in a relative at $15.00, who acknowledged that six weeks before that time he had never seen a moving picture machine. He afterwards raised this "operator" to $20.00.

The operator in question wants the letter printed with the name of the manager, town and his own name in capital letters, because, he says, he can substantiate, or back up every word of the foregoing statement.

I would like to do it, but it is not advisable for several reasons, not the least of which is the fact that however strongly I may believe the writer is telling the truth still I have no means of checking up his statements, therefore cannot of my own knowledge vouch for their truth, hence no names can be given. I would suggest, however, that inasmuch as the city in question lies immediately across from a city which is organized, it might be well for the operators to get into the union on the other side of the river and protect themselves. Certainly the asking of an operator to do all these things is nothing short of an outrage. This manager does not really want an operator. What he is looking for is a sort of maid of all work. The service he asks certainly is worth, at the very least calculation, $20.00 on the operating end. The other work ought to pay some man at least $12 or $15 a week, therefore on the $20.00 basis this "manager" is "saving" at least $12.00 at the expense of the operator. I have no patience with this sort of thing. I believe in fair play. I believe absolutely in the operator delivering the goods on the screen, but I do not believe in his being obliged to grow whiskers in order that the manager may use them for a pen wiper or door mat. This same "manager" would, I have no doubt, think nothing of paying $12.00 for something a little extra in the way of a feature for one night, but to pay $12.00 per week for something extra in the way of a projection artist—Oh, dear me, nothing doing!

Very Foolish.

Harry Siegel, manager Gayety Theater, Elizabeth, N. J., says:

At the theater I am managing we have a "sweat box," or in other words, a small operating room. We are using one Powers Six A and one Powers Five, but there is hardly space to pass between the two machines. To enlarge the room is impossible as it is between two exits and the fire department won't allow it. They also wish us to take out one of the machines which would leave us with only one projector. Now what I would like to ask, is there any machine company which makes a machine which will do the work of two? In other words is there a machine on the market having one lamphouse and two heads? Is there any demand for such a machine? There is only one thing I do not like about the projection department, viz: it is not large enough.

No, there is no such machine made, nor do I believe there would be any demand for one. It would be a very awkward thing to thread and handle; also the head would, of necessity, have to be run by motor or else one be cranked left handed. No, I do not believe there would be any demand at all for such a projector. As to your conditions, why they seem to be rather impossible, don't they? Nor do I think we can blame the authorities for asking the removal of one of the machines, since operating under those conditions is not the safest thing in the world. Sorry, old man, but I am afraid I cannot help you. The fact is that the building is, very evidently, not suitable for use as a moving picture theater.

Steel Pole Line.

F. E. Hugheart, Grand Junction, Iowa, says:

Have been in the game since 1912, and am an ardent projection department fan. Have every issue of the "World" from that date. If I had not studied your Handbooks and the World I don't think I would be in the game now.

Have made a success where others have failed, and but for the Handbooks and the World I probably would have traveled their road. In this business we are always running up against something new, but I have one now which I at least have never seen in the department, although you may be familiar with this particular proposition. This town used to have D. C., but at present we have a transmission line from Boone, via Perry, which carries 33,000 volts A. C. It is the only steel pole line in the state and the service is fine, with a power rate of 4 3-4 cents per K. W. when using over 300 K. W. My theater was wired with three (No. 4) wire feeders which come into the operating room. Now since we have A. C., and wanting D. C. at the arc, I bought a Fort Wayne A. C., to D. C. generator set which same is placed in a small brick building which was built for it in the rear of the theater, the same being 8x16 feet. The wires come from the pole to this room, where the meter is located, and go from there to the operating room. My lights, fans, motor on machine, etc., are all on 110 volt A. C. The three wires were 110-220, and now I am getting at what I want. Can I hook all my fans, lights, motors, etc., on the neutral and one outside wire, the same being A. C., 110 volt, and feed the arc through the neutral and other outside wire with 60 volts D. C.? This will save me considerable wiring which, if I have to do, will be very hard to get at. I have given you the details, but all there really is to the question would be, would the neutral wire carry A. C. and D. C. at the same time. Two electricians here say it cannot be done successfully; another says that it can, and he can do it and prove it. Do you think it can, and if so would there be any serious drawback? Am quite anxious to know whether you will be in Des Moines on this trip, because if you lecture there I certainly want to be on the job, and have my operator there too. So here's hoping you will. My picture and projection compares very favorably with that which I have seen in Omaha, Des Moines, and the smaller cities in this vicinity. In closing I hope that the "go de-vil" will not be the means of losing us our "trouble eradicator."

This is an interesting question. As I understand the matter, Brother Hugheart really proposes to feed all motors, incandescents, including the motor of the motor generator set from the neutral and one outside wire, so that he would not really be using one side at all. He then proposes to connect one side of the D. C. circuit to the neutral and use the other wire of the three-wire system, which would not need to be connected to the transformer at all, as the other side of the D. C. projection arc circuit. Now, I don't know positively whether this could or could not be done, though it certainly is not an arrangement which the underwriters would for a single moment tolerate. As to the electrical possibility of the matter, however, I do not see any reason why it could not be made to work, therefore, I take sides with the man who says it can, but I would nevertheless recommend that you wire your D. C. separately, even though it is hard to do. Feed all fans and incandescents from one side of the A. C., and the motor of the motor generator set from the other side, thus to some extent balance the load. Let us hear opinions of electrician operators as to the neutral wire carrying A.C. and D.C. As to visiting Des Moines, I cannot yet say, as I have not heard anything from either the operators' or exhibitors' organizations in that city.

Concerning Carbons.

The following communication with accompanying illustration has been received from B. Perris, Research Laboratories, of the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio. We welcome it as a genuine addition to knowledge on an exceedingly important matter. It will be noticed that the tests determine that the crater formation improves up to an arc length of 55 volts, beyond which there is retrogression.

I would like to call the attention of our readers to the fact that this particular series of experiments was brought about directly by the projection department. You will also note that the National Carbon Company "keeps tabs" on the projection department. That same is true of all large manufacturers, so far as I am able to ascertain. The heads of companies either themselves read the department or have it read, and those things which are of interest to them brought to their attention. It therefore follows that operators who have fault to find can and do get those faults directly before the manufactuers by presenting them through the department. It is also true that very many of the improvements on projection machines, and other things pertaining to the operation room, have been brought about either directly or indirectly through the projection department. In other words the reading of the criticisms of the operators sets the manufacturers thinking, and his thinking results very often in something that will remedy the evil complained of . That is not hot air, but a statement of fact. The manufacturer in this particular case is honest enough to admit that he received his inspiration for the experiments through the projection department. Manufacturers don't often do that, but the fact remains just the same, as private correspondence with them shows, that they do get the original idea for improvements, and very often the precise improvement itself from the department. Mr. Perris writes as follows:

Within the past six months a number of discussions have appeared in the Projection Department regarding poor crater formation on D. C. service. This formation was described as a very small, deeply indented crater, with a very sharp edge. It was implied at the time that this is a defect, probably due to the carbon itself.

An incorrect length of arc in operation on D. C. projectors is a common difficulty, and this was the first clue investigated to determine the cause of this crater formation. The most usual combination is a ⅝ inch cored upper with a ½ inch solid lower carbon. We all know that particularly on low current this large negative carbon is the cause of considerable unsteadiness in operation of the arc, and in order to steady the arc and to get the light, a rather short arc ofttimes is used. Then again, it is impossible to obtain sufficient arc voltage at the lamp, due to the use of small line wires, with corresponding heavy drop in the voltage. Both of these are common causes for the operation of D. C. propectors with short arc lengths.

The defective craters described above can be demonstrated experimentally, which the writer did, with the results shown in the photgraphs. As already indicated, it was only necessary to operate the projector lamp at 30 amperes, and to have a very short arc length. The first two tests being with a standard trim of ⅝ inch cored upper and ½ inch solid lower. Carbon "A" is a sample of the complaint, while "B" is an experimentally made carbon, showing defective crater formation.

While working on the subject, it was thought worth while to find how the new small diameter Silver Tip negatives would work when operated with short arc lengths. The ⅝ inch positive carbons C, D and E, are the results of these tests. ⅝ inch cored uppers were used with 5/16 inch Siver Tip solid carbons as negatives. In each case the current was held at 30 amperes, but the arc lenghts were increased from 5/32 inch (45 volts) in test C, to 7/32 inch (52 volts) in test D, and 9/32 inch (58 volts) in test E. In spite of the fact that the conditions in test C were exactly the same as in test B, other than the change from ½ inch to 5/16 inch diameter negative carbon, there is a very decided improvement in the crater formation in favor of the very small negative carbon. This improvement in the crater formation continues with the increased arc length up to about 55 volts ¼ inch — 8/32 inch arc length) beyond which the crater begins to overhang at the back. In other words, when there is sufficient power in the arc to provide enough heat and flame to wash the entire tip of the upper carbon, the crater formation is much more flat, and the edges more rounded than is possible when a short arc length is used with a corresponding small amount of power and heat.

Another very interesting feature observed in these tests is the absolutely clear space in front of the crater, there being no interference with the light from the very small negative carbon used. It resulted in a perfectly white light, there being no yellow cast thrown on the screen from reflections of the negative carbon. This point is important, as it has been complained about many times. Many operators are well aware of its cause and have corrected it by the use of the small negative.

In the earlier paragraph we mentioned the effect due to the use of negative carbons of ½ inch or larger diameter. When such large carbons are used the amount of power put into them is usually not sufficient to properly shape the tip of the carbon, and a blunt end results which causes the arc to wander and thereby producing a flickering light. These Silver Tip negatives which were used in these tests are at the very beginning smaller in diameter than the burnt top of these ½ inch solids, so that at no time does the arc have more than enough surface at the tip of the carbon necessary to hold it. The arc, therefore, cannot wander, since there is no extended surface upon which it can travel. At any time during the trim the arc can be started off smoothly and at full candle power.

This series of tests has demonstrated definitely that the size of the negative carbon, in combination with the arc length, is the direct influencing cause in producing the proper crater shape. The use of comparatively large negative carbons with short arc lengths is the immediate cause of this sharply indented crater formation such as has been complained of lately. This defect can absolutely be overcome, and the light on the screen and the steadiness of the light can be greatly improved by the use of very small negative carbons of about half the diameter now being used.

With regard to the matter of a smaller carbon, why I would not care to express an opinion on this particular thing, except to say that I have long advocated the use of a lower negative carbon of smaller diameter than the positive. Of late I have been inclined to think there may be some slight advantage in using a smaller carbon even for alternating current, and this view has been approved by quite a few operators who have tried it. The conclusions reached and the arguments advanced are laid before our readers and recommended to their very serious consideration. Get some of the Silver Tips and try it out

Testing Condenser Lenses.

R. W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., proposes the following method of testing condenser lenses. It is referred to our readers as being interesting and worthy of considerable study.

In Fig. 1 is shown a method of testing condenser lenses which is described and explained as follows: The condenser to be tested for accuracy of shape, is placed before a crater, which must be constructed so as to give forth a very even illumination and ought to be about 1-16" in diameter. At the position A' A', which is a section of the light beam that would correspond to about the location of the objective, is placed a screen. The light spot on the screen A' A' is the focussed image of the back conjugat focal plane A A, and since section A A is directly in front of the crater, it, (A A) must receive very even illumination. Consequently, any vagaries (of structure) in illumination observed at the screen A' A' must be due wholly to imperfections contained in the shape of the condenser lens under test.

In section B, taken at position A' A', is observed the effect produced by a condenser which is probably about as perfect as can ordinarily be found on the market. The illumination in B is quite uniformly distributed, except for a greater concentration of light toward the center, much of which is probably due to spherical aberration; but when conditions are found to be as satisfactory as shown in section B, the spherical surface can be passed as quite perfect.

In section C, the form of the image seems to indicate that the curved surface of the condenser which was used in this test approaches the shape of a pyramid, or rather is more like the rainy side of a raised umbrella. The grinding instrument used in its manufacture must have had a kind of drunken or intermittent rotary motion.

In the condenser used to produce the image shown at section D, it is very evident that the lens contains the fault of astigmatism within its very structure. The beam is here actually broken up into two distinct halves, and gives conclusive evidence that the surface of the lens is not truly spherical, but is egg shaped, showing that the grinding instrument must have had a longitudinal as well as a rotary movement. Care was taken in all these experiments to have the crater located on the optical axis of the lens. In section E the image is composed of concentric circles, showing that the surface of the lens used is composed of a series of conical surfaces, instead of being a true sphere. The condenser lenses used in the four cases just cited were very good lenses. Their surfaces had a good polish, and to the eye and touch were free from any corrugations or waviness. In fact, when used as a mirror it was impossible to observe any distortion in the reflected image; but nevertheless the facts are as we have shown and described them

Now, to come to the practical results of these imperfections just shown, as regards the picture on the regular screen: The images observed on the screen at A' A' are not in focus with the aperture, consequently the results shown in B, C, D, and E cannot be said to truly apply to conditions of illumination at the aperture. In fact, it might be possible to have a quite even illumination at the true focal plane, which should be the position of the aperture, and still have the defects as described at A' A'. But nevertheless, in the practical operation of the optical system it is almost impossible to keep the aperture coincident with the true focal plane, and the greater the variation in distance from the true focal plane, the more the illumination at the aperture will be affected by the defects described at position A' A'. Since the light beam is symmetrical, forward and backward from the focal plane, the defects referred to will be evidenced at the aperture, no matter in which direction it happens to be out of true position. It is therefore, evident that the effects of the uneven illumination shown in sections B, C, D and E will show to a greater or less extent on the screen in the form of a ghost, composed of lights and shadows.

Another Reason.

R. J. Richardson, Jr., Clifton Heights, Pa., says:

As regards "An Interesting Problem," August 12th issue, I have had this same trouble time and again. Dry film at times seems to have a tendency to catch on the top sprocket, so that the sprocket carries the film around to the back, pulling the loop underneath. Sometimes it will run that way; then again it will go on around, thus ripping out the sprocket holes, as shown in the illustration, August 12th issue. It is only three days since I had this very thing happen.

Enclosed you will find sample of film torn the way you describe. This was caused by the tail piece falling back on the sprocket, and of course starting in the opposite direction to which the film is traveling. As you see, it took the sprocket track off evenly on both sides. The last three or four inches of the tail piece should have the sprocket holes removed with a pair of scissors.

All of which is quite correct, and offers still another solution to "An Interesting Problem." Brother Richardson suggests that a metal guard be attached to the upper end of the aperture plate, using the two screws which hold the upper end of the aperture, and extending up and around the hub of the upper sprocket. This has been suggested several times, and unless I am mistaken Power's machines are now equipped that way.

Wants to Join.

B. H. Mullins, Jacksonville, Tex., says:

Am an interested reader of the department, to which I owe many, many things of importance with regard to projection. Have been operating a little more than four years, though I have been out at different times for a few months. I always went back, however, and though I am not an expert, I want to be, and am ready to do anything possible to improve my knowledge. Am operating one Power's 6A and one 6B, using 110 volts D. C., and getting good results. I thoroughly agree with your attitude with regard to punch holes in films. Will you kindly have headquarters' secretary of the I. A. write me with regard to membership. I think I am qualified, but cannot afford to spend four or five months in an organized town in order to be approved. I intend to order the last Handbook soon, as I wish to be right up to date and fit myself for the future which I believe lies in projection.

I have asked headquarters to write you, Friend Mullins. You are taking the right course in trying to perfect yourself in the technical knowledge of your chosen career; also you are taking the right course in seeking to affiliate yourself with the organization which represents our craft.

The Universal Motor.

Mr. Warren H. Booker, Chief of the Bureau, State Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C., in a letter seeking advice from the editor says:

Our electric lighting plant consists of a Universal engine-generator set, of 50 ampere capacity at 60 volts, D. C., of course. We find this is ample current with the Power's road equipment, which we have just installed, to give a very good picture on a 16 foot cloth screen. If you are not familiar with the Universal Motor Company's outfit, you might be interested to know that, when the water, oil and gasoline tanks are all filled, it weighs but 625 pounds complete, including engine, generater, and cooling system, the latter consisting of an automobile radiator and fan. The engine is of the 4 cylinder, 4 cycle type and gives us no trouble whatever.

All of which is interesting, and probably will not cause the Universal Motor Company, Oshkosh, Wis., to have any hard feeling toward either us or the State Board of Health of North Carolina.

BRITISH PATENTS.

B 7753-1915— A. Boularan.

Preparation of Cine Film from which other films can be printed in Ink. The printing film is made by applying to the front of the positive black-and-white cinematograph film a layer of bichromated gelatine which is covered with black paper while moist, dried, and exposed to light through the positive image and then developed with hot water in order to obtain a relief image which can then be printed by means of colored gelatine solution.

B 5100-1915— J. E. Thornton.

Making Cine Film by Photo-mechanical Printing. The patent consists of the full discussion of the production of cine films by photo-mechanical printing using a broken tone image so arranged that the tones do not register in successive pictures.

B 7956-1915— A. P. H. Trivelli.

To Renovate Used Cine Film, it is coated with flexible hard drying varnish or lacquer.

B 100487-1916— C. VanDeventer.

Kinematograph Apparatus. The electricity generated by friction on a film in a kinematograph camera is discharged from it by means of an earthed conductor which is insulated from the film and so placed that the charge of the film induces a charge on the conductor.

B 12357-1914 - E. M. Stoffels.

Cinematograph Apparatus using glass plates.

B 7658-1915— H. Workman.

Cine Projecting Machines adapted to show two or more different types of films, varying in width and length of pull. More especially intended to the projection of color films.

B 8428-1915— C. E. Akeely.

Tripod Head for Cine Cameras. Universal turntable apparatus for automatic revolution in horizontal, vertical and inclined planes.

B 14095-1915— B. H. Greene.

Device for Cleaning and Renovating Cine Films, comprising brushes, pads and absorbent rollers.

Color Filters.

When the atmosphere is slightly hazy, it reflects the blue light more than the other colors, and distant objects assume a bluish cast that ordinarily makes them over-exposed. Here we find the light yellow filter of great advantage. We can obtain much better detail in distant objects by the use of the yellow filter.

For ordinary work, the Ingento color filter, series A, No. 1, which has a diameter of 1 5 16", may be obtained of almost any photographic dealer for 75 cents. It is mounted in a nickel plated cell with adjustable springs, permitting it to be slipped over the lens mount of the camera. With Eastman film this filter may be used by using a diaphragm number about two points greater than the diaphragm number for the ordinary exposure. In other words, it requires at least four times the exposure that would be required without it. Other series of filters made by Burke and James require too much exposure for use except with the trick crank.

The Eastman Kodak Company furnishes the greatest range of color filters of any American manufacturer. For $2.50 they furnish an adjustable filter holder for filters 2" square, which will fit any lens mount from ⅞" to 1 9/16" in diameter; and at $1.40 each, they furnish filters of any color and any intensity which will fit this holder.

If you are ingenious and can make a smaller filter holder for yourself, you can obtain the same quality of filters ¾" square, which are large enough for most cinematograph lenses, for 75 cents apiece.

The kodak sky filter is one of which the upper part is colored and the lower part clear. It restrains the sky, while giving the full exposure to objects in the foreground in the lower part of the picture. It may be used sideways when photographing buildings showing a shadow side and a sunny side by adjusting it so that the exposure of the brightly lighted side comes through the filter, thereby giving more exposure and better detail in the shadow. To obtain the full benefit of the sky filter, it must not be used too close to the lens.

When using filters, do not fail to use a sun shade or hood over the lens to shade all possible extraneous light away from the filter. A ray of bright light striking the filter from the side will inevitably cause a heavy film of fog over the picture.

Answers to Correspondents.

Washington, Iowa, writes:

> Motion Picture Photography is sort of a side line with me so far, but I am very much interested in the work and always read your page in the world with a great deal of interest. About a year ago I sent for a book on "How to Take and Make Moving Pictures," and I found it to be a very instructive little book and well worth the cost of 35 cents. On page 25 of this book I found a statement which did not look right to me and I wrote the people and asked them if it was not an error, but they still maintained that the book was correct. Following is the statement in question: "In taking scenes of auto or horse races the camera should be pointed toward the object, etc. . . . These should be taken at a rate of from 24 to 32 pictures per second." Now in your issue of May 20, under the heading "Hints to news film cameramen," Mr. Hugon says, under the heading of "Races," "turn slowly about half speed."
> Now the question is, which is correct? And while I am at it here is another puzzler for the beginner. This is in regard to the shutter speed. In the Universal catalogue they state that the best all round speed is 1-80 of a second, while another catalogue of a cheaper machine says that 1-32 of a second is the best for all around use. In the booklet above mentioned the statement is made that 1-64 is the best, although they also state that 1-50 is most generally used in the studios.
> For my part I have found that there was a sort of "flicker" effect unless I used a speed of 1-64 or greater; that is, when an object was rather close and passed through the picture at right angles. I have seen this same effect in some of the older photoplays and have wondered if it could have been caused by the position of the shutter rather than the speed.

"The little booklet" is wrong in advising a high rate of speed in taking fast moving objects except where the intention is to show some important detail of the movement.

In news pictures the idea is to make races look more exciting by making them appear on the screen even faster than they are really run, so that Mr. Hugon is correct.

In photographing moving machinery for a company that wanted to show some operation performed by the moving machine, it might be very necessary to speed the camera up very considerably. On the other hand, in almost all dramatic and news pictures it is desired to show fast and violent action so as to appear even faster and more violent than in the actual scene, so that the rule is much more apt to be turn slow than to turn fast.

As a general rule the best shutter speed to use is the largest opening of the shutter which your camera permits. It is not necessary in a motion picture film as it is in a still photograph that each individual picture of a moving object should be perfectly sharp, for the illusion of motion on the screen is better reproduced by a slight blurring of the moving object than it would be if each individual picture of the object in motion were perfectly sharp. For instance, if you make a motion picture with a very small shutter opening of any small object in rapid movement so that the motion is stopped in each frame when the picture is thrown on the screen it will show the object passing across the screen in a jerky manner preceded and followed by ghostly images of the same thing. This is due to the phenomenon known as the persistence of vision.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Setting for "Somewhere in France."

Released by Triangle Film Corp.
Musical Suggestions by S. M. Berg.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indication will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 7½ T "The Germans would pay————" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 29 D "When brother leaves gun," is a description of action.

Marie Chaumontel, a beautiful, fascinating woman, employed as an agent for the German secret service, uses her charms to inveigle the military secrets from susceptible, young French officers. Having caused the ruination of Captain Henri Ravignac, her lover, by stealing his plans, she continues her secret profession, but is thwarted through Henri's brother, who has sworn to seek vengeance, and in the end she is entrapped into prison through the efforts of his brother officer.

The character of this picture is a modern military drama with scene of action in France. There are other scenes at the German Embassy and French War Bureau.

It is suggested that no national patriotic music be used with the exception at 67¼ "France cannot bestow—" where "La Marseillaise" would be appropriate.

Note particularly: Shot at 29½; wireless effects at 33¾ and continued according to action throughout the picture

The theme selected is "Entr'Act 'Clarice' "—(Valse Intermezzo)—Loud.

The Two Sides of the Question.

By S. M. BERG.

I am in receipt of the following letter, which perhaps may be in the minds of other correspondents, and for that reason it is being published in these columns.

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 25, 1916.

Musical Editor,
Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I read with a good deal of interest your articles in the Moving Picture World, and must admit that from time to time I have found many good hints and ideas. But don't you think you are just a little hard on us musicians? I suppose there are slackers, but I feel that the majority are sincere in their work and do strive to do their best.

I have been in the motion picture business now for about two and one-half years, and find that my hand is continually in my pocket for the purchase of music.

I have an orchestra of six musicians, and always buy for small orchestra. I spend on an average about five dollars a week for music, and yet my manager frequently complains that I play the same stuff too often. In a discussion with some of my musician friends, this seems to be a common thing for the managers to complain of the musicians' library, and all my friends tell me that they also expend a regular sum of money for the purchase of music. It seems to me that you have somewhat pulled the long bow in accounting some of your personal incidents, although I must confess they are entertaining enough.

In conclusion, however, I must tell you that I always look forward for my Moving Picture World, and always turn to your music page.

I remain, yours sincerely,
(Signed) Jack Awlstein.

In answer to this correspondence, I can assure him and my readers that I am not in the habit of overdrawing incidents, or recounting imaginary circumstances. In my ten years' experience in New York City, the class of men whom I had to contend with, is impossible to imagine. Musicians and readers should realize that in the past two years, men have turned to the motion picture industry, who previously looked down with scorn at the work.

To show as a concrete example the conditions which are even to day being met with, I submit the following letter. It does not seem possible that such a thing has happened, but the original of this letter is in my possession, and can be seen by a visit to my office. Perhaps some of the readers may have seen an advertisement of mine in this paper drawing attention to a new series of Incidental Music.

Monett, Mo., Oct. 1st, 1916.

S. M. Berg,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I am from Missouri, and an orchestra leader in a five-hundred seat theater known as the Bijou. I don't buy music, but if you have anything to give me, come on with it. There are no music stores here and the music business (mail order) is large at this time of the year, and our three piece orchestra introduces all the music here. We know how much advertising we do and we do not even think of buying music.

We would rather have piano than orchestrations, as we have only piano, violin, cello, and drums. This is my second season here, so I am not so bad, am I?

Now don't send me anything to buy. It is entirely foolish to do so. I will appreciate anything you send. If it is good we will put it on our program. Add General Delivery.

Yours truly,

(Signed) C. C. Melton,,
Bijou Theater.

Here is the other side of the question, and my answer to my first correspondent. Here is a fellow supposed to be playing for the pictures in his second season, and he candidly admits that he does not buy any music. What sort of manager can there be in this house? It would be interesting to hear his ideas of musical interpretation for the films, and more interesting to hear Musician Melton interpret a picture.

I leave it to my readers to decide whether I overdraw my imagination, when I am in possession of such a letter.

An Unusual Presentation

"The Dawnmaker," Put On at the Liberty Theater, Seattle, Wash., in Extraordinary Manner.

WILLIAM S. HART'S "The Dawnmaker" was the latest Triangle-Ince feature staged by J. G. von Herberg. After a private showing of "The Dawnmaker," Mr. von Herberg decided that this picture deserved special advertising, staging and music, and that the point on which these should revolve was the Northland, that vast region where romance goes hand in hand with adventure, where man rules and loves by right of primal might.

Gordon F. Fullerton, advertising manager of the Liberty, built his cuts to carry this theme, and emphasized Hart's face and name, since that actor is such a favorite in Seattle. Silhouetted against an arc of the rising sun appeared a bust length portrait of Hart dressed as an Indian. Set into the sun's rays was the title of the play, "The Dawnmaker," while in the dark sky above was placed Hart's name in white letters. At the bottom of the ad was a horizon of snow-covered evergreen trees, into the solid portion of which was worked the theater's name, "Liberty," in snow-covered rustic letters. Billboards and window cards covered the city highways and business section, while framed photos of Hart and framed scenes of the play were placed in the windows of the big business houses of Seattle's "Broadway," Second avenue. Large ads were placed in the photoplay sections of the "Seattle Sunday Times" and the Saturday afternoon edition of "The Daily Star."

To create atmosphere for the picture the inside lobby was turned into a bower or cave of evergreen, the walls, ceiling and lights being hidden by the sweet smelling pine, spruce and fir, with a dash of color lent by autumn leaves which formed a large part of the ceiling decoration.

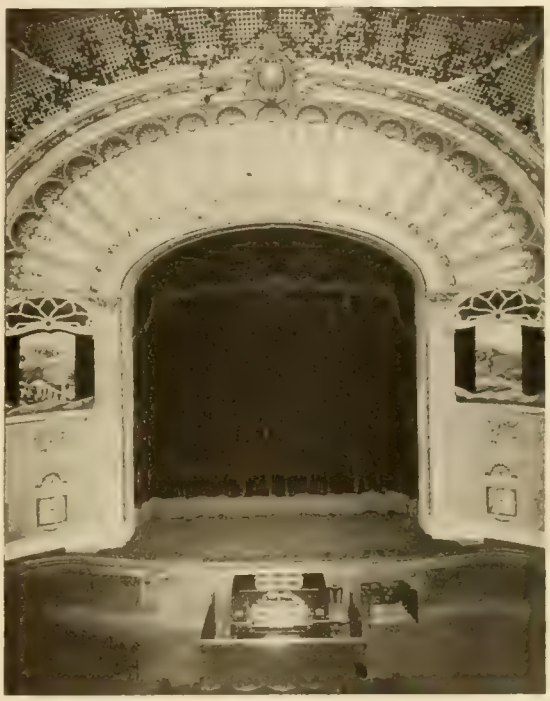
An Indian maid was the cashier and Indian maids were the ushers. The costumes were rented from local costumers; but to lend the necessary touch of realism genuine Indian headpieces of Wampum, bead embroidery, and real eagle feathers were obtained from the local branch of the Hudson Bay Fur Company.

According to Mr. von Herberg the music and lighting effects in the theater itself were the most difficult problems, for it was decided that not only should these heighten the dramatic effect of "The Dawnmaker," and serve as an introduction, but that they must be distinctive and entirely different from anything done before at the Liberty, and should set a standard that none of its competitors could copy. As the Liberty is unusually well lighted and the giant $35,000



Showing the Effect of Lighting Boxes on Each Side of the Curtain.

Wurlitzer Unit orchestra is always on the job, the established order was reversed and the audience electrified by the different, the startling. Gradually the house became dark. Starting from the top and back of the theater, one by one the lights flashed out and absolute silence prevailed—the ushers seated nobody while the feature was opening. As the last light went out in front a low violin and cello duet was started on the unit orchestra, accented with the slow, solemn boom of chimes, one at a time, as if one had awakened in the dark and the grandfather clock had tolled the hour. By this time in the two lighting boxes at each side of the curtain was a dim, bluish light gradually paling to gray, and then a rosy dawn revealing distant snow capped peaks, the sky streaked with the rays of the setting sun, while in the foreground were hills covered with snow laden evergreen. As the colors changed from dim blue to gray and pink, the music suggested the hum and undertone of wild life astir at dawn, the awakening of songs of birds, dropping again to dead silence as the title, "William S. Hart's 'Dawnmaker,'" was flashed onto the curtain, only to take up the musical interpretation of the picture as the first scene of the play was framed by the opening curtain, and the audience was into the play.

Round after round of applause greeted the effect, and it has been the talk of Seattle since the opening of "The Dawnmaker," while Mr. von Herberg and Mr. Fullerton have been receiving compliments on all sides for their artistic originality. The theater was packed all day Sunday, September 24, with the crowds extending into the street in the afternoon and evening and capacity houses each of the following three afternoons that the picture ran, with standing room only in the evenings. Considering that the Liberty is a 2,200 capacity house with heavy competition, this is the more remarkable.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON

PROF. LUCAS NO LONGER WITH M. P. WORLD.

The Moving Picture World wishes its readers to know that Professor Hardin Lucas is no longer connected with this paper, either as a contributor or in any other capacity.

THE CHURCH AND THE PHOTOPLAY.

"THE CHURCH AND THE PHOTOPLAY" was the title of an address recently delivered by the Rev. E. H. Romig of St. Andrew's Reformed Church, Reading, Pa. Ways in which the latter can aid the former were pointed out in an interesting talk. The moving pictures can be made highly instructive and useful in developing the mind of the church, he said. In quickening the conscience, developing the moral sense, and in other ways the picture play can be made to serve religious and educational ends.

The psychology of the motion picture and its effects on growing minds were particularly emphasized, as was also the adaptability of the picture to youthful and undeveloped minds; due discrimination in the kinds of pictures for the young was asked for, in the belief that their powers for good are unlimited.

In Manhattan, New York, the Rev. John P. Peters, D. D., is vitally interested in community work, consequently he has made a study of the moving picture and its effect upon the neighborhood in which he works, in a parish having more than 3,000 people connected with the religious and social work. As a result of his experience Dr. Peters says: "What we need and have needed in this country most lamentably is healthful places of entertainment for families and family groups. The saloon has developed its evils because of the lack of something of this sort; if the motion pictures will fill this need, their doing so will cover a multitude of sins. While I cannot fully say of my own observations that the pictures have quite done this, I have known that in small towns they have certainly furnished a much needed form of entertainment for the people. Our country and small town life was lacking in some rational form of social amusement, and, as far as I have been able to observe the moving pictures, they have come nearer to filling this gap than anything else. Something of the same sort must be done in the city, although the need is not so great.

In my own very decent neighborhood I have visited the shows, and have had their pictures and their presumptive effects tabulated to attempt to draw some conclusion as to their general influence mentally and morally.

My conclusion is that there is not sufficient of the uplifting and educational power in the picture houses hereabouts. On the other hand there is little that can be called immoral, or of that insidious nature which would call for censorship. What is most hoped for is that in the moving picture business, as in the press or on the stage, there may be a sufficient number of idealists—struggling for the attainment of higher standards to exert a more immediate influence in conceptions of art or humor, of intellect, and also of social and moral advantage.

These possibilities of the moving pictures are enormous, and, if up to the present time they have not been as effective as some enthusiasts hoped they might be, their full value and purpose is not far off

DETROIT SCHOOLS MOVE FORWARD.

Moving pictures for the public schools of Detroit were authorized by the Text Book and Course of Study Committee of the Board of Education at its last meeting. The use of the pictures is being taken on an experimental basis; five projection machines, and a weekly film service for each of those five machines are first to be tried in connection with twenty-five schools of the city, and, if the results warrant, an appropriation will be asked for to extend the service.

It is interesting to note that Detroit is making this forward move, no doubt that many other schools are also beginning to see the value of the moving picture as an aid to education, in almost every case, however, the everlasting question of the appropriation is the one stumbling block, often before this can be voted there are men of many minds, some often peculiar, to contend with, before the leaders in these things can have their legitimate and reasonable way and move forward with the times. Detroit is to be congratulated, may the example be mightily multiplied. It is worth while being among the leading schools in such beneficial progress.

MUSEUMS USING EDUCATIONAL PICTURES.

In a recent issue of the "Bulletin of the Metropolitan Museum of Art" there appears an article by George W. Stevens, director of the Toledo Museum of Art, in which he says: "It will take no great imagination to forecast the growth of the educational film. As soon as the vast number of schools and colleges, museums, libraries and the myriads of educational clubs and lyceum circles are equipped to utilize them, and museums of art will be able to secure splendid material covering every department of museum work." In New York the Metropolitan Museum of Art is described as "being never so ready." Says one of the directors: "We are trying to keep abreast of the times, even to the use of moving pictures." In all the educational activities of museums, he declares, the fundamental idea is visual instruction.

When it is considered that in New York alone there are upwards of 3,000 teachers who are taking advantage of the lectures and studies afforded by the museum, some idea can be formed of the widespread subjects presented, and the great field for that kind of visual instruction in which the kinematograph is alone the exponent. The results obtained by the use of the traveling exhibits is in itself a proof of the value resulting from the larger field of possibilities opening up, when the broad powers of the pictures is added. Official reports recently published show that the educational extension work carried on by the museums is no longer by any means a "fad," but one of the most helpful sources of that "higher education" now desired and demanded by teachers, designers and manufacturers. The museum's use of the moving pictures, whether in its own class rooms, or with its traveling exhibits, will undoubtedly increase its teaching power and increased popularity to an unlimited extent.

"CIVILIZATION."

This picture is the apocalypse of moving pictures. If we did not know otherwise we should think the author of it a mystic. Nevertheless, it is full of mysticism and allegory. While not classified as an educational picture, it should be seen by educationalists, as it belongs to that class of picture which is giving the world another side of the great work which is being done by educational kinematography.

From a study of this picture we presume that the maker desires to arouse an interest rather than to be a teacher. If so, he is and will be eminently successful. "Civilization" is full of interest; it arouses in all minds the great problems of peace and war; it summons the Prince of Peace through His teachings to become again the teacher of the nations, until "they shall learn war no more." Having done this its mission ceases.

"Civilization" does not teach, it points to the teaching necessary, while calling attention to the need for such teaching. It is not an educational picture; it points to what it believes is the education required. With this accomplished, this great and noble effort will have been crowned with success, and the maker may feel amply repaid for his beneficent thought and labor

"HOW LIFE BEGINS."

Three-Part Biological Film Which Demonstrates New Method of Revelation.

NO time in the history of the moving picture could be more apropos for the advent of a three-part biological film that has been engaging the interest of New York educators, clergymen, and scientific workers, than the present. The film referred to is entitled "How Life Begins" and was produced by Geo. E. Stone, A.B. of Berkeley University, in collaboration with J. A. Long, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Embryology of the University of California, and was piloted east by Mr. Stone. It has been exhibited thus far before such institutions as the American Social Hygiene Association, the Association of Biology Teachers and various other social and educational societies in and about New York City to the entire satisfaction and admiration of all.

"How Life Begins" represents a new and practical method of visualizing scientific facts. Introducing its subject with microscopic views of animal life in stagnant water from the embryo state to developed stages, it follows its line of discussion through the birth and development of the flower, the butterfly, the frog, and the rat, using the latter as an illustration for all mammal types of life including the human being.

The delicate and beautiful manner in which life's wonderful dual system of reproduction has been handled by the producers of this film make it possible of exhibition before children as well as adults; and with the rapid installation of moving picture projection machines in the schools, no school curriculum should be deemed complete without a copy of this film. It not only demonstrates a new method of revealing scientific facts but suggests that other subjects be visualized in the same complete, simple and entertaining manner.

Further information regarding this film can be had from Geo. E. Stone, 1725 Le Roy Avenue, Berkeley, California.

"THE OPENING UP OF CHINA."

For several decades the "opening up of China" has been a common saying in both commercial and religious circles. In many ways China has always been a closed country, with an almost inaccessible interior, a people slow to welcome foreigners; with a prejudice, pardonable because of its centuries of growth. We are now told on the authority of the United States Commercial Attache that China is ready for the "opening up" towards moving pictures.

China has had a species of crude motion pictures for centuries, which really were a transparency. Chinese figures were painted on an oiled transparent silk and manipulated behind a screen in such a way as to produce a motion picture effect. These are very popular and are used throughout China. Again it must be remembered that China is a theatrical country, the small theatres there are as common or general as are the moving picture houses in this country; these facts make it evident that when China is opened up to the moving picture business it will offer one of the largest and most acceptable fields of trade in the world. The official report calling attention to the great opening for trade now about to be made points that at present only the large treaty ports and commercial cities have the moving pictures and these are by no means of a good order, the pictures being poor and the projectors of cheap and indifferent make. Financially, the outlook while extensive will not permit of large prices. Entertainments there are always cheap, the money standard is small, consequently those preparing to take advantage of the prospects presented must, says the report, "be ready to give good pictures from good machines at cheap rates. To the Chinese this means a new and larger measure of education, for wherever the moving pictures goes the educational films are sure to be a part of the demand, and unless the writer is very much mistaken, education by means of the picture will fit in with the Chinese method perhaps quicker than with any other people. Educational kinematography may mean a great deal for China.

IN THE HANDS OF CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

In "The Nation's Business," F. A. Churchill, Jr., suggests that local chambers of commerce might, by using the moving pictures, create a better feeling among business men and bring about a clearer understanding of various industries. Taking, for example, the fact that as is well known, one of the big steel industries recently exhibited in schools and colleges their method of making steel tubes, from the ore in the ground to the finished pipe; also that automobile manufacturers, in addition to the industrial uses of the pictures, are using them to promote efficiency and health among the workpeople. The idea is capable of development. While it is possible to obtain some valuable knowledge from these industrial pictures, consider what would be the value of a chamber of commerce course of lectures on subjects under their control or advice. By the use of such a course of illustrated talks, even one evening a month, in each of the great industrial centres, a vast amount of profitable information would be disseminated, only to react to the benefit of both the people and the industry. The foregoing suggestion is not without some value, no body of authorities could more profitably use the moving pictures than the chamber of commerce; they have prestige, authority and influence; their powers are widespread and acknowledged so that the good they could do is unlimited. The Moving Picture Educator would welcome as a distinct advance in the best and most positive lines of commercial educational kinematography such a movement, and practically see no hindrance or difficulty in the way. Men, money and methods are always at the disposal of these chambers, and their members are always among the most progressive men, either commercially or educationally. Results may surely be looked for. Let us hope they will soon materialize.

Gerald Griffin Engaged by Metro.

GERALD GRIFFIN, known as "The Globe-trotting Actor," has been engaged for the important part of Rutherford, the candy king, in "The Sunbeam," the new Metro-Rolfe wonderplay in which Mabel Taliaferro will star. It was not decided to produce the picture until Mr. Griffin's services could be secured, as he is considered ideal for the exacting part of Rutherford.

Gerald Griffin.

Gerald Griffin was born at Hanley, Staffordshire, England, of Irish parentage. His people came to America while he was still a boy, and settled in Pittsburgh, where Gerald, as soon as he was old enough, went to work in an iron foundry. In his evenings the young man acted as super in the local stock companies, soon advancing to the position of captain of supernumeraries. He was making $7.50 a day in the foundry, but when he was offered $8 a week to take up acting as a regular profession he accepted instantly. Going to New York, he joined the company of Augustin Daly, and graduated from the role of baggage master to that of leading man with Ada Rehan. He became a stock favorite, playing all over New York in various stock companies, and after he had been for five years a member of the Proctor stock company he was the winner of an actors' popularity contest. The theater-goers were invited to choose the next play in which he should be seen, and honors were about evenly divided between "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush," "The Rivals," "The Senator" and "The Middleman." The favored player chose the first named of these. Other plays with which he was identified were "The Cricket on the Hearth," "The Shaughran," "Marse Covington" and "Old Heidelberg." He played with the Charles Hoyt farces for two years, and was for seven years with Patti Rosa.

The actor's motion picture experience includes the leading role in "Feathertop," a Gaumont production, and "Blood Will Tell," for the Serial Film Co. Mr. Griffin has been all summer at one of his homes near Maranacook, Me., and returned to New York for the sole purpose of playing Rutherford in "The Sunbeam" with Miss Taliaferro.

Club Women Listen to Film Man

The Viewpoint of the Motion Picture Men Described Before the Woman's Club of Jersey City

THE Woman's Club of Jersey City, on October 5, held its first social day of the season at their clubhouse on Fairmount Avenue. The Woman's Club is one of the oldest in the East, being now on the eve of its twenty-second birthday. It is devoted to social life and civic work and counts the best of Jersey City's womanhood in its membership. At its meeting on Thursday over four hundred members were present. Mrs. C. D. Miller, the president of the Club, and Mrs. William Maver, chairman of the Civic Department, realizing the interest which women take in the motion picture, both as a spectacle and as a problem, had arranged for a lecture on motion pictures as the chief item of the day's program. W. Stephen Bush, of the staff of The Moving Picture World, and Miss Rose Tapley, of the Vitagraph forces, had been invited to attend. Mr. Bush had been asked to give a talk on the mission of the motion picture and its present day aspects. After the transaction of some business Mrs. Maver introduced Mr. Bush.

The speaker, after thanking the club for the opportunity of presenting the motion picture man's point of view to such a distinguished assemblage, dwelt on the fact that the motion picture more than any other institution and more than any other amusement depended for its existence and prosperity on popular approval.

The substance of Mr. Bush's speech is printed here to be of service to exhibitors and readers of the Moving Picture World who may at some time or other be asked to speak before Women's Clubs, Civic Bodies or similar organizations. The points in the speech we trust will be helpful on such occasions. Mr. Bush said:

The motion picture men are as anxious to hear from you as you may be to hear from them. We recognize the fact that every audience in the motion picture theater contains a high percentage of women and children. The industry, therefore, looks to you to give us suggestions, to co-operate with us, to promote the showing of good pictures and of artistic productions and to banish evil pictures from the screen. If you have an objection to certain pictures let us know. We may not always agree with you, but we are sure to respect your wishes. If you, as a club, take a stand on certain pictures that you consider detrimental to the general welfare and offensive to decency let the exhibitor know and he will forward your protest to the producer and to the distributor. We motion picture men ask you to be fair to the screen; to recognize the good that pictures do no less than the evil which is incident to every human agency.

The screen has in the short period of its existence contributed a wonderful, aye an unparalleled share toward human progress, toward the spread of knowledge, toward a better understanding between man and man and between nation and nation; it has unlocked the treasure house of literature, the great works of the master minds of the ages heretofore accessible but to a few persons of leisure and cultivated tastes have through visualization on the screen been made the property of the millions.

Homer, Dante, Shakespeare, Cervantes, Goethe are now more than mere names to the masses of the people; the classic fiction of th world, the writings of such masters as Victor Hugo, Charles Dickens, William M. Thackeray, Alessandro Manzoni, Nathaniel Hawthorne, are revealed in the universal language of the screen to the people of the world, who otherwise might never have known of the messages that these men have for the human soul.

The screen has even visualized the subtle power and the hopeful gospel of Browning, the stern lessons of Ibsen and Zola; the pretty legends of all the nations of the world and such eternal stories as that of Joan of Arc, of Paul Revere, of William Tell, of Rienzi and others too numerous to mention.

The marvels of Nature's secret chambers, where she prepares and sustains life, where she makes beauty and glory; the pathos and humor of the animal world, the achievements of great builders and engineers, the monuments of the past, the lives and customs of unknown peoples—these are but a few of the things for which our modern civilization is indebted to the motion picture. My limited time forbids a fuller description, but I trust I have shown enough to convince you that in dealing with an institution capable of so much good you must exercise wisdom and toleration. There are evils in the industry, but they have steadily diminished as you will attest yourselves if you go to the motion picture theaters.

Do you, ladies, believe that the motion picture is as useful and important in our civilization as the press? The slightest reflection on the subject must convince you. The influence of the screen is not only much more extensive than that of the press, but it is ever so much more direct and persuasive. It is the most direct appeal to the mind; the appeal through the immediate channel of the soul. Now, we have enfranchised the press, we have given it freedom from governmental censorship, not because we think the press is other than a human institution attended with many faults and imperfections, but because we believe that the good done by the press through dissemination of knowledge and information through criticism of public affairs and public servants is greater than the incidental evil. Treat the motion picture the same way. Its good points outweigh its incidental evils a thousand times, though, of course, every bad point is so much more conspicuous that the good point.

You will never do any good with censorship. Censorship you know is the substitution of the judgment of a group of individuals for the judgment of the public. We have outgrown this musty institution. President Wilson, speaking to a delegation of film men recently at his summer home at Shadow Lawn, said that in "a free community the judgment of the public rather than the private arbitrary judgment of individuals ought to prevail." You are the censors, you the public.

Of course we would never hear of censorship were it not for the child. The American people are surcharged with humor and they would laugh censorship out of court were it not for the child. The child problem is being regulated by constructive co-operation between exhibitors and mothers and such organizations as yours. Above all things exercise a little more parental control. We cannot bring all the great masterpieces of the world down to the level of immature intelligence. Find out something about the pictures that your children are permitted to view. Therein lies the kernel of the whole situation.

The authorities and the law cannot relieve you mothers of your responsibility in this matter and you should not expect it. All over the country you will today find women co-operating with exhibitors in one or another, in providing entertainments specially suited for children upon certain days or occasions and in putting together so-called family programs which have a special appeal to the family and which can be seen by all the family. Along this path lies all really valuable and constructive work; such work as your club is anxious to do.

Augustus Phillips Joins Metro

AUGUSTUS PHILLIPS has just joined the forces of Metro Pictures Corporation. He will be seen in the support of Viola Dana, in the new Metro-Columbia feature, "The Gates of Eden," playing "Joseph," a convert to Shaker doctrines. Mr. Phillips was for five years with Edison, but since the first of the year has been a free lance, appearing in pictures for the Mirror company with Nat C. Goodwin, for the Universal and other companies. With Edison his important appearances include "The Insurgent Senator," "The Innocence of Ruth," "The Twin Brother," "Paul Revere," "The Star Spangled Banner," in which he played the composer, Francis Scott Key, "The Truth About Helen," the "What Happened to Mary" serial, and the "Winsome Winnie" series starring Gertrude McCoy. Mr. Phillips supported Miss Dana in many pictures, and was extensively featured.

Augustus Phillips.

This actor is a product of the West. He was born in Rensselaer, Indiana, but spent several years on a far-Western ranch, living the life of a cowboy. He is an enthusiastic lover of horses, and refuses to own a poor horse.

Mr. Phillips' experience on the speaking stage includes stock work in Brooklyn and New York, the Fred Belasco stock company at the Alcazar, San Francisco, and the leading male roles in "The Continental Dragoon," "Betty," "The Small Town Girl," "Miss Ananias," and "The Wolf." Mr. Phillips is married to Mildred Manning, also well-known in pictures.

MOROSCO-PALLAS SIGN HOUSE PETERS.

House Peters, the well-known motion picture "heavy," has just signed a contract in New York with Morosco-Pallas and will accordingly again appear on the Paramount program, where he has gained wide popularity in the past. Under the Famous Players and Lasky brands, Mr. Peters became established as a screen actor of unusual dramatic ability. His excellent chracterizations immediately placed him in the front ranks of filmdom's most accomplished artists; among his most notable offerings being those evidenced in "The Bride of Jenico," "The Bishop's Carriage," "Chelsea 7750" and "An Hour Before Dawn."

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

THOMAS H. INCE was made honorary member of The Film Club of Boston at its first fall meeting, held at Hotel Brunswick. This was at the suggestion of the president, who caused the earlier election of David Wark Griffith and J. Stuart Blackton, making a trio of big producers whose spectacles have been seen here by all patrons of high class pictures. "Civilization" closed a long engagement at the Tremont theater, October 7, as the theater was needed for booked plays. It is of wide interest to learn that the Pope of Rome is to have "Civilization" shown at the Vatican as a great appeal for peace. We looked in at a local theater the other day to see "Shell 44" and there we again saw George Fisher, the young actor who so reverently impersonated the Saviour in the Ince production. In this play we also had our first look at Henry B. Warner in his initial picture play for the Triangles. The play was a thriller and had some good war stuff, also a mystery around the identity of the hero and which the average theatergoer likes.

Of the 200 and more pictures seen since my last letter appeared, I would place several of them very high up in point of excellence and carrying qualities with the house. Space forbids extended comments, but do let me praise "The Shine Girl," a splendid human idea with a compelling little star and directed by William Parke, formerly of the Hub and for some time stage manager at the Castle Square theater; "The Chattel," with Sothern doing excellent work well supported; "The Payment," with Bessie Barriscale and our old friend, Charlie Miller, long-time resident and leading man in stock here and on the road; "Friday the 13th," which gave satisfaction to Tom Lawson, author of the book, and which has a romantic flavor injected; "The Combat," made big by the acting of Anita Sewart and John Robertson; "The Parson of Panamint," featuring Dustin Darnum as a red-blooded minister who was a good mixer; "The Fear of Poverty," with a good lesson well worked out; "Each Pearl a Tear," with Fannie Ward and her own pearls, the play well done, fine photography and good close-ups; "The Light of Happiness" and "Mister 44," two Metros with four exceptionally popular players, Viola Dana, May Allison, Edward Earle and Harold Lockwood, whose names carry weight; "The Honorable Friend," "The Light at Dusk" and several others well worth while. For high class comedies we still find real fun in the short reels featuring Ralph Herz, the Drews and Max Figman. We are rather sorry that Gloria has left us, but glad to hear her romance in real life is so promising.

Sam Bernfield is nicely located in one of the Hub's most up-to-date business buildings at 248 Boylston street, where he is handling the Mary Pickford pictures through the Artcraft Company, and for all New England. For some reason he at the last moment gave up the California idea and so we do not lose him. He is one of the most genial men of the exchanges here and square as a brick. This applies also to Stanley Hand, happily back at the World Film office. He has earned the good will of all with whom he deals and is now very much in harness. Some call him the "Billy Sunday" of the exchanges, and others wonder why. Mr. Bernfield tells me that he has booked the Mary Pickford pictures at most of the leading theaters in his territory and that the first one, "Less Than the Dust," will be seen at the Globe, the home of picture runs.

What a creditable piece of work Maurice Tourneur has given us in "The Velvet Paw," seen twice at the Park theater during the run. I quite agreed with the man sitting next me who said, "Well, I'm going to bring my family to see this, for it is as good as going to the Capitol and will cost me only $1.25 for all to see." It is certaintly educational for those who cannot afford to travel much. The splendid views of the National Capitol and other buildings of importance, the vistas and perspectives within the walls of the building and glimpse of a corner of Statuary Hall and the outdoor scenes leave nothing to be desired. Then, too, the political side cleverly shown and the not too intrusive romance between handsome Gail Kane and that always dependable leading man, House Peters, are not to be overlooked. One of the little bits which gave pleasure was around a postcard sent by the young Congressman to his mother in the West. As he was about to mail it a carriage drew near with President Wilson, and so he added a postscript saying, "I have just seen the President." Then the white cat is not to be overlooked, for she knew her cues seemingly well. It is these little human touches which carry with any house. The World Film producers have given us a genuine treat in this and the finale with Old Glory in action and the National Air sung by all is great. We feel sorry for Charlie Mackay to have to die so early in the game. The Exeter put this play on last week to excellent house. "The Yellow Menace" is going strong at the Boston.

It is a pleasure to anticipate some of the Biograph re-issues like "Strongheart," which Bob Edeson made so popular. What a cast in the filmed version! Here we have Henry B. Walthall in the leading role, Blanche Sweet and Alan Hale under Paramount banner now, Lionel Barrymore with the Metros, "Tony" Moreno, Gertrtude Robinson and others now scattered and much in the public eye.

The Hub is looking forward to "The Crisis" feeling secure in the Selig brand of pictures. We hear that the oldest film actor is cast for Colonel Carvel, none other than Matt Snyder, aged 82, a veteran of the Civil War, a graduate of Annapolis, and once in support of Booth and other big players of the past generation. I wonder if any of the scenes were staged at Carvel Hall, Annapolis. Poor Sam Drane, to go out of life before he could see the result of his artistic work as Lincoln! How things go in threes! Here we have recorded the death of young Page Peters, Sam Drane and now the screen has lost that intelligent leading man, Arthur Hoops, a great favorite here.

At the Globe theater, a most attractive house, we have had "The Common Law" on for two weeks, starting in with a personal appearance of Clara Kimball Young here for one day. As the play has been so widely reviewed and so favorably, there is little for me to add save that rarely have we had a more finished or beautifully photographed screen play. Though daring in title and theme, there was not a jarring note, and Hub men and women went more than once to see it. At the Park Mr. Thomas D. Soriero has put on at this writing "The Dark Silence," with this star, a World Film feature directed by the same man, Albert Capellani, now with the Lewis Selznick Company. At the Park we are having genial Tom Wise in "Blue Grass," the Paul Armstrong feature play.

Strikes me that "Around the World in Eighty Days" will be some picture when seen everywhere, yet Jules Verne when he wrote it did not dream that time would show far greater stunts than his characters perform. As October 1 was the day for its release perhaps you have already witnessed it. The Herald Film Corporation deserves credit for immortalizing the famous book.

I saw two excellent pictures at the Boston recently, "The Test," a Pathe offering showing for the first time here and with that talented young English actor, Lumsden Hare, who has been seen earlier with the World Film Company in "Love's Crucible," and "As in a Looking Glass," with the only Kitty Gordon. I failed to see either of these pictures, so had really my first glimpse of Mr. Hare, though familiar with his stage work in London and later here with eminent players. "The Test" seems a powerful play with intense moments and has a delightful ending. Jane Grey does her best film work here and was convincing all through. We liked especially the outdoor photography, disclosing a pretentious estate of a millionaire on Long Island. This ought to go with all intelligent theatergoers. A quartet of buffoons sat near me and took some of the serious scenes as comedy, thereby making nuisances of themselves.

The other attraction was "The Price of Happiness," a hackneyed title in a way, yet appropriate here, as the price paid for "Easy Street" was pretty stiff. This was the first release with Mary Boland, unless very much mistaken; anyhow I had not seen her earlier and was delighted with her work, also that of the husband, David Wall, who never once got away from his little shop atmosphere and his devotion and absolute trust in his wife. There was some artificiality, however, in the acting of Roland Bottomley, who was listed as a tango enthusiast, but who did not show any skill in the dance hall. He was a good looker and the feminine element in front seemed satisfied. One young thing directly back of me exclaimed, "Say, but I bet she'll fall for that face." There was a bit of good work done by one member of the cast which no reviewer had noted, furthermore nowhere does his name appear in the various reports seen thus far, but it was on one of the titles. I refer to Robert Paton Gibbs, making his first appearance in the pictures, and I hope not his last, tor he looks well and knows how to act. Mr. Gibbs is known to a generation of playgoers as the man who created the part of Gecko in the first production in this country of "Trilby" in 1895 and who again played it in the all-star production last season which closed here. He is at present playing in Richard Walton Tully's "The Flame," in which he has scored a success as Garvanza.

Most entertaining is "The Pretenders," a Metro offering with that finished little star, Emmy Wehlen, doing her best screen work seen here. It was cleverly done with the homely touches in first reel so dear to the hearts of the masses. When analyzed the story is not all unusual, but the development and evolution of the newly-rich family from an obscure farm to a Fifth avenue mansion is vastly amusing and a clever satire on climbers as impersonated by Maria Pettingill, whose ideas of "sassiety" were gathered from the columns of a weekly city paper finding its way into the town. It was rich and the best work apart from the star was that of the father, Silas, done by Charles Eldridge, who had a keen sense of humor and did not care to fit into the new situation a little bit much to the despair of the wife. He registered most of the laughs and scored another success. Paul Gordon is some lead in this and then we had our first film look at Edwin Holt, playing the detective. He is a local favorite, so his work was watched with interest. Emmy Wehlen in the close-up was a treat to the eye and doesn't she dance well.

"Rolling Stones," as directed by Del Henderson, has the earmarks of a Keystone offering and afforded some surprise here and there for slapstick features were plentiful and not heretofore seen in a Paramount play, still it was funny enough for the late summer season and disclosed the fact that Owen Moore is quite a comedian given a chance to show it. The breadline introduction was excellent and dainty Marguerite Courtot bowed to us while arranging the flower which spells her first name. We did not quite like to see Alan Hale chased over roofs and down fire escapes by a bunch of pursuers for we had just seen his dignified work with Pauline Frederick in "A Woman in the Case," one of the best pictures of the season and you know things suffer by contrast. Owen Moore was quite as good in this as Charley Ruggles was in the speaking play and that is saying much. The candy shop made the two young things next me exclaim, "say but what a snap those player folks had with all that candy laying round loose!"

"The light at Dusk," which made such a pronounced hit here, has been put on at two other theaters since I first saw it, the Park and the Exeter. Well, why not? For generations we have seen the old plays which made good, and worthy a revival, season after season. Why not the picture plays? True, argument arises to the effect that we are privileged to see different and oftentimes improved casts for the plays, new faces and all that sort of thing, but the casts in our best photoplays do not need to be changed, except in rare cases when certain alleged stars have been unduly featured with big players and we internally rebel and sigh for some other whom we think could do it so much better. I could name hundreds of picture plays seen the past year which could not be improved upon like "The Soul of a Woman," "My Old Dutch," "Hearts of Men," "Little Mary Sunshine," "Tongues of Men," "The Light at Dusk," "Where Are My Children?" the Metro and Famous Players pictures, etc., and we do not want them changed. The old Biograph and Essanay reissues are always worth while and worthy of "repeats" all along the line.

Poor old Falstaff would turn in his grave could he see Ralph Herz doing the linen basket act in "The Lady Killer." It is a clean steal from "The Merry Wives of Windsor," even to the masquerading of the only Herz in feminine attire before the basket act. There is a different finale, however, to the water act.

The Universal short reels on current events are interesting many people here. We saw Justice Hughes and his charming wife in Universal City, Cal., talking with the head of the corporation, Carl Laemmle, and in the distance were the splendid hills so often seen in the Universal pictures. Then we had Dorothy Rice-Pierce in an aeroplane in the air and alighting. Dorothy Rice is a daughter of the late Isaac Rice, the chess expert and millionaire, and Mrs. Rice, who started the anti-noise crusade in New York City some few years ago, who is also largely responsible for the noiseless Fourth, now enjoyed in many cities. Dorothy is one of several clever daughters and went in early for outdoor sports, like riding a motorcycle—once getting pinched for speeding. She is an artist and writer of ability and it is of interest to know that one of her best canvasses exhibited in New York was "The Moving Picture Show," depicting a crowd gazing in amazement at the incidents taking place on the screen. Another daughter, Marion, took a course at the Hub Technology and later went to work in a factory for the experience.

"The end of the Trail," seen at the Fenway, is an excellent Fox play, displaying the abilities of Mr. Farnum to good advantage, and it had plenty of punch. A man beside me exclaimed when the villian showed up alive twice, after having been sent apparently to his death, "Great Scott, that man again, hope the third time gets him sure." He was quite indignant over the author in permitting the little mother to die. This part was splendidly done by Gladys Brockwell. William Burress, too, made good as the priest. The young folks in the house took much delight in the dog sled business.

One of the critics I notice has condemned "The Victory of Conscience," but for the life of me I cannot see why. True, it does not end as the average person likes, but it at least shows the sacrifice of the hero's life in the cause of his mother land and there is great patriotism there. Lou-Tellegen, Elliott Dexter and Cleo Ridgely form a trio of players hard to beat and are a credit to the Laskys—ever. Tellegen stands alone in his art and there seems no need of dragging in his wife's name in the advance mention of this or any other picture. His impersonaton of the priest was especially fine and I for one rather liked Cleo's dancing, for it disclosed her versatility, besides she does not pose in the flesh as a professional terpsichorian. The "saint and sinner" idea was well carried out and few if any actors could so enter the spirit of the part as Tellegen does.

Another Lasky picture seen at the Fenway and Exeter was "Public Opinion," a mighty good offering, touching some vital questions like "Yaller Journalism" for instance. I would like to see it done with a strong leading woman in the part of the nurse, as Blanche Sweet is, as said before, too lackadaisical, too colorless and emotionless for such big parts and suffers by contrast with all the players in the cast. Edythe Chapman does her best work, but we do not quite fancy the apparition business. Here we again have Elliott Dexter in a strong appealing part and that prince of villains, Earle Fox. Raymond Hatton, the versatile one, is most artistic in a small part. We like the play, the lesson and the splendid settings.

Hub devotees are anticipating the coming of "The Old Folks at Home," with Sir Herbert Tree, supported by Josephine Crowell, whose work as the mother in "The Birth of a Nation," will never be forgotten. Here we also have Spottiswoode Aitken, who played the father. Coming soon is "The Whip," that strong Drury Lane melodrama, which had a run here. It is safe to expect much as Maurice Tourneur is directing it and it is a Brady-Made World film offering.

Two screen stars are playing here—Henry Kolker in "The Silent Witness," at the Plymouth, and Charlotte Greenwood, heroine of that scream, "Jane," playing in "So Long Letty," at the Shubert. Their work in the pictures has made thousands of new box office patrons.

WORK ON "THE FOOLISH VIRGIN" BEGUN.

With the first of her own company's offerings, "The Common Law," a triumphant success, Clara Kimball Young resumed her studio activity this week in the preparation of her second big production, a film version of Thomas Dixon's widely read novel, "The Foolish Virgin."

Director General Albert Capellani, whose work on "The Common Law" has made him one of the most important motion picture studio figures in America, has made rapid progress with the scenic construction for the second production. Many of the exterior scenes in which Miss Young does not appear have already been taken and it is expected that the picture will be finished and ready for release early in November. Among the noted players who will appear in important roles in "The Foolish Virgin" are Conway Tearle, who scored such a brilliant hit in the role opposite Miss Young in "The Common Law," and Paul Capellani, who has been seen in a number of Miss Young's biggest productions, and whose work in "The Common Law" in the role of Querida, attracted wide attention. Others in the cast include Catherine Proctor, William Welsh, Marie Lines, Agnes Mapes, Edward Elkas and the two well-known child players, Sheridan Tansey and Jacqueline Morhange.

SCHUYLER COLFAX HONORED.

He Is the Subject of Distinguished Tribute Paid by 30,000 Hoosiers, in His Old Home Town, South Bend, Ind.

SCHUYLER COLFAX, who has charge of the cine department of the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., and one of the most widely known men in the film world, was the recipient of unusual honors in his old home town, South Bend, Ind., during the first week of the current month. For four days Mr. Colfax and his family were guests of the State, and over 30,000 Hoosiers gathered in South Bend listened to a brief speech from the man of the hour, which has been pronounced the most human speech that ever issued from the mouth of a Hoosier, excepting only the late James Whitcomb Riley.

The occasion was the dedication of a tablet to the memory of the Hon. Schuyler Colfax, father of the subject of this article, who was Vice-President of the United States, when General Grant occupied the White House. On the sidewalk, in front of the old family home, where the present Schuyler Colfax was born, a beautiful bronze plate was placed by the Daughters of Rebekah, which order was founded by the first Schuyler Colfax as the woman's auxiliary of the Odd Fellows. The plate bears the following inscription:

> This tablet marks the home of the Hon. Schuyler Colfax, Vice-President of U. S. A., 1869 to 1875, founder of the Rebekah degree of I. O. O. F., dedicated by Schuyler Rebekah lodge, No. 39, Oct. 4, 1916.

The united bands of South Bend, of which the second Schuyler Colfax was at one time Mayor, serenaded the honored guest with no less than 135 musical instruments, after which he was introduced to the applauding throng by Judge Harmon. It was then he made the speech already referred to, which follows here:

> In my mind's eye, I see before me the dear old home where I lived and loved, worked and played and grew to man's estate.
> And I can see, looking back the years, father working at his desk (at high pressure as was his wont) with mother sitting near him, and I can see him from time to time look up and smile at her with that wonderful smile of his.
> His task finished he quickly arises from his desk and taking her in his arms says, "Nellie, work's work; but a woman's a woman, and she's the grandest gift of God to man. I thank Him reverently and often for you."
> Then I can see through the long years after his death how bravely she hid her grief within her beautiful self. My great wish is that she might be here today to see the honor you do her sweetheart, her husband.
> Dear old friends, one and all; it is hardly fitting that this should be a lengthy talk, yet I want you to know, to understand, fully and completely, how deeply sensible am I of the honor you pay my father.
> Daughters of Rebekah, from the bottom of my heart I thank you.

Later, the Rotary Club of South Bend entertained Mr. Colfax at a luncheon given in his honor.

Mr. Colfax says that the big, four-day event was the greatest of all the joys of all his busy life; for he never knew before exactly how few enemies he had nor how many friends stood ready to rally to his support, should he ever need them, to fight for him to the death.

Successful Premiere of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" at the Studebaker Theater.

The opening presentation of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," Universal's eight-reel submarine photodrama, founded on Jules Verne's well-known story of that name, was given at the Studebaker theater, this city, Monday evening, October 9. Fully as many people were massed in front of the house unable to get in, as there were lucky ticket holders.

The city press praised the filmed story without stint, dwelling more especially on the wonderful subsea scenes. The thrilling fight of a diver with an octopus, the evolutions of a hungry school of sharks, the strange beauty of undersea plant and animal life, the torpedoing of a yacht by a submarine, the uncanny burial of a dead man by his companions on the ocean floor, these and several other unusual features kept the spectators spellbound.

Earnest Williamson, one of the Williamson Bros., who made submarine photoplay possible, and who has spent two years in the making of this picture, was present. So was Carl Laemmle, who first conceived the idea of turning the Verne book into a moving picture. Both men, naturally, were extremely anxious over the attitude of the men and women who crowded to see the first public presentation of his submarine film; but their mental tension gradually relaxed as they watched the sea of faces turned towards the screen, every one of them revealing interest so profound that speech was forgotten.

As a great novelty, apart from other favorable considerations, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" promises to have a successful run at the Studebaker.

A review of this picture will appear later in this publication.

C. C. Whelan, an old-time exhibitor of this city, and recently manager of the Jefferson theater, 5050 Lake Park avenue, has been on the city sales force of Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay for several weeks past. Mr. Whelan has proved very successful in this work, as he is widely known in the trade and his representations are always backed by facts.

Mrs. R. G. Jordan, owner of the Hinsdale theater, Hinsdale, Ill., called at the Chicago office last week, and renewed her subscription for the Moving Picture World. Mrs. Jordan is a woman of intelligence who takes unusual interest in her work, and finds a great deal of pleasure in giving her patrons programs that meet their wishes. Mrs. Jordan was formerly leader of the educational department of the Woman's Club of Hinsdale, and will deliver an address in the near future before the club on the silent drama. She has managed the Hinsdale for about a year and a half, and reports that business has steadily improved. She attributes much of her success to the children's program, which she offers weekly, after selecting the pictures with the greatest care. The Hinsdale programs include the product of the General Film Co., Metro, World and Triangle. Ten cents is the usual price of admission, but five cents only is charged for children's matinees, on Saturdays.

H. A. Miller, owner of Comus theater, Milford, Ind., was also a visitor at the Chicago office last week, and he renewed his subscription for the World. The Comus was opened August 30, and is thoroughly modern in construction and equipment. The house seats 200 people, and an admission of 10 cents is charged for programs consisting of the General Film and other service. Mr. Miller reported fair business.

Wallie Decker, in charge of Paramount's publicity department in the Chicago office, states that a fashion show was held for five days last week in the Strand theater, Evansville, Ind., and that it was one of the most successful yet held by a Paramount exhibitor. R. R. Russell, the manager, succeeded in gaining the co-operation of five of the largest stores in the city while the show was on, and over 17,000 people paid for admittance. This show will be a permanent attraction at the Strand every spring and fall, Manager Russell announces.

Manager O. Lindenau, of the Ideal theater, Lemont, Ill., is remodeling his house so as to seat 600 people. The decorations will be in black and white, and the stage setting will be a Japanese garden. Manager Lindenau uses the new daylight screen and shows Paramount programs on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

W. H. Lindsly, manager of the Paramount theater, Logansport, Ind., made use of a novel advertising plan for "Hulda from Holland," when showing that picture recently. He had three dozen Holland flags strung in front of his theater, which attracted considerable attention.

It was announced last week that Alfred Hamburger had renewed his lease for the Fine Arts theater (which has been renamed the Playhouse), for a long term of years; but it was not given out that the house had been turned over to Messrs. Hardy, Perry and Sheehan, who will give dramatic productions, exclusively, until April, 1917, when Mr. Hamburger will again present moving picture programs at the house.

Another bomb outrage occurred early Saturday, October 7, in the rear of the Hillside theater, 1515 W. Sixty-ninth street, this city. Little damage was done to the theater; but the explosion created terror in the near neighborhood, the glass in many windows being broken. This explosion is also attributed to rivalry between the warring operators' unions in the city. At the recent meeting of the Illinois branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held October 6, it was announced that a truce had been declared between the warring locals, and that all differences had been settled by a board of arbitration. It will be noticed that the recent explosion took place more than twelve hours after this announcement had been made.

"The Government in Action," the one-reel political film now being exploited by Sam Spedon in Chicago, was given a successful private showing to exhibitors and representatives of the press, at the Ziegfeld theater, Monday morning, October 9. Mr. Spedon announces that fifty prints of the picture have been ordered for Chicago, where they will be shown in local theaters. President Wilson and his cabinet are shown grouped and singly in these pictures, and the sub-titles quote the words of each on important issues in the present campaign.

H. A. Sherman and John Elliott, of Sherman-Elliott, Inc., arrived in the city Saturday morning, October 7, from New York, and left for Minneapolis the following evening. They came on specially to meet Wm. Sievers, of the New Grand Central theater, St. Louis, to dispose of the rights to Missouri for "The Crisis." Mr. Sievers paid a handsome price for the Missouri rights.

Mr. Sherman informed me that the Chicago offices of "The Crisis" will be opened during the week of October 16, and the location will be announced later in the World. Mr. Sherman passed through the city on his return to New York Wednesday morning. He will start his campaign for "The Crisis," in his western territory, in about three weeks from this writing.

"The Garden of Allah" was recently completed at Selig's Los Angeles studios, and Director Colin Campbell arrived in this city Wednesday, Oct. 11, bringing the films along with him. Mr. Campbell will be engaged for some time in cutting and trimming the film, and in preparing the subtitles.

The scenic effects in "The Garden of Allah" are said to be artistically noteworthy, bearing as they do a striking Oriental atmosphere. Many hundreds of people took part in the spectacular scenes, which include an attack on a caravan by Bedouins, in the desert. A thrilling sand-storm is another of the realistic secnes in the production.

Helen Ware, Thomas Santschi, Harry Lonsdale, Eugenie Besserer, James Bradbury, and Will Machin appear in the prominent roles.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the ensuing week:

Studebaker—"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" (Universal).

Ziegfeld—E. H. Sothern and Miss Peggy Hyland in "The Chattel" (Vitagraph).

Colonial—"The Birth of a Nation" (D. W. Griffith). Full houses are the rule for the big Griffith's film, since its reopening at this house.

Samuel B. Wringer, a retired lawyer, who gives his residence as Oak Park, Ill., was arrested Thursday evening, Oct. 12, in this city, on the charge of operating a confidence game. The charge was made by Miss Alma L. Kruger, of 4700 Winthrop avenue. She informed the police that she had given up a good position as a nurse, some time ago, to become a moving picture actress under Wringer's direction. It appears that Miss Kruger was not the only victim, as Wringer invited a number of other young women to buy stock at $100 a share, in return for which they were promised instruction, salaries and dividends. When Miss Kruger demanded part of her salary, no money was forthcoming until she got out a warrant. The police say that Wringer has been operating about six months, and that nearly 20 good-looking girls have purchased shares in his company.

A special performance of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" is announced for Saturday morning, Oct. 14, at 10:30 o'clock, at the Studebaker theater for the benefit of the many boys and girls who have been unable to secure seats during the week.

B. Grenelle, with his camera crew, is now operating near Cairo, Ill., on a special industrial contract secured by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. Another camera crew under the direction of T. H. Miller is operating through central Illinois, taking moving pictures showing the result of public utility investments. Another camera crew under the direction of Wesley Smith is producing a large industrial picture in New York state, while Harry Birch with his crew is taking industrial pictures showing the grain industry in the state of Washington. Still another crew in charge of E. Linden is making a special allegorical photoplay in Chicago, while another camera crew in charge of W. B. Klingensmith is engaged in taking 10,000 feet of film showing the Virginia National Guard on the Mexican border.

Sales Manager E. H. Philippi, of the Rothacker Company, returned to Chicago Saturday, Oct. 14, after visiting the company's agencies at Rochester, Buffalo and Detroit.

Death of George F. Magie

Old-Time Film Man Passes Away in Chicago After Brief Illness—Had Many Friends in the Trade.

GEORGE F. MAGIE, prominently identified with the motion picture business of this country for the past eight years, died in a Chicago hospital at seven o'clock, Thursday evening, October 12, after a brief illness. The cause of death was given as a general breakdown. The deceased was forty-seven years old and leaves a widow and daughter. Mrs. Magie was with her husband during his illness and accompanied the remains to New York. The funeral services were held on Saturday, October 14, and interment was made at the family plot in Greenwood, Brooklyn, attended only by the immediate family of the deceased.

George F. Magie was born in Brooklyn and was educated in the schools of New York. In 1892 he went to Bordeaux, France, on a mission for the American Car and Foundry Company, in whose employ he was at that time. He remained in France for eight years, during which time he took a course in mechanical engineering and was a member of the construction staff which built the Paris and the London "tubes," as the subways in those cities are called. He was also employed in responsible positions on other railroad projects in England and the continent.

From France Mr. Magie made a trip around the world for his company, returning by way of San Francisco, and at another time he went to Australia for the same company, followed by a still further trip to France, where he remained for three years. Returning to New York he engaged in the motion picture business with Herbert Blache for the Gaumont Company and aided in exploiting the Gaumont Chronophone. He afterward assisted in the erection of the Gaumont plant at Flushing, N. Y., and later assisted Mr. Blache in the organization of the Solax Company and the building of the Solax plant at Fort Lee, N. J.

Shortly after this Mr. Magie was an important factor in the formation of the Film Supply Company, with which concern he remained until it dissolved, when he joined the Universal Company, at one time being the general manager of Universal City.

Upon leaving the Universal Company Mr. Magie went into business for himself and was engaged in the making of an important baseball picture at the time of his death. In this enterprise he was assisted materially by his brother, S. L. Magie, who has now taken up the unfinished work with the purpose of completing it as a sort of monument to the memory of the deceased.

It may be said of George Magie that few men in the motion picture business had a wider acquaintance in the trade or a better reputation or more friends than he. Few, if any, knew the business in all its branches better than he, and many, very many, will learn of his death with a sense of personal loss.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

TRIANGLE PRODUCERS RETURN TO THE COAST.

Griffith Brings "Intolerance," to Open at Clune's Auditorium —Sennett Back at Keystone—Ince at Culver City.

THIS week Messrs. Griffith, Sennett and Ince returned to Los Angeles; Ince and Sennett after a prolonged absence in the East. Mr. Ince went to New York last May with "Civilization" and Mr. Sennett went East about three months ago to make plans for a greater production of Keystone comedies. Ince and Sennett arrived on Tuesday, Oct. 3; D. W. Griffith came back on Wednesday, the 4th, from a flying trip to New York, where he had arranged for the premiere presentation of his mammoth production "Intolerance."

Mr. Griffith has returned to the coast to exhibit his big picture in Los Angeles and San Francisco. The famous Fine Arts producer was exceedingly happy and pleased with the wonderful reception given "Intolerance" by blasé New York. Said Mr. Griffith when interviewed by representatives of the press:

"I want to see what Los Angeles will say about my picture. New York thought it was wonderful. At least I judge so. Los Angeles, the home of motion pictures, will give me the final word."

Griffith is not flushed with the success of his picture. Somehow he gives you the impression that he knew it all along, that he was assured that the people would like it.

When Griffith talks about "Intolerance" and tells of the success it scored in New York it does not sound egotistical.

"Does 'Intolerance' mark the crest of the popularity of the motion pictures?" he was asked.

"No; it simply blazes the trail for something bigger."

Griffith said the same thing when "The Clansman" scored its success. He said it was but a stepping stone to something better. That something must have been "Intolerance."

"People say the pictures are on the wane."

"That is not true or logical," observed the master producer. "They turned away 4,000 people last week at the theater at which 'Intolerance' is being shown."

"Do you consider 'Intolerance' to be a far greater picture than 'The Clansman'?"

"The critics and the people say it is," he answered, and he smiled quietly as he said it.

"And what are you going to do now?"

"After 'Intolerance' is produced in Los Angeles," said Mr. Griffith, "I am going to some lonely spot where I can be all by myself and rest. I am going to do a lot of thinking and I must have rest."

"That thinking should result in something."

"I hope it does, but I cannot say now that I have plans for a new picture. I am going away to be alone where I can rest and possibly hit upon an idea for a new picture. But right now I am without a plan for the future.

"Los Angeles is certainly being advertised by 'Intolerance.' In New York the people say that Los Angeles must be a wonderful place because they know the picture was produced here, and they have seen the wonderful settings. They are an incredulous lot. They won't believe that we spend thousands of dollars to make the scenes for the pictures just as we want them.

"Mae Marsh, who is the star of 'Intolerance,' is the favorite in New York now. Everyone is talking about her. They have compared her to Sarah Bernhardt. One theatrical man sought to secure her services so that she could play a pantomime part in a production written especially for her."

"Intolerance" opens at Clune's Auditorium week beginning Monday, Oct. 16. The picture will be presented on the same elaborate scale as in New York, with a forty-piece orchestra and admission prices ranging from 25 cents to $2.00.

The production was shown in San Francisco at the Columbia theater Sunday, Oct. 8.

After exhibiting the large cities Mr. Griffith plans to put fifteen companies on the road to cover the rest of the country.

Interviewing Mack Sennett.

Mack Sennett, director general of the Keystone Film Company, was found a busy man, at his comedy plant, Tuesday afternoon, last week. Said Mr. Sennett, regarding the many rumors circulated about his company and the Triangle Film Corporation: "Keystone comedies will continue to be released by the Triangle Corporation—but unrestricted. In other words, any exhibitor can show Keystone comedies regardless of what program or pictures he may be using. This was found necesary owing to the enormous demand for Keystones by exhibitors using other than the Triangle service.

"To replace the Keystones on the regular Triangle program our organization will also make one-reel comedies in the future. So in this way the regular service to the exhibitor will not be changed.

"I am pleased to say the Triangle Corporation is in a more prosperous condition than ever and doing a greater volume of business, possibly, than any other two companies combined and I am most optimistic as to the future."

Mr. Sennett was asked about Mabel Normand's new picture and the policy of the Mabel Norman Feature Film Company conducted under his supervision.

"Miss Normand's picture," said Mr. Sennett, "will be ready for release in about ten weeks. She has been working on it for the past six or seven months and we feel quite confident as to its success. I believe it will be as good, if not better, than any of the pictures released up to the present time.

"Miss Normand has a splendidly equipped studio of her own and her company is well organized. Immediately upon the completion of her present vehicle she will begin working on another production. All of her pictures will be special feature releases, separate from any program."

Thomas H. Ince Back at Culver City.

At Culver City we found Thomas H. Ince, director general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Mr. Ince on his return from the East was warmly greeted by E. H. Allen, general manager of the plant, and hundreds of employees, including stars, players, cameramen, extras, and in fact the whole host of friends and co-workers. Mr. Ince has been away for five months, and he notes many changes at the big studio which is growing larger every day. He predicts that a new and greater era of prosperity will be here shortly in the moving picture industry.

Thomas H. Ince Greeting His Youngest Child, on His Return to Los Angeles.

That the public is not tiring of moving picture plays, but, on the other hand, is daily becoming more firmly attached to them, strikes the keynote of Ince's remarks concerning his trip. He left the coast last May, primarily to direct the national showing of his peace spectacle "Civilization," but for the past two months has been devoting his time to directorial conferences affecting the affairs of the Triangle.

"Upon my arrival in the West," said Ince, shortly after his return, "I heard many rumors, absurd as they could possibly be, about this business. They even said that the industry is on the toboggan. I canot say too emphatically that they are absolutely without foundation. This talk about theaters closing all over the country is foolish, too. Of course the cry of the public is for good plays, and always will be, but that is what we are trying every day to supply. As for ourselves, we will continue to produce better and bigger pictures, our aim being to give the people the best that money and brains can create."

Among the many new things noted by the big producer at the studio was the mammoth laboratory which this week was opened for active work. This place has been in course of construction for the past six months, and its completion marks the end of building activities for some little time. It is occupied by a crew of forty-one men, working under the supervision of Al Brandt. In the future all Ince plays will be finished here. This building embraces two large dark rooms, one drying room, one projection room, one chemical room, one negative examining room, two negative cutting rooms, four positive examining rooms, four printing rooms, and one experimental room, in addition to the offices and other spaces such as refrigerating plant, distilled water plant, and so on. The capacity of the dark rooms is one hundred thousand feet of negative and three hundred thousand feet of positive per week. In the chemical storage room a full carload of drugs will be kept on hand at all times. This is quite an improvement for the big plant.

Early this week Manager E. H. Allen gave a party for Ince players and a few friends, at the big Barnum & Bailey circus which was playing here. The party motored to the lot, where a feast was provided by the cooks in the mess tent. Everybody ate circus food just like the boys that drive stakes and sew canvas. The unique feed was a real treat to the stars, and in fact everybody present enjoyed it. After dinner, the folks took a trip through the big tents, behind the scenes, and in the animal training quarters. Here Enid Markey, one of the popular Ince stars, was allowed to hold a young leopard cub.

Although Miss Markey has done some thrilling acts for the screen, she never worked with animals and it took some little persuading to get her to hold the young cat. However, she was brave and came out alive, but she said that she did not want to do "animal stuff" every day. Ince arrived home just a few days too late to attend this unique party, which broke up after the whole show had been seen.

EXHIBITOR INAUGURATES MORNING MATINEES.

Palace Theater Manager Starts Children's Special Shows During Morning Hours with Great Success.

Dr. H. B. Breckwedel, manager of the new Palace theater on Seventh street, has started a new showing of pictures. He has gone after the children's vote, and he apparently is to be unanimously elected by the kiddies as the best exhibitor in town. He is arranging special programs for them, to be shown at these morning matinees.

His first matinee of the early morning will be featured by "Rumpelstiltskin," a most wonderful fairy tale, as told by the cameras, if we remember, at Thomas H. Ince's plant. It was directed by Raymond B. West, if we are right. The program will have a Fatty and Mabel comedy, and another fun picture with Charlie Murray. Pictures will not be all for the children, for Dr. Breckwedel will engage an artist to appear, either a photoplayer, juvenile actor, or story teller, and the children will have a regular picnic with whoever comes to the theater to see them.

It is the idea that mothers will come downtown Saturday morning and leave their children at the Palace to see this clean and picked show while they do a little running around and shopping. The first week's experiment shows that the chances are very good for a permanent program of this kind. This manager is always trying something new that will make his house more popular than ever, and at the same time increase business.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

William Pigott, former scenario editor with the American at Santa Barbara, was a visitor to the Moving Picture World office this week. Mr. Pigott is now free lancing and says that he is well satisfied with the way the many companies are buying stories. Many other scenarioists report the same conditions, due perhaps to the realization by the companies that stories are somewhat vital to the production of good pictures. Almost every editor that we have interviewed in the past few weeks desires stories from regular writers. Slowly but surely the great multitude of outside people who know nothing of the real film business are cutting down their labors and devoting their time to more profitable work. There is not an editor today in any studio who desires scenarios from outside persons who have not sold any stories. Recognized authors and other well-known writers are encouraged.

Mr. Pigott has just placed a five-reeler with Fox, which is being directed by Frank Lloyd, with William Farnum featured. It is called "The Higher Conflict" and is a full-dress story, Farnum having been changed from the rough western to the society brand. It is a self-sacrificing story, yet full of the red blooded material that the public demands of Farnum.

Up in Santa Barbara the Flying A people have formed a new club. Edward M. Langley was elected president of the Goodfellowship Association. P. G. Lynch was unanimously re-elected treasurer and the other officers elected were R. S. Stebbins, vice-president; Abe Molen, secretary.

The newly elected officers will name a committee of five to serve with the officers as an executive committee.

There will be a special meeting next week to form a committee to arrange for the season's entertainment.

Manager Charles Eyton, of the Morosco studio, announced this week that an amalgamation of the Pallas, Morosco, Famous Players, and Lasky firms had been put through.

Mr. Eyton received a telegram from Frank Garbutt, manager of the Pallas Pictures concern, who has been in New York for the past few weeks, stating that the amalgamation proceedings, which have been hanging fire for several months, have just been completed.

By the arrangement just consummated an interchange of actors, of scenario writers and even of studio and laboratory facilities, is made possible, thus increasing efficiency and convenience in the producing of pictures.

Manager Hoyt, of the Liberty theater in Long Beach, reports that C. Gardner Sullivan, author of "The Wolf Woman," "Civilization" and "Peggy," and Monte Katterjohn, one of the Ince authors, who wrote the "Captive God," "The Jungle Child" and a number of other successes, were in a party accompanying Miss Louise Glaum to this city recently from Culver City. Miss Glaum making two appearances at the Liberty theater. The film stars were brought over from the studio by automobile.

The Liberty theater was decorated with spider webs to heighten the effect and lend additional color to the vampire atmosphere of "The Wolf Woman," as played by Miss Glaum.

We all have heard of "The Power of the Press" but for once the power of the press has failed, or rather the newspapermen have been stumped. Last week several hundred of them, members of the Southern California Editorial Association, visited Universal City as guests of H. O. Davis, head of the big plant. They rode camels, drove sheep and cattle, frolicked before the camera, and even went forth into the lion's den, but not to shave the lion's beard. One stunt they did was to pull a tug of war with Charlie, the big elephant.

Universal Zoo's Big Elephant, Proving That He Has More Pull Than Southern California Editorial Association.

We got a picture of the tug and it was funny. First the men pulled old Charlie nearly off his feet, then he took a step—and the power of the press was dragged in the dust for thirty feet.

Douglas Fairbanks is in town having arrived after an exciting trip through the northern plains, where he and a party went gunning for all kinds of seasonable game. Doug said they scared some owls and that was about all, but that in the national reserve they were chased by bears and could not shoot the large number of deer they saw because of the reservation laws. Anyway he enjoyed the big outdoors for some time and looks hale and hearty and ready to start shooting at the Fine Arts studio. He left New York in a hurry when they told him to get ready for a picture. He said he did not want to work in the East, and that they could find him in California if they wanted to use him in any of the scenes. It is not known just what he will do, but it can be depended upon to be a cracking good picture if he plays in it.

At the Hollywood Kalem studio Ham and Bud, with their leading woman, Ethel Teare, are working industriously on a funny picture, the name of which is "The Donkey Did It." We got a snapshot of Ham and Ethel with their "limousine" going around the corner of the boulevard. This is a scream and ought to prove a good release. Ham is the driver and Ethel is his sweetheart. Ham wears his usual mask in this picture. Recently he had to have a picture made with two faces on it, one himself, and the other Ham, because when Ham sent out his pictures to those who wrote for them, invariably they wrote back requesting one of "Ham." His makeup is so deep.

A company of players, headed by Vivian Martin, the popular screen star, has just arrived at the famous Empire Mine in Grass Valley, California, and is busily engaged in the filming of several underground scenes. Some of these scenes are being photographed six thousand feet below the ground under extreme difficulties. This is the first time in the history of motion pictures that scenes were ever filmed at this depth and some wonderful effects are expected for Miss Martin's new photoplay "The Right Direction."

Opening the season for municipal dances and giving added impetus to these affairs by elaborate plans for the initial event, the city mothers, headed by City Mother Aletha Gilbert, Mrs. Bret Harte Harris and our own Anita King, gave a municipal grand ball at Columbus Auditorium.

Prominent clubwomen assisted the city mothers in welcoming the youth of the city. Mayor Woodman and a number of city officials were present.

The grand march, the opening feature of the ball, was led by Chief of Police Butler and petite Fannie Ward, of the Lasky studio. Film folk who attended were: Marie Doro, Wallace Reid, Cleo Ridgely, Jack Dean, Elliott Dexter, Dorothy Davenport, Kathlyn Williams, Dustin Farnum, Myrtle Stedman, Winnifred Kingston, William Desmond, Enid Markey, Louise Glaum, Clara Williams, Dorothy Dalton, Frank Keenan, William S. Hart, Charles Ray, Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Fay Tincher, Al Christie, Billie Rhodes, Betty Compson, Harry Ham, Niel Burns, Myrtle Gonzalez, Clarke Irvine, Ella Hall, Ruth Stonehouse, Carter de Haven, Franklin Farnham. Mr. and Mrs. William E. Wing, Kenneth A. O'Hara, and Kenneth McGaffey.

The municipal dances will be a regular Saturday night event for the rest of the winter.

A new Triangle K-B picture in which Thomas H. Ince will present Frank Keenan as star, was begun this week, at the Culver City studios, under the direction of Walter Edwards. It is a story of a miserly old mill owner and his conversion to the cause of charity and optimism by the sweetness of a little child. The latter role will be handled by Thelma Salter, who has won fame by her many portrayals in Ince productions. Others in the cast are Gertrude Claire and Fanny Midgley. The Keenan vehicle was written by C. Gardner Sullivan, the well-known scenario author who has turned out the majority of Ince's successes on the screen.

Jane Bernoudy has named her car. Out of four hundred replies to her appeal to her film friends, she has selected the name "Ambrose." Nobody knows just why Miss Jane selected this name. Even Jane herself offers no bona fide reason.

Walter Stradling, better known as the trans-continental photographer, is back again. Stradling was sent East to photograph at the Eastern studio, worked there a few days, was sent back to the Western studio, came into the studio and was handed a telegram to report immediately in New York. Arriving there he worked a month photographing Mary Pickford and has now returned once again to the Lasky fold.

House Peters, the well-known and popular star, has arrived in town. He came West from New York, stopping over in Chicago, where he visited the film men. He also stopped over in San Francisco, where he visited many old time friends. Mr. Peters will start work next week at the Morosco studio on either a light comedy, or else a good, straight drama. The girl who will play opposite has not as yet been selected. Mr. Peters reports the film business as being good along the line with the many exhibitors he saw, and says that he is glad to be back in the West again. It will be remembered that House Peters played the leading role in "The Great Divide" produced by Edgar Lewis and released as a big feature by Lubin.

It sounds like a "Preparedness" picture, the Christie comedy now in production by Directors Al Christie and Horace Daveys, its title being "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp." It merely refers, however, to the species hobo, and Billie Rhodes and Harry Ham are living in makeups of this variety at present.

In Long Beach the first day Jackie Saunders started keeping house, Bruce Smith, Balboa's clever character actor, made up as a "bo" and presented himself at Jackie's kitchen door. He had learned before hand, by collusion with Eddie Saunders, Jackie's brother, that the fair "housewife" was in her kitchen baking strawberry pies. Jackie answered Bruce's insistent knock and listened sympathetically to his story. Then she invited him into the kitchen, prepared a big "feed" for him with her own fair hands, gave him a dollar and one of Eddie's best suits of clothes.

On a recent Saturday evening a large number of photoplay and business men of Hollywood gathered together at the Hotel Hollywood to enjoy a light feast and dance, and to talk over plans for a club to be known as the Hollywood Players' Club. Although Wallace Reid, always in the limelight when it comes to organizing, or disorganizing clubs, was scheduled to act as chairman, he had gone to San Francisco to attend some sort of a theater opening under the auspices of the Paramount, so James Young, one of Lasky's directors, took the stand and pictured a wonderfully beautiful club. He even built a pool and had the tired and dusty players swimming in the mirage of water. The kitchen and lemonade buffet were all fitted up, and we could even see a colored servant bringing us a hearty evening meal—in the new clubhouse, which is to cost about fifty thousand dollars. Many people spoke, all favorably. H. M. Horkheimer told a few hard business facts in connection with leasing, building, and loaning. It is not so easy as it seems to be. We have seen the old Photoplayers Club tossed upon the rocks and later when we helped try to organize a new and similar club, we saw the interest flare up at the start, then sadly watched it smolder into ruin. But were it possible, the present combination ought to put a good club through to success, and we need one. Here's one that is willing to bruise his shoulder putting it against the wheel of progress.

Down South at San Diego the Pollard players have built a small temporary studio near their own big plant. This is used for scenes in a south sea island for the picture "Miss Jackie of the Navy," which features Margarita Fischer as the pretty heroine. In this episode she handles a giant python and believe us, it is quite some job. A few exciting scenes were made last week in the native village where the handsome captain, played by Jack Mower, is about to be lowered into the python's pit. The girl, disguised as a bluejacket, climbs a tree and throws her ammunition into the sacrificial fire, the exploding cartridges putting the natives to flight. Some good scenes were made in this temporary studio. The python was from the studio of the E. & R. Jungle Film Co.

At Redlands, the Empress theater, under the management of Messrs. Stewart and Ehrmann, is being overhauled and improved. The outside of the big house has been repainted and decorated, while the interior has been tinted and ornamented and improved by the addition of a disinfecting system and a new Photoplayer. Two new projection machines were also installed. These live managers, who run the Grand theater, have closed it as a picture house, and will improve it before reopening it as a vaudeville theater.

Recently "Big Bill" Russell, the popular Flying "A" leading man, entertained a couple of score of prominent persons at his ranch in Santa Barbara, then toted them off to the hills to enjoy a barbecue in the open. Among the guests were V. R. Day, representing the Essanay Company; Mabel Condon, of the Exchange, which bears her name, and many players from the American studio, including E. A. Kaufmann, Rena Rogers, Vola Smith, Albert Russell, Charlotte Burton, Frank Borzage, Harvey Clark, George Ahern, Clarence Kolb, May Cloy, and George Sargent. Russell is always a most gracious host and certainly can turn out a "party" fit for the best of us.

Carlyle Robinson, former publicity man for Horsley, accompanied the troupe.

Before becoming a big director Otto used to be one of the most superb, if you care to call it that, of villains. Anyway he was a good character, and this bit of acting makes him homesick for the old days.

Coming "Grant" Episodes

Kalem Working at Top Speed on New Series—Praise from Exchange Managers.

FULL speed ahead is the word on Kalem's new series "Grant, Police Reporter," which makes its bow on October 20 with the release of "The Code Letter." The finishing touches have already been put to the second episode "The Missing Heiress," while Kalem has announced the plans for many of the releases to follow in this one reel series featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby.

Friday, October 27, is the release date for "The Missing Heiress." Work has now started on the third episode, "The Pencil Clue," which is scheduled to be issued on Friday, November 3. In this episode of Robert Welles Ritchie's stories, George Larkin, as Tommy Grant, police reporter of The Chronicle, unravels a puzzling murder mystery. The "thrill scene" that comes as the climax of the single reeler shows Dare-Devil Larkin leaping from the first story window of a building into the tonneau of a speeding automobile.

The week following, on November 10, Kalem lists "The Rogue's Pawn," as the "Grant" episode. In this release Ollie Kirkby is given one of the strongest roles afforded her in the series. Larkin, in the title role, undertakes to expose a powerful gambling clique that is using the police commissioner's own daughter as a shield for its operations. A spectacular fire comes as the climax, while one of the many thrilling scenes shows Larkin climbing hand over hand across a wide areaway on a telephone wire which breaks under his weight and catapults him into the flames.

Robert Ellis, William McKey, G. Chira, Arthur Albertson and Mary Taylor-Ross are others who will be seen in the action of these episodes of the Kalem series. The productions are being made at the Jacksonville studio under the direction of Robert Ellis.

Pre-release showings of the first episode, "The Code Letter," are being given to exhibitors throughout the country at all the General Film exchanges and many letters of praise have been received at the Kalem offices. A sample of the opinions received is the following from Manager G. T. Ames, of the Philadelphia office of General Film, following the receipt there of a print of the second episode, which is also being rushed to the exchanges for pre-release showings.

"Yesterday we received the second episode of 'Grant, Police Reporter,'" he writes, "and it certainly did not suffer by comparison with the first episode. We showed the picture to the Moving Picture Editor of one of the daily papers here, and he was very enthusiastic. The consensus of opinion of all that have seen either one or both of the first two episodes is that there has never been so much action, so many thrills, and such really good stuff packed into one reel before. The newspaper representative was frank in saying that there was enough meat in 'The Missing Heiress' to make a five-reel feature."

Fox Picture Presented

"A Daughter of the Gods" Given Its Initial Showing at Lyric Theater, New York.

THE first performance of William Fox's spectacular motion picture fantasy, "A Daughter of the Gods," took place Tuesday evening, October 17, at the Lyric theater, New York. Second in interest only to the production itself is the accompanying score by Robert Hood Bowers, who will direct an augmented orchestra for the occasion.

The William Fox Company of players went to Jamaica, West Indies, in August, 1915. The exteriors, marines, waterfalls, pageantry and battles of "A Daughter of the Gods" were staged in and around Kingston. The picture was finally completed in September of the following year and measures ten reels or 10,000 feet in length. Motion picture experts are of the opinion that "A Daughter of the Gods" is one of the most costly and most numerously peopled pictures yet created, the cost of the production having reached to seven figures and employed no less than 20,000 persons all told.

Probably no other player than Miss Kellermann could have met the requirements as the leading role called for. Astonishing virtuosity is said to be displayed by her as an actress, dancer, swimmer, diver, fencer and acrobat. Other principals in the excellent company include Stuart Holmes, Jane and Katherine Lee, who have the parts of little babies of the sea, and others. The mermaids were all played by American girl swimmers, to say nothing of the thousands of natives used in the mob and battle scenes with which the picture abounds in picturesque confusion.

"A Daughter of the Gods" will be presented at the Lyric theater twice daily including Sunday beginning at 2.15 and 8.15. A critical review will be printed in the Moving Picture World next week.

"THE GARDEN OF ALLAH" COMPLETED.

"The production of 'The Garden of Allah' has been completed by Colin Campbell," said Mr. Selig in a recent interview. "The drama faithfully follows the book in every detail and the production is the most elaborate and expensive we have ever made. Many scenes not easy to obtain were filmed, many extra properties were used, not counting camels, Arabian horses, equipment for caravans and costumes for several thousand people. 'The Garden of Allah' presents some very fine acting. Miss Helen Ware, particularly, arises to emotional heights rarely seen on the stage or screen. She is ably supported by Thomas Santschi, as 'Boris,' Eugenie Besserer, Harry Lonsdale, James Bradbury as 'The Sand Diviner' and others. The street scenes in the oasis of the Sahara desert are faithful and the bazaars, mosques and street scenes are massive.

Helen Ware Ready for a Scene for "The Garden of Allah."

"A desert sandstorm will be found full of startling realism. The wind arises and sand comes in sheets, caravans scurry for shelter, tents are blown down, in fact it is a most vivid picture. An attack by Bedouins on a caravan makes an exciting spectacle.

"I have no hesitancy in praising 'The Garden of Allah' and am firm in the belief that it will find instant admiration and popularity."

SIX NEW BRANCHES FOR INTERNATIONAL.

J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the International, has arranged for opening branches in the following additional cities: Cleveland and Cincinnati, Ohio; Seattle, Wash., which will cover all of the Northwest; Kansas City, Des Moines and Omaha. The International already has branches of the New York headquarters in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, St. Louis, Los Angeles and San Francisco. In addition it has agencies in Buffalo, Albany, New Orleans, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Detroit and Salt Lake City.

The opening of two offices in Ohio and the Northwest by the International is of particular importance and means that the concern is to make a determined fight for business in these districts.

GIACHINO BUILDING ANOTHER THEATER.

A. Giachino of Cobalt, Ont., is building another moving picture theater there. Mr. Giachino is an experienced picture man, and is probably the oldest man in point of connection with the industry in Northern Ontario. He opened the Bijou in Cobalt in March, 1910, and has operated this house with considerable success. In 1914 the New Grand was opened by Mr. Giachino. This house is also in Cobalt. The screen in the new house which Mr. Giachino is building will be situated in the front at the back of the main entrance.

J. A. KENT'S FATHER DIES.

The many friends of J. A. Kent, general press representative of the Great Northern Film Company, will be sorry to hear of the death of Dr. I. Kent, his father, who died in Budapest, Hungary, on August 28. Mr. Kent, because of the existing war conditions, has only heard of his loss now.

Week's Work in Fox Studios

"Romeo and Juliet" Overshadows All Other Activities, But There Are Others in the Making.

ALTHOUGH several photoplays are in work in William Fox's Eastern and Western studios, interest centers now in the coming production of "Romeo and Juliet," with Theda Bara in the role of the fair maid of Verona. The Fox picturization of the great play is magnificent in settings and lavish in costumes, but accurate throughout. Weeks were spent in arranging for precision in technical detail, before J. Gordon Edwards, in charge of the direction, talked, coatless, to the entire cast, preparatory to the screening.

The film will be exhibited to the public for the first time, at the Academy of Music. The picture version of the tragic love story requires seventy minutes in unreeling. Harry Hilliard will play opposite Miss Bara. Others in the cast are Glen White, Walter Law, John Webb Dillion, Einar Linden, Elwin Eaton, Edwin Holt, Alice Gale, Victory Bateman, Helen Tracy, and Jane and Katherine Lee. Miss Gale has the role of the nurse—a part which she had for many years in the legitimate. Victory Bateman, as Lady Montague, appeared with Edwin Booth during several seasons.

Einar Linden, who portrays Paris, made his stage debut at the age of eleven in the title role of "Little Eyolf," Ibsen's famous drama. The Norwegian poet was present at the first performance and summoned the youthful Linden to his box to congratulate him personally on his fine interpretation of Eyolf.

On the Pacific Coast, George Walsh began another photoplay, most of which will be photographed on an island. The story is brimming with adventure, and a strong cast has been engaged for the picture, among others, Herschel Mayall, William Burress, Harry De Vere and William Clifford. Otis Turner is directing.

Mr. De Vere has just returned to Fox films. After nearly twenty years of stage experience he entered the silent drama, and eventually joined William Fox's forces. His first picture was "Battle of Hearts." Then followed "The Man from Bitter Roots," "The Beast," and "The End of the Trail."

Gladys Brockwell has been selected as the star of Oscar C. Apfel's tenth production for the Fox films, and William Farnum will soon begin work in a photoplay with a silk-hat role. Mr. Farnum is probably reaching for his cane and gloves at this moment.

Nearer home, John Reinhard will play the "heavy" in June Caprice's new picture for William Fox. Mr. Reinhard defies tradition. He is bound that he will depict a sculptor villain for the camera, without resorting once to the aid of a Windsor tie. Mr. Reinhard is a New Yorker born, and went to Public School No. 67 before high school and college. This school is just two doors from the Fox offices in Forty-sixth street.

In the original production of "Madame Sherry," Mr. Reinhard sang the famous "Every Little Movement." Now he puts theory into practice by acting in the movies.

GAUMONT TO RELEASE NEW SINGLE REEL.

With the initial issue of "Mutual Tours Around the World" November 7, the Gaumont Company offers exhibitors the fourth weekly single-reel release from its studios. The new pictures will be primarily scenic in their nature, but there will also be characteristic views of foreign industries, methods and customs. This now fills the one gap in the list of Gaumont single-reels, and firmly intrenches the company in a field that it is making deservedly popular through the excellence of its pictures.

"Mutual Tours" will regard as its own province any country other than the United States and its possessions, these being pictured in the entertaining "See America First" series. Through its affiliations with the Gaumont parent house in Paris and its branches all over the world, the American company can offer foreign pictures that an exhibitor could not hope to secure elsewhere.

The Gaumont Company is satisfying the demand for single reels that are more than "fillers." The natural desire of people to visit the out-of-the-way, picturesque places of the world as well as the more renowned cities will be gratified by "Mutual Tours." This weekly release will give not only views such as a traveler would glimpse, but also more intimate pictures of national life. If the authoritative and interesting articles about foreign lands found in the National Geographical Magazine could be transferred directly to the screen, they would represent the aim of the Gaumont Company in selecting and editing subjects for "Mutual Tours Around the World."

Good Report From Kleine Exchanges

General Manager Smith Swings Around the Circuit—Sees General Business Picking Up.

M. E. SMITH, general manager of the George Kleine Exchanges, now distributing the product of Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay studios, has returned to Chicago from a swing around the circuit of exchanges and reports large business being done on "Gloria's Romance," the motion picture novel featuring Billie Burke.

"Some exceptional advertising ideas are being developed by the exchange managers and the exhibitors," remarked Mr. Smith in speaking of his trip. "Down in Ohio I found one good sized town in which Billie Burke is on everyone's tongue. Inquiry developed the fact that the enterprising theater manager, acting upon a suggestion of the exchange manager in that territory, has provided a number of grocery stores in the vicinity of his theater with paper bags of the usual grocery store variety. On each bag is printed 'Trade at Blank's Grocery and don't forget to see Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance" every Tuesday night at the Pastime theater.' Every housewife for blocks around is reminded of the feature attraction daily, and the result is plainly evident at the theater, which is playing to capacity business on the nights that Billie Burke is presented on the screen.

"The handling of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay feature attractions are bringing many new customers to the exchanges for the Burke novel," continued Mr. Smith. "In one territory alone, more than a hundred new patrons have been secured and of this number nearly half are using the 'Gloria's Romance' picture to complete their evening's program, running Billie Burke as a companion feature to one of the five-reelers from the regular Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service."

Speaking of business as a whole in the territories recently visited by him, Mr. Smith declared that beyond doubt the fall season had opened up with more promise of success than any similar period in late years. He finds the people in the whole territory more prosperous than they have been for some time and exhibitors everywhere are reporting good business, an increased interest in pictures and a demand on the part of their patrons for the very best in the way of entertainment.

ARTCRAFT DISTRIBUTING PLANS.

Hoyt G. Morrow, formerly representative of the General Film Company in New Orleans, has been appointed manager of the Dallas exchange of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, distributing Mary Pickford productions. Mr. Morrow succeeds John J. Rotchford, who has resigned to devote himself exclusively to enterprises which were forming when the Artcraft organization was effected. As he is thoroughly familiar with Texas, southern Oklahoma and Louisiana west of the Mississippi through his experience in New Orleans, Mr. Morrow is expected to keep several prints of "Less Than the Dust" busy in that section after November 6, the date Mary Pickford has announced for the release of her first Artcraft production.

The New York exchange has already outgrown the original quarters assigned to the manager, Arthur G. Whyte, and Charles S. Goetz, his assistant, and they are now installed in spacious new offices on the seventh floor of the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue.

Al. Lichtman, general manager for Artcraft, spent several days last week in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh with B. C. Cunningham and Samuel Plame, the respective exchange managers. Mr. Lichtman reported that the bookings of these branches were a sure indication that the state of Pennsylvania would contribute its share to the formidable list of exhibitors that all the managers in the United States and Canada are constantly increasing.

MARINO OPENS PORTOLA THEATER.

On October 4 the Portola theater in F street, Eureka, Cal., was opened. It is owned by Pietro Marino, a talented violinist. It is reputed that the Portola is the first of a chain of high-class moving picture theaters to be opened by Mr. Marino on the Pacific Coast. The Portola is a pretty theater, and is up-to-date in its construction. Joseph Curcio is manager of the house.

CHAS. E. WESTON'S ADDRESS WANTED.

The moving picture department of the 101 Ranch, Inc., Bliss, Okla., desire the present address of Charles E. Weston. He was with Mr. Ince some time since when the 101 Ranch outfit was in California in moving picture work.

Stars with General Film

A Long List of Screen Favorites Will Appear in Releases of the Week of October 23.

GENERAL Film Service calls especial attention of exhibitors to the notable stars appearing in its program October 23-28 inclusive. There are twenty-eight in all, as follows: Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley, Shirley Moore, Huntley Gordon, Mary Pickford, Richard Travers, Marguerite Clayton, "Ham" and "Bud," Ethel Teare, Henry Murdock, Mae Marsh, Harry Myers, Rosemary Theby, Marin Sais, True Boardman, Babe Hardy, Raymond, McKee, Kate Price, Marie Empress, George Larkin, Ollie Kirkby, "Pokes" and "Jabbs," Richard Travers, John Cossar, Helen Gibson, Frances Benedict, Thomas Commerford, Tom Mix, Victoria Forde.

It will be noticed that there are two new stars featured in General Film Service during the week referred to, in the presence of Kate Price and Raymond McKee, the former widely known for her intelligent, clever work with Vitagraph and Triangle, and the latter for his excellent exhibitions with Edison. These names ought to add strength to General Film Service. They are featured in Vim comedies and will be seen in General Film Service hereafter each week.

"Out of the Shadows," a two-part Selig drama, will be the first picture shown. "Paradise for a Day" will round out this picture to two reels, in which Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley are featured. This will be followed by a Vitagraph one-reel comedy, "Trouble for Four," with Shirley Moore and Huntley Gordon as fun makers. All the news of the world will then be pictorially shown by the Selig-Tribune and the day's program will be closed with "Friends," a Biograph reissue with charming Mary Pickford, heroine.

The next day Essanay's two-act drama, "Borrowed Sunshine," with Richard Travers and Marguerite Clayton, will head the list. Then will come a Kalem comedy in one reel, "The Bogus Booking Agents," presenting "Ham" and "Bud," Ethel Teare and Henry Murdock. "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch," a drama in two parts, reissued by Biograph, with Mae Marsh in the title role, will be the final picture for that day.

Essanay leads the list again Wednesday, October 25, when the fable of "The Throbbing Genius of a Tank Who Was Encouraged by Her Folks Who Were Prominent," a one-reel comedy based on a George Ade story, is shown. This will be followed by a Vim comedy, "Green Eyes," featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby. Then will come the twelfth episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco," "The Harvest of Gold," with Marin Sais and True Boardman, as heroine and hero.

Selig-Tribune pictorial news will have the spot light Thursday, October 26, aided by a Vim comedy, "A Maid to Order," with the new stars, Kate Price and Raymond McKee, supporting Vim's widely known comedian, Babe Hardy.

A Knickerbocker Star Feature, "The Chorus Girl and the Kid," a two-part drama, heads the list for Friday, October 27. In this, talented Marie Empress is featured. Then will be shown "The Missing Heiress," the second episode of Kalem's new series, "Grant, Police Reporter," in which George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby have the stellar roles. A Vitagraph comedy, "Betty's Affair," and a Vim one-reel comedy, "The Frame-Up," with "Pokes" and "Jabbs," will close the program for that day.

Saturday, October 28, will be ushered in with "It Never Could Happen," an Essanay comedy-drama in three acts, with Richard Travers, John Cossar, Frances Benedict, Thomas Commerford and Anna Mae Walthal. "The Lost Messenger," an episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen Series," with Helen Gibson in the titular role, will be the next picture shown, and the week's program will be closed with a one-act drama, "A Close Call," featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde.

STEVE BARTON ENGAGED BY BALSHOFER.

Steve Barton, perhaps the best known assistant director in the Los Angeles film colony, has been engaged by Fred J. Balshofer, general manager of the Metro-Yorke Film Corporation. Barton first came West with Fred J. Balshofer seven years ago, in the primitive days of the New York Motion Picture Company, when they were producing the Bison and 101 Miller Brothers' Ranch pictures. It was at this time that he was first introduced to motion pictures. Until recently he was prominently affiliated with Mack Sennett's Keystone studio. Barton will start work on the Metro-Yorke picturization of Harold MacGrath's "Pidgin Island" which presents Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the stellar roles. The latter co-starring team are still at work on "Big Tremaine" based on the novel of the same name by Marie Van Vorst, soon to be released on the Metro program.

Regent of Albany Opens

S. Suckno, Well-Known Film Man, Has One of the Finest Picture Houses in the Capital District.

ONE of the events in the moving picture world of the capital district occurred on Saturday, October 14, when the new Regent theater was opened at Albany. The Regent theater is justly considered one of the finest and best equipped houses in the capital district, combining in a happy degree the qualities of elegance and comfort. The opening was a great success in every way, the house being crowded to capacity from the very moment the doors were thrown open to the public. A gala performance was presented, accompanied by first class music. The new Regent has the atmosphere of success and prosperity.

S. Suckno.

S. Suckno, the owner of the new Regent, is one of the oldest film men in the business. He is the owner of two of Albany's well-known theaters, the Whiteway theater, 156 South Pearl street, and the Parkway, 453 Madison avenue. Mr. Suckno is widely known among exhibitors in the capital district, having been connected in a prominent way with exhibitors organizations both in the city of Albany and in the State generally. He has opened special booking offices at 156 South Pearl street, where he will represent some of the best feature companies. He has made splendid connections with prominent concerns. The field in and around the capital district is most promising to the booker who has good offerings back of him.

Kohn Wants the Best Productions

President of Consolidated Film Corporation Says Nothing Is Too Big for Him to Handle.

MARION H. KOHN has been in New York these last few days looking over the field and in quest of big productions—better than program features, with which to keep his great exchanges in California busy. Mr. Kohn is the president of the Consolidated Film Corporation, of 114-16 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, and with a branch at Los Angeles. Quitting the business of an importer and exporter some four or five years ago, Mr. Kohn associated himself with the hustling young film magnate, Sol Lesser, and then became the responsible manager of the Pacific Coast branch of Warner's Features. Association with P. P. Craft and the Apex led to his buying this latter concern and finally he entered into business for himself, founding the Consolidated Company, with the financial support of leading Los Angeles bankers.

NEW COMPANY MAKING CARTOONS FOR PATHE NEWS.

The Pathe News has recently been publishing some very clever political cartoons which have aroused considerable interest.

These cartoons were made under the Bray patents by the Cartoon Film Service, Inc., a new corporation, which has in its employ some of the ablest cartoonists in the country. The Pathe News will be regularly supplied with the product of their studios. At a meeting last week Watson D. Robinson was elected president, John C. Terry, secretary, and Henry D. Bailey, treasurer of the new company.

Mr. Terry, who came here from the west to direct and manage Cartoon Film Service, is a "native son." He has been a newspaper cartoonist for sixteen years, during which time he has seen service on the San Francisco Call, the San Francisco Examiner and the St. Paul Dispatch. As far back as 1912 he was making animated cartoons.

Universal Program Releases

Delightful Variety of Entertaining Subjects—Features, Serials and Fillers for the Week of October 23.

THE Black Sheep of the Family," one of the strongest plays yet put out under the Red Feather brand, will be released on October 23 in five reels. Francelia Billington and Gilmore Hammond play two of the leading roles while Jack Holt, Mina Jeffreys, Hector V. Sarno, Mrs. Jay Hunt, Norton Hammond, and Paul Byron also are featured in prominent parts. "The Black Sheep of the Family" was written by Frank Wiltermood and was produced by Jay Hunt.

During the week of October 23 the eleventh two-reel episode of "Liberty," the Universal Special serial, will be released with Marie Walcamp, Jack Holt and Eddie Polo in the principal roles. The tenth episode is entitled "Human Targets" and was written and produced by Jacques Jaccard. Supporting the principals are L. M. Wells, Bertram Grassby, Neal Hart, Maude Emory and G. Raymond Nye.

On October 23 "The Bar Fly," a Nestor comedy, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean, will be released. This Nestor was produced by L. W. Chaudet from the scenario by V. Kirtley.

The following day, October 24, the Universal Special, "Society Hypocrites," a three-reel society drama featuring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, will be released. "Society Hypocrites" was written by Willis and Woods and was produced by Ben Wilson. Charley Perley, Helen Leslie, Joseph Girard, F. MacQuarrie, Mina Cunard, Edward Cecil and William Welsh also play important roles in the production. The title of the Special one-reel Victor which will also be released on this date has not yet been announced.

On October 25th "A Rural Romance," a two-reel L-Ko comedy, will be released. Lucille, the girl who creates all the fun, is played by Lucille Dutton, and Bill Bevan, Dick Smith and J. Russell Powell also take important parts in the fun stampede. On the same day Professor Ditmar's educational "An Alligator Hunt," is released. Number 43 of the Universal Animated Weekly with views of President Wilson and Candidate Hughes also is scheduled for its first presentation on this date. The title of the Special Laemmle which will be released in one reel on October 25 has not yet been announced.

"The Narrow Creed," a two-reel human interest drama, will be released under the Big U brand on October 26th, with Murdock MacQuarrie and Edyth Sterling in the principal roles. W. L. Rodgers, Arthur Moon and Mrs. Jay Hunt also play prominent parts. "The Narrow Creed" was produced by Jay Hunt from the scenario by Ben Cohn. On the same day, October 26, Windsor McCay and his trained Jersey skeeters, will buzz around the screen. McCay is engaged by a professor to depict the ruthless ravages of the Jersey cow kidnappers and later a visit is made to a moving picture studio where McCay sees his scientific film run off on the screen. The title of the Special Imp one-reel release due to be released on this date has not yet been decided.

Thomas Jefferson and Irene Hunt are featured on October 27 in the two-reel Imp detective drama, "Through Solid Walls," produced by Walter Morton from the story by Tarleton Winchester, which was scenarioized by E. J. Clauson. Marc Fenton, Peggy Custer, Jay Belasco and Lou Short play important roles in the production. On the same day Kingsley Benedict and Gretchen Lederer play the principal roles in "A Price On His Head," a Big U drama produced by Ben Horning from the story by Robert Davis which was scenarioized by Bess Meredyth. E. P. Evers and Tom Webber play important roles in the production. The day's program closes with Ernest Shields in the Victor comedy, "The Plumber's Waterloo," written and produced by R. M. Donaldson from the story by Harry Depp. Harry Depp plays the role of Michael J. Madden and Andrew Arbuckle and Eileen Sedgwick also take part in the funmaking.

On October 28 Jack Holt and Lucille Younge co-star in "The Better Man," a Bison two-reel drama of the woods which was written by Ben Cohn and produced by Jay Hunt. Jack Nelson and Albert MacQuarrie appear in support of the principals. On the same day William Franey and Gale Henry lead the cast in "A Crooked Mixup," a Joker comedy in one reel produced by W. W. Beaudine from the story by W. M. Baker which was scenarioized by Charles J. Wilson, Jr. Milburn Moranti, Charles Conklin and Lillian Peacock also assist in the crook comedy. There will be no Laemmle release on this date.

The last day of the week, Sunday, October 29, sees the release of "The Moving Finger," a one-reel Rex drama featuring Lee Hill and Maud George. "The Moving Finger" was produced by Director Donald McDonald from the story by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude. Paul Byron and E. P. Evers appear in support of the principals. On the same day Harry Depp plays the leading role in the Victor comedy, "The Burglar." He is supported by Yvette Mitchell, Ernie Shields, Marjorie Wilson, O. C. Jackson and Miss Gunn.

The Universal wishes to call the attention of exhibitors to the fact that episode nine of "Liberty" is "Trapped" and not "A Daughter of Mars." Episode ten will be called "The Human Targets." Special posters and window cards will be issued with "The Black Sheep of the Family."

Joe Lee, State Right Buyers' Agent

ONE of the best known and shrewdest of the new generation of film men is Joe Lee. Comparatively young in years, he has placed long and honorable experience of the business to his credit. He is considered one of the finest judges in the country of the moneymaking properties of motion pictures, and has come to be looked upon as an almost infallible guide to box office values.

Joe. F. Lee.

At 1476 Broadway, New York, he has established a purchasing and advisory service which should prove of invaluable aid to out-of-town buyers. State right buying and distributing is his specialty. For the past four years he has acted as New York representative of Louis B. Mayer, who controls the New England rights of "The Birth of a Nation"; "Cabiria," etc.

Mr. Lee also acts as Advisory Buyer for the American Feature Film Company, Boston, Mass.; the Consolidated Feature Film Company, San Francisco, Cal.; the Master Producers Photoplay Company of New England; and others.

Joe is the possessor of a personality which is inadequately described as popular. His honesty is proverbial—an asset of incalculable value in the motion picture business.

THREE SELIGS ON GENERAL FILM.

Kathlyn Williams, supported by an all-star cast, including Eugenie Besserer, Guy Oliver, Charles West and Vivian Reed, appears in General Film Company's regular service on Monday, November 13, in the three-reel Diamond Special, "The Temptation of Adam." The drama was directed by Al Green and those who have seen the production assert that it is unusual in point of action, photography and plot. Kathlyn Williams appears at her best enacting as she does the role of a loyal wife who finally saves her husband from prison.

"As Ye Sow" is a multiple reel feature play released in General Film Service on Monday, November 6. It is founded upon the Biblical saying, "As ye sow so shall ye reap." There is a very capable cast and a strong story.

On Saturday, November 11, "When Cupid Slipped," a Western comedy written and produced by Victoria Forde, will be released through General Film Service. "The Girl Detective" is a gripping one-reel production released Saturday, November 18, in General Film Service.

PARAMOUNT THEATER AT LEMONT, ILL., REMODELED.

The Ideal Theater, of Lemont, Ill., is being remodeled by the manager, O. Lindenau, the entire front of the theater being changed and the seating capacity enlarged. The management also put in a new screen and reopened the theater on October 11. The theater is owned by Mr. Lindenau and William J. Nelson.

Mutual Offerings

Schedule for Week of October 23 Contains Varied Subjects—William Russell Featured.

WILLIAM RUSSELL, Helene Rosson and Franklin Ritchie, stars of the American Film Corporation, head a list characterized by strikingly produced and splendidly acted film drama and scenic and current news material of great variety and informative value to the motion picture public in the Mutual's output for the week of October 23, and Miss Rosson and Mr. Ritchie are scheduled for appearance in "The Undertow," a drama of modern business, on Monday. Mr. Russell will appear on Thursday of the same week in "The Love Hermit."

In "The Love Hermit" William Russell is supported by Charlotte Burton and a cast composed of Queenie Rosson, William Stowell, Harry Von Meter, and Ashton Dearholt. It is compelling because it is human.

In it William Russell plays the role of a young stockbroker, Tom Weston, who falls in love with the daughter of his employer. She seems to return his affection. When the father discovers the two in each others arms, the girl denounces the young man, and he is deprived of his position. In spite of adversities he makes a great name and by a manipulation of the stock market brings his former employer to the verge of ruin. Bitter at the girl he had once loved, he yet cannot efface her charms from his mind. Driven to despair, Marie (Miss Burton) goes to see Tom, not so much to plead for her father as to plead for forgiveness for her own folly of the past. Gradually, under the girl's influence, Tom's heart is softened, and they are happy again.

"The Undertow," featuring Helene Rosson and Franklin Ritchie, is the retitle for "Esther of the People," a five-part feature produced under the able direction of Frank Thorne. This is a stirring story from the pen of Rosalie Ashton, and all the more impressive since it takes a subject with which every one is familiar for its theme. In support of the leading characters are Orral Humphrey, Harry Von Meter, George Ahern, Charles Newton and Josephine Taylor.

The drama output of shorter reel length consists of "Professor Jeremy's Experiment," a deliciously humorous drama featuring Orral Humphrey produced by the American Company, "The Folly of Fear," a drama featuring Edwin August, and "At Twelve o'clock."

"The Folly of Gear" gives ample evidence of the careful handling of Edwin August, who, in the leading role of La Rue, a young novelist, partakes in the actions of the picture as well. Iva Shepard plays the role of Grace Ellis, a girl who refuses to marry La Rue but later does him a great favor in restoring to him the wife whom he later weds and then believes guilty of a great crime. William Bailey plays the role of an unscrupulous adventurer. Ruth Blair is cast for the wife.

"At Twelve o'Clock" is a drama of love and intrigue which is marked by exceptional photography and unusual setting.

The comedy releases number some very amusing Cubs, one American Beauty, aside from Harry Palmer's animated cartoon which forms half of the split reel "See America First" from the Gaumont Company.

"Lovers and Lunatics," "Dad's Experiment" and "When Cubs Were Trumps" are the Cub one reelers of the week.

"He Died and He Didn't," a two-reel comedy featuring Rube Miller and Ben Turpin, in which the curly-headed little ingenue Lillian Hamilton also plays an important part, is the regular Vogue Sunday release.

"Mutual Weekly No. 95" and the split reel "See America First" and Kartoon Komic appear as usual on Wednesday. "Reel Life," the Mutual's magazine in film goes out on Sunday. All are produced by the Gaumont Company.

"BLIND JUSTICE" AT SING SING.

"Blind Justice," the film made by Benjamin Christie, the Danish actor-manager, was shown to the prisoners of Sing Sing Prison on Saturday night, October 7. The unusual audience was very responsive to the dramatic story unfolded upon the screen. Thomas Mott Osborne, the warden, had invited a number of New Yorkers to witness the exhibition and W. D. McGuire, the Executive Secretary of the National Board of Review, was invited to speak. He made a few remarks and then Mr. Thompson, President of the Mutual Welfare League, introduced Mr. Christie to the audience. Both were greeted with applause.

WESTERN FILM MAN VISITS THE EAST.

Frank Bailey, a film man well known throughout the intermountain West and the owner of the American Theater, Butte, Mont., is spending a few days in New York.

Barnett Parker, Thanhouser Leading Man

BARNETT PARKER, who is Astorbilt in "Prudence, the Pirate," the Thanhouser feature starring Gladys Hulette, released through the Pathe exchanges, has been successful in every branch of the dramatic profession.

Mr. Parker has supported George Alexander, Marie Tempest, Billie Burke and Lou Tellegen in comedies and dramas. He had an important part in "Hobson's Choice," the successful Scotch play. He has been in musical comedy and in motion pictures.

Barnett Parker.

When Lew Fields starred himself in "Step This Way" he searched for an actor who could sing and also who could play a "silly ass" Englishman. He wanted a man who would put on a characterization a little different from the stereotyped comedy Englishman and he chose Mr. Parker.

Mr. Parker was under contract with Edwin Thanhouser, but arrangements were made so that Mr. Parker worked at New Rochelle in "Prudence, the Pirate" in the day time—except on matinee days—and appeared in New York in "Step This Way" in the evening.

Mr. Parker thrived on the hard work, which proved that he really wasn't the weakling he portrayed in musical comedy.

In "Prudence, the Pirate" Mr. Parker had a chance to be a hero. He always longed to be a hero, for he was sick and tired of playing silly asses. In the first part of Miss Hulette's picture he is a weak, young, society favorite, but he proves to have red blood in him when he swims to the burning pirate ship, rescues Miss Hulette from the cabin in which she has been locked and helps her and "Panthus," her puppy, to reach a buoy and safety.

Mr. Parker's first motion picture was the Thanhouser play, "The Flight of the Duchess."

He was born in Yorshire, England, in 1887, and was educated in that country.

EVELYN FARISS JOINS INTERNATIONAL.

The most recent addition to the International's roster of screen stars is Miss Evelyn Farris, a young Southern girl of exquisite beauty and charm. Miss Fariss will appear in several of the episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax," in support of Harry Fox and Grace Darling.

Although she is but eighteen years old, Miss Fariss has won an enviable reputation as a screen actress as well as in the spoken drama. She was born in Chattanooga, Tenn., and was educated at private schools in Louisville, Ky., where she afterward lived, finishing at the Sweetwater Academy, at Sweetwater, Tenn.

Three years ago, Miss Fariss came to New York, and two weeks after her arrival made her stage debut as a member of the cast of "High Jinks." She was so successful that she was placed under contract by Oliver Morosco and appeared in "Pretty Mrs. Smith."

Miss Fariss then went into motion pictures, playing prominent parts in "Jim, the Penman," "The Masqueraders," "The Morals of Marcus," and "The Little Beggar." Just prior to joining the International organization, she appeared as co-star with Thomas Wise in "The Magic Bottle."

Miss Fariss is a member of the famous Seaton family, which has long been identified with public life south of the Mason and Dixon line. The family came into possession of a land grant in Maryland and Virginia in the seventeenth century, the old Seaton homestead being a landmark near Richmond, Va. Like all Southern girls, Miss Fariss is a clever horsewoman. She is considered one of the most talented young screen actresses in the country.

Paramount Plans

Schedules Many Subjects for Release in October and November—Some Good Program Fillers.

FULFILLING the promise that the Paramount Pictures Corporation made to its thousands of exhibitors, that they would make their third year particularly notable in the history of the motion picture industry and give them the greatest productions this corporation has ever distributed, announcement was made this week of the eighteen forthcoming releases that will be issued by them during October and November, in which their leading stars appear.

The greatest variety of stars and productions are included in this list, and in their announcement Paramount has impressed upon its exhibitors that the playing stars in these productions are paying stars, for the list includes: Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Mae Murray, Marie Doro, Blanche Sweet, Lenore Ulrich, Vivian Martin, Fannie Ward, Marguerite Courtot, Ann Pennington, Louise Huff, Anita King, Myrtle Stedman, Cleo Ridgely, Owen Moore, Jack Pickford, Thomas Meighan, Sessue Hayakawa, Dustin Farnum, Wallace Reid and others.

The forthcoming releases announced are:

Oct.	2	Lasky	The Lash	Marie Doro
"	5	Lasky	The Storm	Blanche Sweet
"	9	Pallas	The Intrigue	Lenore Ulrich
"	12	Morosco	Her Father's Son	Vivian Martin
"	16	Lasky	Witchcraft	Fannie Ward
"	19	Famous Players	The Kiss	Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot
"	23	Famous Players	The Rainbow Princess	Ann Pennington
"	26	Famous Players	Seventeen	Louise Huff and Jack Pickford
"	30	Famous Players	Miss George Washington	Marguerite Clark
Nov.	2	Lasky	The Heir to the Hoorah	Meighan and King
"	6	Lasky	The Soul of Kuri San	Hayakawa and Stedman
"	9	Pallas	A Son of Erin	Dustin Farnum
"	13	Lasky	Unprotected	Blanche Sweet
"	16	Lasky	The Years of the Locust	Fannie Ward
"	20	Famous Players	The Heir Apparent	Mae Murray
"	23	Lasky	The Yellow Pawn	Ridgely and Reid
"	27	Famous Players	Charlotte Corday	Pauline Frederick
"	30	Famous Players	Martyrdom of Philip Strong	All Star Cast

These announcements coming simultaneously with the establishment of exhibitors' aids departments in each of the Paramount exchanges and the contest that is being waged for approximately $10,000 in prizes for the most efficient exchange, the latter being based principally on efficient co-operation rendered the exhibitors, managers of Paramount theaters throughout the country are naturally particularly enthusiastic.

During the same two months, there will be released by Paramount ten additional editions of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, ten Paramount-Bray Cartoons, ten Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures and five Paramount comedies. All these single reel features are making big hits throughout the country and have aided materially in helping the exhibitor to fill out his program without the necessity of going into the open market to do so. These "little features" are booked regularly through the exchanges and are big helps toward the up-building of a theater's business for permanency.

The editors of the Paramount pictographs have formulated great plans for these two months, and each release of the magazine-on-the-screen will have four leading subjects, all of which themselves would make a single reel picture. The editors have gathered a wonderful amount of attractive material, and have cut each of their features to approximately 250 feet, so that in putting four little features together in a single reel release, they have a real single reeler that is bringing to them from all quarters nothing but the highest words of praise.

At the Bray studios, where the Paramount cartoons are manufactured, great things are happening. Additions are being made to their staff of writers and cartoonists and future releases from this source promise to be of a higher caliber than before.

Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, who conducts the weekly trips-around-the-world for Paramount, has arranged a particularly interesting series of ten trips for these two months, beginning with "A Scotch-Irish Reel," after which some intimate glimpses will be given "In Old Ireland." From thence there will be a jump taken to the "Southern Italy" climate and from there the travelers go to "The Island of Capri." The following trip is a wonderful one, for it takes the travelers to Vesuvius and gives them pictures of this greatest of volcanoes in eruption. From there the trip leads to "In Classic Greece" and "In Modern Athens." In the latter pictures are shown the Olympian Games in Athens and a Marathon Day in Greece. After these visits are made to "Modern Egypt" and "The Real Streets of Cairo" and "Round About the Pyramids." These travel pictures have been conceded everywhere as being the best that have been released.

The five comedies that will be released by Paramount during this period are side splitting affairs with real plots and real actors. Already these comedies have been highly praised by exhibitors.

Decidedly big things are being planned by Paramount for their exhibitors for the entire winter season, announcements of which will be forthcoming in the near future.

Molter Off to War

Picture Man to Join American Ambulance Corps Somewhere in France.

BENNETT A. MOLTER, who has been actively engaged in the work of the production of moving pictures since the infancy of the industry, left for France on October 14 to join the American Volunteer Ambulance Corps. He plans to serve six months in the service of the wounded and then intends to finish out a year's enlistment in the Volunteer Aviation Corps. Mr. Molter says that he is going to the front in order to get first-hand knowledge of the present war, which he says he will use in the production of war films.

Bennett A. Molter.

Mr. Molter has had a varied career in motion pictures. His first position of importance in the business was that of scenario editor for the Pathe West Coast studios. Then he joined James Young Deer, one of the first independent producers. Later Mr. Molter went with the Kalem Company and added acting to his list of accomplishments. With Kalem he played opposite Ruth Roland. From Kalem Mr. Molter joined the Universal forces, and became assistant to Francis Ford, and assisted in the production of several Civil War dramas, prominent among which were "The Battle of Bull Run," "Taps" and "At Shiloh." He also assisted in the production of the eight-reeler, "The Campbells Are Coming." Mr. Molter's term of service with Universal included work with Henry McRae and Cleo Madison. At Universal City Mr. Molter became assistant to Henry Otto, and assisted in the making of "Undine," "Half a Rogue," and "The Man from No-where."

When Mr. Otto was signed up by Metro Mr. Molter went with him. For Metro they made "The River of Romance" and "Mister 44." Mr. Molter terminated his connection with Mr. Otto a short time ago, and is at present assisting W. Christy Cabanné.

"THE CHAPERONE" FOR NOVEMBER 20.

All scenes have been completed for "The Chaperone," five-act Essanay feature and the play will be released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service on November 20th.

The final scenes were photographed at Green Bay, Wis., where Edna Mayo, Eugene O'Brien and Sydney Ainsworth participated in the doubtful fun of tipping over canoes and falling into water just above the freezing point. At one point when they showed a reluctance to accomplish the trick, Director Arthur Berthelet caught one end of a canoe, just out of camera range, and hurled its occupants into the water, getting the desired effect.

"The Chaperone" is taken from the stage hit of Maxine Elliot. Edna Mayo appears in the title role with Eugene O'Brien as the chief support. Sydney Ainsworth takes the heavy lead.

Two New Triangles

A Fine Arts Drama and a Kay-Bee Comedy for the Week of November 5th.

DOROTHY GISH and Bessie Barriscale are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for the week of November 5th. Miss Gish appears in a Fine Arts production recently produced under the direction of George Siegmann. Miss Barriscale is the heroine of a rollicking Irish comedy written especially for her by C. Gardner Sullivan and produced at the Kay-Bee studios under the direction of Charles Miller and Thomas H. Ince.

Scene from "Atta Boy's Last Race" (Triangle).

In "Atta Boy's Last Race" Miss Gish has been provided with a part which gives her the opportunity to exert her well-known charm amid the picturesque surroundings of the race track. The daughter of a noted horseman who has been driven to ruin and suicide, the girl has inherited a love of horses, but her father's tragedy has given her a horror of the betting ring. She falls in love with the owner of Napier Boy, but frankly admits her hatred of his profession. The young horseowner agrees to retire from the turf after one last "killing." His plans are apprehended by others, however, and an exciting series of complications arise, in which his fortunes tremble perilously in the balance, but are finally retrieved by the quick-witted girl and the fleet-footed Napier Boy.

In "A Corner in Colleens," Bessie Barriscale romps through five reels of laughing drama of the school of Lover and Boucicault. The eldest of four orphaned colleens—known as the prettiest in Ireland—the heroine of this story is an incorrigible tomboy. She and her sisters live with the good-hearted widow Fahy in a cottage owned by a rich young American. The widow has never paid any rent, declaring that the owner should be satisfied to have the colleens honor the place by their presence. When the American arrives on the scene things begin to happen and before they realize it, the young folks are caught up in the exciting events of the Dublin rebellion, the rich young American, in his efforts to shield the leader of the colleens, runs counter to the strong arm of the British army, and finds himself in danger of facing a firing-squad. The British commander relents, however, when he discovers the true status of affairs, and the thrilling little comedy is brought to a happy conclusion by the marriage of the pretty hoyden and her young landlord from over the seas. Charles Ray and Margery Wilson render Miss Barriscale excellent support.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of October 15 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Witchcraft" at the Strand.

FANNIE WARD was seen on the screen at the Strand Theatre during the week of October 15 in a new intense and unusual photo-drama entitled "Witchcraft," written by Dr. R. Ralston Reed. The scenes of the play are laid in the New England Colonies in 1692-3, during which time hundreds of innocent people suffered persecution from the horrible delusion of witchcraft. Miss Ward enacts the role of Suzette, a Hugenot refugee, who, after the death of her old and miserly husband, is accused of witchcraft and sentenced to be hanged. How Richard Wayne, a young captain in love with Suzette, obtains her pardon from the Governor and saves her life at the last moment is one of the numerous thrilling scenes of the play. "Witchcraft" is the photo-drama which won the prize contest held at Columbia University.

Other interesting film attractions on the program were the Strand Zoological Series, Florence Rose's Fashions, Scenic and Educational Studies, a new comedy, and the Strand Topical Review, containing the latest American and European news pictures.

A musical program of exceptional brilliance was presented, consisting of vocal and instrumental solos by well known artists, including Grace Hoffman, Mabel Biddoe, and Albert Weiferholdt, and of selections by the concert orchestra under the direction of Carl Edouarde.

"Fifty-Fifty" at the Rialto.

With Norma Talmadge in "Fifty-Fifty" as its feature picture and the first instalment of "War As It Really Is" for an added attraction, The Rialto offered a bill of exceptional strength for the week beginning Sunday, October 15. The war pictures were taken by Donald C. Thomson and they show actual warfare in the front line trenches.

"Fifty-Fifty," pre-released by the Triangle Studios for this theater, tells a story of studio life in New York's Latin quarter. Miss Talmadge plays the part of a girl whose love for Bohemian frolics leads her into such difficulties that even after her marriage she has a pathetic fight against the influence of the gaily artificial surroundings in which her husband met her.

The Rialto Orchestra, under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld, rendered the overture to "The Meistersinger." The star of the soloists was Mme. Elise Kutschera, who sang "Elsa's Dream," from "Lohengrin." S. Fidelman rendered Kreisler's "Caprice Viennoise" on the violin.

As another novelty Mr. Rothapfel presented a "petit ballet" in which six classical dancers interpreted Johann Strauss' entrancing "Blue Danube Waltz."

Educational and scenic pictures, the news weekly, and a Keystone comedy completed the program.

"Her Father's Son" at the Broadway.

The attraction at the Broadway theater for the week was the Morosco-Paramount photoplay, "Her Father's Son," with Vivian Martin in the stellar role.

A poor father and a rich uncle, who has no son, cause the tangle. Frances' father, dying, pledges her to masquerade as a boy. Under her uncle's roof with his daughter Betty as a chum, the deception becomes very amusingly difficult. Many are the hazards and strange carryings-on of this whimsical young "man." How hard it was for a little girl, alone, to dare a long journey and bravely face unknown relatives in this boyish masquerade is wonderfully told by the dainty Miss Martin in this remarkable story.

Four new Triangle pictures were shown at the Eighty-first Street theater during the week beginning October 16. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, the feature attraction was Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, in a powerful picture version of "The Old Folks at Home." A Triangle-Keystone comedy was also presented. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday William S. Hart was seen in an unusually good picture, "The Return of 'Draw' Egan," which depicts on the screen a western bad man's regeneration through love. The comedy feature was a new Triangle-Keystone production. A first-class vaudeville bill was offered with the pictures.

SECRETARY BRANDT HAS AN HEIR.

William Brandt, the energetic and efficient executive secretary of the organized Brooklyn exhibitors, is receiving the congratulations of his friends in the trade as well as of the patrons of his New Albany Theater over the arrival on Sunday, October 1, of a ten-pound son and heir. Mrs. Brandt, who is as well known to the New Albanian patrons as is her husband, is reported to be doing finely; and the same report comes as to the son. The Moving Picture World adds its congratulations to those of the other friends of Mr. and Mrs. Brandt.

STORK VISITS THE HOME OF EDWARD JOSE.

On Friday, October 6th, the wife of Edward Jose, the famous motion picture director who has produced many notable pictures for the Pathe program, presented him with a lusty nine pound daughter. The baby Jose will be called Helene after Mr. Jose's mother. This is Mr. Jose's first child, and mother and daughter are reported to be doing well.

PARAMOUNT SALESMAN RESIGNS TO ENTER OTHER BUSINESS.

David Levitte, for the past two years a salesman of Paramount Pictures, connected with the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City, has resigned his position and will enter another business.

A TALE OF THE WILDERNESS (Biograph), Oct. 9.—A Biograph reissue made six years ago that depends for its interest mostly on spectacular scenes of a fight between Indians and pioneers. Edwin August and Charles Mayo are seen in the roles of brothers, outlaws, to the younger of whom the sight of a band of domestic folk is irristible. He takes up with the whites, and the elder brother leads the charge against the stockade.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 81, 1916 (Selig), Oct. 9.—Non-magnetic exploring ship arrives in San Francisco from polar regions; pigs in city limits of Philadelphia dispossessed; John Borden and rescue ship, Great Bear, arrive at Nome, Alaska; San Francisco society women form club for bowling on the green; John Aitken, in Peugeot, wins Astor Cup Race at Sheepshead Bay Speedway; reverential funeral services held in London for Germans who fell with Zeppelin; aeroplane being tested for use by U. S. turns turtle, New York; Philadelphia society turns out for Horse Show at Bryn Mawr, Pa.; interned German ships are convoyed from Norfolk to Philadelphia by U. S. battleships.

BILLY'S MELODRAMA (Vitagraph), Oct. 9.—A rather slow-moving comedy reel that, nevertheless, contains an amount of subtle humor. Billy writes a melodrama, and as he writes his plot is visualized. Scarcely nothing that usually happens to a hero is left out of Billy's manuscript, but just when Billy has the hero, the villain and the heroine struggling in an aeroplane high up in the sky, he wakes up. William Dangman, William Lytell, Jr., Shirley Moore and Winthrop Mandell are in the cast.

THE LOVE MAGNET (Kalem), Oct. 10.—A lively Ham and Bud comedy. Bud obtains a magnet that attracts beautiful young women. Ham, jealous, steals a magnet, but his attracts old maids. Soon things get too warm for the two and they flee to the sea, followed by girls and old maids. Even the mermaids succumb to the magnets. Ethel Teare is also in the cast. Reviewed on page 224, in the issue of October 14.

ANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL, NO. 17 (Essanay), Oct. 11.—A split-reel, embracing burlesqued topical subjects, a serious cartoon, a funny Dreamy Dud cartoon, and North American scenic. Both Presidential candidates are pictured. Outlandish, but laughable, news items are screened. The scenery is beautiful and excellently photographed.

THEIR INSTALLMENT FURNITURE (Vim), Oct. 11.—A fair number of the Vim Feature Comedies, in which Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby are featured. Novel settings help this reel. Wife helps herself to Hubby's $200 without his knowledge. Next day he makes out checks and overdraws his account. Considerable fun is in evidence when the installment collectors come to take away the furniture during the course of a party because Hubby's checks are "N. G." The party is broken up.

THE CANDY TRAIL (Vim), Oct. 12.—A funny reel, with Plump and Runt doing good knockabout work. There are more laughs in this reel than there have been in many of the recent Plump and Runt releases. When the girl goes to the city with Runt, the sport, Plump, her faithful village sweetheart, is sick at heart. However, he follows her to the city, and finds her via the "candy trail." Plump and Runt are assisted by Florence McLaughlin.

THE BATTERED BRIDEGROOM (Kalem), Oct. 13.—Ivy Close is featured in this one-reel comedy, whose cast includes Henry Murdoch, Arthur Albertson, William McKey and Mary Taylor-Ross. Fast action is seen when Ivy is rushed into a motorboat by Henry, and several stunts are performed by Arthur. The story is of the girl who doesn't want to marry the old man her parents have chosen. Reviewed in the issue of October 14, page 224.

WATCH YOUR WATCH (Vim), Oct. 13.—A good number of the Pokes and Jabbs comedies. Fast knockabout work keeps the spectator chuckling. Pokes has a hard time getting rid of the watch he took from the professor, believing it to be his. The outcome is that Pokes, Jabbs and the crook hired by Pokes to steal the watch Pokes stole are all three led to jail. Pokes and Jabbs (Robert Burns and Walter Stull) are supported by Melba Andrews, Ethel Burton, Harry Naughton and Frank Hanson.

THE MAYOR'S FALL FROM GRACE (Vitagraph), Oct. 13.—An entertaining comedy number. The story is real humorous. In the cast are George Kunkel, Jack Schaeffer and Al Mower. The manner in which the mayor gets out of an embarrassing and compromising situation in the police station is sure to get a laugh. The butler is the goat, and no one but the mayor's wife knows that it was the mayor who, tipsy, was put to bed in a friend's house by a new butler, who believed the mayor to be the head of the house.

TO SAVE THE SPECIAL (Kalem), Oct. 14.—One of the best and most thrilling of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series. Helen Gibson stops a runaway team by riding up to them on another horse and jumping to the back of one of the runaways. These scenes were especially well photographed, and run for quite a number of feet. The film is exciting. Reviewed in the issue of October 14, page 224.

A MISTAKE IN RUSTLERS (Selig), Oct. 14.—A passable "Western" with some excellent riding by Tom Mix and others. A cattle rustler is jealous when Vicky, Tom's sweetheart, gives the latter a handkerchief. The rustler steals the handkerchief and ties it around a stolen calf's legs. The owner accuses Tom of trying to steal the calf. The sheriff and his posse surround Tom's cabin, but Vicky rides up and tells the sheriff that she has discovered the real miscreant. Tom Mix is supported by Victoria Forde, Sid Jordan and Leo Maloney.

THE BETTER INSTINCT (Knickerbocker Star Feature), Oct. 6.—Jackie Saunders is featured in this two-reel drama of the underworld. The film is not as wholesome as it might be, for one of its characters is a representative of white slavers, and two others are procurers. The plot is dramatically strong, and revolves around the happening of two girls, one of whom is weak, and the other, who is saved from a life of crime and shame by her "better instinct." The cast: Jackie Saunders, Frank Mayo, Lillian West, Daniel Gilfeather, Madeline Woods and Richard Johnson.

HIS LITTLE WIFE (Essanay), Oct. 7.—A rather pleasing story of romance is told in this three-reel production, although the action drags at times. On the screen is narrated the story of a poor girl who is the ward of a village cobbler. She is given a position in the store of the most influential man in town. His son falls in love with and marries her. They move to another town, but their funds run low and they decide to go back to their former homes. The girl is heartbroken and is saved from suicide by her husband's father, who relents. Harry Beaumont, Gertrude Clover, Thomas Commerford, Florence Oberle, Frank Dayton and Frankie Raymond form the cast.

PUEBLO LEGEND (Biograph), Oct. 9.—A charming two-reel reissue featuring Mary Pickford and Wilfred Lucas. A review, printed on page 62, of the issue of October 7, says "short-reel subjects of the calibre of this one are unusual today. The picture makes live the ancient Pueblo legend of the Great Brother's search for the Sky Stone of Happiness." Many of the scenes were taken in the Pueblo village of Isleta, New Mexico. The battle scenes are especially good.

CONVERGING PATHS (Selig), Oct. 9.—A rather insipid two-reel drama. The production does not measure up to present-day standards, and was evidently made some years ago. The cast is composed of Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley, Leo Pierson and Eugenie Forde. The story is that of a country girl who comes to the city and of a youth who sinks lower and lower into slum life. Their paths converge in a rescue mission, where the girl has been driven by want, and where the youth has been driven by fear of capture. He is converted.

MONEY TO BURN (Essanay), Oct. 10.—A quaint strain of humor running through the story makes this two-reel subject entertaining. Romance is found, too, and the picture pleases. The screened story tells of a small-town Southern major who believes the Civil War is still on. He is saving his fortune for the Confederate cause. Working in a hotel, the major's niece meets a young salesman. They fall in love. Another man wants the girl because of her supposed wealth. He steals the money from its hiding place. It is discovered to be Confederate money. The cast includes Lillian Drew, John Lorenz, Edmund F. Cobb and Arthur Bates.

THE REFORMATION OF DOG HOLE (Kalem), Oct. 11.—No. 10 of "The Girl from 'Frisco" series. This is an interesting two-reel episode of the series by Robert Welles Ritchie. Barbara Brent brings about the reformation of the wild Western town mostly by her ability to manipulate cards. Marin Sais does some spectacular riding in this number. True Boardman has an exciting fight. Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee, Steve Murphy and Jack Wilson are also seen. A full review was printed in the issue of October 14, page 224.

LOST—TWENTY-FOUR HOURS (Essanay), Oct. 14—An amusing three-reel comedy, played a well-selected cast. The story is straight farce, and many laughable situations result from a young husband's trip to the tenderloin during his wife's absence. The young husband sleeps twenty-four hours, and when he makes up finds the girl he met the night before in his house. She demands blackmail, and to make matter worse, the youth's aunt and cousin arrive. He passes off the girl as his disowned sister, and humorous complications follow. The cast is headed by Richard C. Travers. He is supported by Marguerite Clayton, Harry D. Dunkinson, Warda Howard, Gertrude Glover and John Junior.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

LOVE NEVER DIES (Oct. 23).—A two-part drama inspired by Mendelssohn's "Spring Song." The picture is not a particularly strong one in spite of the fact that it features one of the most talented of moving picture stars, Ruth Stonehouse. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

Greater Vitagraph (V-L-S-E, Inc.)

THE SCARLET RUNNER, NO. 4 (Vitagraph), Oct. 23.—The Hidden Prince has to do with the plotting of two love affairs through the service of the "Scarlet Runner." The villain of the previous adventure continues his evil practices through the fourth and does his utmost to separate the lovers. This number is moderately interesting.

THE BLUE ENVELOPE MYSTERY (Vitagraph), Oct. 23.—An excellent five-part adaptation of a story by Sophie Kerr. The adaptation was made by Helen Duey, the well-known magazine writer, and was directed by Wilfrid North. Lillian Walker and John D. Bennet have the principal roles. A full review of the production will be found on another page of this issue.

International Film Service, Inc.

HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 81, 1916 (Oct. 10).—Rescued passengers and crews of ships sunk by U-boats arrive in Newport; Railroad bridge collapses, Cleveland; Freshmen and Sophomores of State Agricultural School hold annual tank rush, Davis, Calif.; "Somewhere in France," German soldiers instructed in use of hand grenades, German army entering French village; Million cigarettes made for society charity sale, San Francisco; Fashion Section; Columbia University students hold tug of war, New York; Demonstration of caterpillar tractor, Stockton, Calif.; Pictures of World Series, Boston.

HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 82, 1916 (Oct. 13).—Scenes at Ebbetts Field, Brooklyn, as Brooklyns win third World Series game; President and Mrs. Wilson attend Centennial and parade, Omaha, Neb.; New machine bores tunnel in rock, New York; Ambassador Gerard arrives in New York from Germany; Indian mothers enter babies in Piute papoose show; Footlights and Fashions; Charles W. Fairbanks arrives in San Francisco; General Funston reviews N. Y. National Guard at border, McAllen, Tex.; Members of National Association of the Motion Picture Industry meet candidate Hughes at West Orange, N. J.; Wounded British soldiers carried over mountains to hospital, near Salonika, Greece.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE IRON WOMAN (Popular Plays and Players), Oct. 2.—Nance O'Neil is the star of this five-part feature which might be reduced in length without injury to the story. The direction is well done and adds to the merit of the film, which contains some strong scenes. A review can be found in last week's issue.

THE GHOST OF A CHANCE, Oct. 23.—Max Figman and Lolita Robertson have the principal roles in this rather weak single reel farce.

IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE (Quality), Oct. 16.—A production well staged by Francis Bushman, who also plays the leading role. Supporting him are Beverly Bayne and a large cast. The subject is not a strong one. It is reviewed in another column.

LIFE'S SHADOWS (Columbia), Oct. 9.—William Nigh is the author and director of this five-part subject. Mr. Nigh also plays the lead. The story is apparently designed to expose the pretensions of the inhabitants of Purity, a small town. The subject is more than uninteresting; it is incoherent, amateurish to an unbelievable degree.

Mutual Film Corporation

FOILED (Centaur), Sept. 30.—A two-reel burlesque by Al E. Christie. Billie Rhodes, Dave Morris, Ed Burns and others appear. The number pictures the arrival of a barn-storming company in a small town, where they stage an old-fashioned melodrama in burlesque style. While there is no particular novelty in this production it is done in amusing style and contains a number of laughable moments.

REDEEMED (Mutual Star Production), Oct. 9.—A five-part drama made at the Turner studios in England, Florence Turner as the featured member of the cast is delightful in her interpretation of the character of Marea, a simple Italian girl who becomes an unwelcome member of the family in the home of her more fortunate cousin, who is an opera singer and a woman of unstable character. The story is not on the whole a wise choice, its theme being somewhat unwholesome, inasmuch as that it deals too potently with unlawful associations between men and women. The picture is specifically not suited for exhibition before children.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 57 (Gaumont), Oct. 11.—"Richmond, Va.," is the subject of this interesting scenic, which includes views of all of the most interesting points in and about Richmond. This reel is of exceptional historic interest, and is finished with a comic cartoon entitled "Babbling Bess."

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 93 (Mutual), Oct. 11.—Interesting items of this issue are Governor Whitman reviewing the 15th infantry at New York, the opening of the Sheridan road between Chicago and Milwaukee, the arrival at San Francisco of the non-magnetic yacht "Carnegie," the automobile race at Sheepshead Bay and the Welcoming home of the New Jersey Fourth from the Mexican border.

INOCULATING HUBBY (Cub), Oct. 14.—A rather amusing farce comedy in which the peace of temperance broken in the home of a pair of newly weds by the arrival on the scene of the wife's mother. To instill into the husband a more docile spirit the mother-in-law inject into his tea a patent medicine for the purpose, after which he acts like a cat at the suggestion of a friend and frightens the mother-in-law away.

THEIR COLLEGE CAPERS (Cub), Oct. 14.—Rather an amusing comedy in which the feminine members of the college dress in the boys' clothes so as to be able to accompany the boys to a prize fight. One of the college professors also decides to go to see the fight, and in the round-up by the police all are taken to jail. The comedy is clean and fairly entertaining.

THOSE PRIMITIVE DAYS (Cub), Oct. 14.—A burlesque on the days of the Stone age, which will amuse many observers. Betty Compson, Neal Burns, Dave Morris and others are seen as cave men and cave ladies, attired in skins and disporting themselves over a picturesque landscape. Willy Wally, in love with Leaping Loo, wins her after many combats. This brings numerous smiles.

REEL LIFE, NO. 24 (Gaumont), Oct. 15.—An interesting number of the film magazine containing articles on "Uncle Sam's Weather Kites," "Duplicating Ancient Pottery," and "A Mother's Care," the latter being a short study of cats and kittens.

DUCKING A DISCORD (Vogue), Oct. 15.—A two-part comedy of rather a low type in which the wife of one of the characters, ever present with an accordion which she adores, is placed in a bag and thrown into the river in order that her husband may be rid of her and free to love another.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE FRANCHISE (American), Oct. 16.—A two-reel number, by Anthony W. Coldeway, featuring Edward Coxen, Winifred Greenwood, George Field, Clarence Burton and Al W. Fordyce. The story concerns a young lawyer, tempted by his prospective father-in-law to juggle the wording of a franchise. He struggles over the matter in his own mind and decides to play square, thus winning the girl. This is well-presented and entertaining, though not particularly dramatic.

BLUFF (Mutual Star Production, No. 144—American), Oct. 16.—A five-reel subject, by Aaron Hoffman, featuring Kolb and Dill, two well known comedians, assisted by Thomas Chatterton, Charles Lynch, May Cloy and others. This gets rather a slow start, but becomes more interesting later, though the story value is not very strong. In a less number of reels this would have been much better entertainment. Kolb and Dill do some good character work, and their makeups throughout are pleasing. The plot concerns a supposed formula for manufacturing gold, which turns out to be a formula for puncture-proof rubber. The lengthy subtitles have a tendency to slow down the action, though interesting enough in themselves.

THE LAW OF NATURE (Mutual), Oct. 17.—A two-part drama featuring Edwin August and Iva Shepard. The story deals with the unhappy condition in a household where the husband longed for children and the wife was opposed to the rearing of a family. The picture is not a particularly desirable one, dealing with a subject that is difficult of public discussion.

STEPPING WESTWARD (Gaumont), Oct. 19.—A two-reel subject, featuring Mabel Van Buren and George Larkin. This is presented in the old-time melodramatic style and seems very crude in places, though in spite of this there are many observers who will enjoy it. It is a story beginning back in Civil War days and extending into the advanced age of the two separated lovers. They are reunited as old people, but still in love. A fair number.

AT TWELVE O'CLOCK (Mutual), Oct. 26.—A western melodrama of fair merits. The story treats of how a young easterner going west is mistaken for a detective. A love story makes an opportunity for the feminine star to play an heroic bit in the rescue of her lover from a death which was to be dealt out to him by means of an automatic gun. Fred Church and Lillian Hamilton are the featured members of the cast.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

ANTON THE TERRIBLE (Lasky), Sept. 28.—A well-staged Lasky feature of Russian life presenting Theodore Roberts in the title role. The star is well suited for his task and is at his best at all times. Though a little drawn out toward the end this film will no doubt be a favorite box office attraction. Mr. Roberts is ably supported by a capable cast. The superior lighting effects, settings, etc., are at all times noticeable. For a more extended review see page 223 of the October 14 issue.

WITCHCRAFT (Lasky), Oct. 16.—As the name implies, the story is of New England. It contains heart interest in good measure. Fanny Ward is featured. The subject is reviewed in another column.

THE LASH (Lasky), Oct. 2.—An excellent production in which Marie Doro has the leading role, ably supported by a capable cast. The story is interesting and the acting good. The exterior as well as the interior scenes are uniformly acceptable. Reviewed on page 382, issue of Oct. 21.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

ISLE OF KYUSCHU (Pathe), Oct. 22.—This part reel is devoted to interesting views of Japanese surroundings, the entertainment value being heightened by the use of the Pathecolor process. The remainder of the reel is devoted to "Athletic Movements Analyzed." Here in examples of tennis playing, spirabole and rope jumping we see the action of the participants reduced to one-eighth of the normal speed. It is amusing and instructive as well.

HEINE AND THE MAGIC MAN (Rolin), Oct. 22.—Broad comedy and not of a notable funmaking quality.

Pathe Exchange, Inc. Specials

THE SHIELDING SHADOW, NO. 4 (Astra), Oct. 22.—"The Earthquake" is the title of this chapter of the serial, which has to do with the hypnotizing of One Lamp Louie by the "shielding shadow" into writing a confession, which Sebastian, entering at the moment, is about to secure, when it is lifted to the ceiling by some invisible power. Later it reaches Leontine in an envelope addressed to her. In another effort of Sebastian's to procure it Leontine gives it to Ravenger for safe keeping. During a struggle between the two men for possession of the paper an earthquake occurs. A thrilling leap from a high bridge into the water below closes the episode.

PRUDENCE THE PIRATE (Pathe), Oct. 22.—This five-reel subject has as principals Gladys Hulette, Flora Finch and Riley Chamberlin. It is an interesting comedy by Agnes Johnson and is well made. It is reviewed on another page.

IN THE MESH OF HER HAIR (Pathe), Oct. 22.—In this interesting drama we see three of the old-time Pathe favorites—Paul Panzer, Eleanor Woodruff and Irving Cummings. The story is of the country lover being superseded by the visitor from the city, the refusal of the mother of the latter to consent to the marriage, the unsuccessful attempt of the young woman to commit suicide, the despair of the city man when he believes a tragedy has taken place, and the reversal of the decision of the mother.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE VAGABOND PRINCE (Kay-Bee), Oct. 22.—Romance of the Balkans transformed by the vagabond tendency of a princeling to an interesting reality in San Francisco.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 40 (Universal), Oct. 2.—A subway wreck in New York City, naval boat races, Henry Ford at Universal City, President Wilson at Shadow Lawn, auto races and other features of interest are included in this number.

FATHER GETS IN WRONG (Joker), Oct. 7.—Wm. Franey, Gale Henry, Milburne Moranti and Lillian Peacock appear in this number. It is a domestic comedy in which the father opposes his daughter's lover. The humor is not so good as in most releases by this company.

A PAIR OF SHADOWS (Big U), Oct. 9.—The jealous wife hires a male detective to shadow her husband. The latter hires a female sleuth to watch his wife. The presence of the detectives furnishes grounds for scandal on each side until a general understanding is reached and happiness is restored. The idea is quite good for a farcical number, but has been handled with only a fair degree of strength.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 41 (Universal), Oct. 9.—This number includes a diversified selection of subjects, picturing the pennant winners in the major baseball leagues, film magnates calling upon President Wilson, fight on infantile paralysis in Philadelphia, war sidelights and numerous other features.

ROOM RENT AND ROMANCE (Victor), Oct. 9.—This number, written and directed by Roy Clements, features Victor Potel, Ed Sedgwick, Jane Bernoudy and Eileen Sedgwick. Hippo places a slice of sugared bread, covered with ants, in his rival's vest pocket. The ants get in their work while the latter is proposing. The humor is not of a very high order, though mildly amusing in its way. A fair subject.

THE DECOY (Imp), Oct. 19.—A story of revenge and intrigue, with the scenes located in Paris. There is a certain vagueness in the plot development, though the story proves quite interesting. Jessie Arnold plays a double role of mother and daughter; Wm. Garwood plays the hero. The girl falls in love with the man she has sworn to kill and saves his life. A number of fair strength.

SHE WANTED A FORD (L-Ko), Oct. 22.—A knockabout number, featuring Dan Russell, Gertrude Selby and Billy Ritchie. This does not depend very much on plot. The freak automobile proves laughable.

THE BAR FLY (Nestor), Oct. 23.—A comedy number, by Virginia Kirtley, featuring Eddie Lyons, Priscilla Dean and Lee Moran. The young married man copies the makeup of a hobo and goes to a masquerade party, after separating a few moments from his wife. The wife in the meantime picks up the real hobo by mistake and takes him to the affair. Amusing complications follow. This plot is not entirely new, but it is handled here with good action and proves enjoyable.

A PRICE ON HIS HEAD (Big U), Oct. 27.—With a reward of $1,000 offered for his capture, a man who shot a fellow player in a card game is given shelter by a girl living far from the settlement. When the sheriff locates the fugitive and places him under arrest the girl springs a clever trick that places the sheriff in their power. The action consequent upon the capture and release of the runaway is interesting enough to carry a picture that possesses little in the way of a plot. It is an episode rather than a drama.

THE PLUMBER'S WATERLOO (Victor), Oct. 27.—A comedy number, by Harry Depp. He and Ernie Shields play the parts of a plumber and his assistant. The plumber inherits a fortune but is under a five-years' contract to stay on his job. The idea is an amusing one.

A CROOKED MIXUP (Joker), Oct. 28.—A knockabout comedy number, by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., featuring Gale Henry, William Franey, Charles Conklin and others. A husband plans to have a friend rob the house. The wife overhears and by mistake entertains the wrong burglar. A mixup follows.

THE MOVING FINGER (Rex), Oct. 29.—This story of a business man who neglects his wife has a familiar theme, but is quite well presented and holds the interest fairly well. A young doctor, learning that the wife is about to elope with an admirer, warns the husband and almost loses his life in bringing about a reconciliation. The shooting scene at the close, and sudden recovery of the doctor, is none too convincing. A number of about average strength.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. Specials

MAIN 4400 (Victor), Oct. 22.—A two-reel comedy number, by Mary Ryder, featuring Herbert Rawlinson, Agnes Vernon and Carl von Schiller. The young hero meets a pretty nurse employed at an insane asylum. He and his friends pretend he is insane and have him incarcerated in the institution. He finds it easy to get in and difficult to get out, but this is finally accomplished when he and the girl escape in costume to go to a masquerade.

THE BLACK SHEEP OF THE FAMILY (Red Feather), Oct. 23.—A five-reel production, by Frank M. Wiltermood and Jay Hunt, featuring Francelia Billington, Jack Holt, Helen Leslie, Paul Byron and Gilmore Hammond. A double love story runs through this. The opening scenes occur at college, where Bert, in love with Kenneth's sister, appropriates the fraternity funds. Later he is suspected of shooting a girl in a cabaret. The story centers about his misdeeds and final reform. This production contains much lively action of a melodramatic sort, but the construction is very weak in places.

SOCIETY HYPROCRITES (Universal Special), Oct. 24.—This is a three-reel number, by Willis Woods, featuring Ben Wilson as Lone Eagle, an educated young Indian. He is invited to attend a wedding reception, where he gets his firse views of modern society. He winds up feeling that life in the woods is preferable to the intrigues of society. This makes a first rate satire so far as the theme is concerned. Ben Wilson looks the part of the civilized Indian. Neva Gerber, Mina Cunard and others also appear.

A RURAL ROMANCE (L-Ko), Oct. 25.—A two-reel farm comedy of the burlesque sort. This contains some laughable incidents and keeps the observer well amused throughout. The story concerns a farmhand who elopes with the farmer's daughter when he is about to marry her off to a creditor's son. The elopement and fall of the auto over a cliff are novel in certain respects. An amusing number.

THE NARROW CREED (Big U), Oct. 26.—A two-reel number, by Ben Cohn, featuring Edythe Sterling, Millard K. Wilson and Murdock MacQuarrie. This is the story of a young girl who comes to a country town and is cared for by the doctor and his wife. Her child is born and the deacon and his fellow workers demand that the mother and child be sent elsewhere, as they are a disgrace to the community. His son turns out to be the father, and a happy ending is effected. This touches closely on life in a small community and, while it is somewhat over-sentimental, it is well constructed and sincerely acted.

THROUGH SOLID WALLS (Imp), Oct. 27.—A detective story, by Tarleton Winchester, with Peggy Custer, Jay Belasco, Thomas Jefferson, Irene Hunt and Marc Fenton in the cast. This holds the interest well and tells quite an original yarn. A valuable diamond, an invention for looking through solid walls, a shrewd girl crook and a shrewder detective are features of the plot. The development keeps the observer guessing. The actual commission of the crime has a touch of vagueness about it, but this is not a material point.

THE BETTER MAN (Bison), Oct. 28.—A pleasing two-reel story of the redwood forest country, featuring Jack Holt, Lucille Younge and others. This pictures the arrival of a girl stenographer in the big camp, with whom the boss at once falls in love. A man then appears on the scene to whom she had been married, but who was arrested while the ceremony was in progress. The incidents thereafter are quite exciting. The criminal husband is killed and the boss gets the girl.

World-Pictures.

THE SCARLET OATH (Peerless), Oct. 2.—Gail Kane does admirable work in a dual role in this five-reel photodrama of Russian Nihilism. She plays the parts of twin sisters, one of whom, as a baby, has been adopted by wealthy people. Grown up, one of the sisters is an ardent Nihilist and the other is an innocent young woman. The story has few claims to originality. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

THE SOUL OF A CHILD (Pioneer—State Rights), October.—A five-reel drama featuring Em Gorman, child actress. The picture contains a certain amount of heart interest. It tells the story of how a child brings about the reformation of her wealthy, dissipating uncle, and how the girl also reconciles the uncle and his former fisher maiden sweetheart. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

THE CONQUEST OF CANAAN, October.—In trying to reproduce this story by Booth Tarkington into pictures the Frohman Company has made a fair but not a distinct success. The acting is fair and the settings and photography are at all times faultless. A more extended review can be found on page 224 of the October 14 issue.

THE BATTLE OF THE SOMME (Chas. Urban), October.—Some interesting scenes of the European battle front which will prove to be of great historic value. Showing various scenes of both the British and German fighting forces. The daring of the cameraman are responsible for some remarkable scenes. For review see page 225 of October 14 issue.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"OUT OF THE SHADOWS" (Selig).

"Out of the Shadows," written by Will M. Ritchie, and released Monday, October 23, in regular service through General Film Company, presents an all-star cast of players in a very unusual story. There have been many so-called "vampire" productions released on the screen within the past few years, but "Out of the Shadows" cannot be termed a "vampire" picture, Scene from "Out of the Shadows" (Selig).

although Virginia Kirtley in the role of "Flora Ruel" has many opportunities for the enaction of a role of an unscrupulous and soulless woman. However, the ending of "Out of the Shadows" is entirely different than the stereotyped conclusion of the so many so-called "vampire" plays, for in the end the father, who in his youth has sown wild oats, saves his only son from the snare of an adventuress, and brings the boy back to the arms of the girl who loves him.

Some very pretty scenic effects, talented acting and clear photography make "Out of the Shadows" an offering which will attract patrons into any motion picture theater.

PARAMOUNT-PHILADELPHIA EXCHANGE IN LARGER QUARTERS.

The Famous Players exchange distributing Paramount Pictures in eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, with its main office at 1321 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa., will, about Dec. 1, 1916 move into larger quarters at 1219 and 1223 Vine street, in the very heart of the film district.

The exchange will occupy the entire ground floor of this new building, having a floor space of about 11,000 square feet. When completed, it will be one of the most pretentious film exchange offices in the East. William E. Smith, president of the Exchange, is devoting much of his present attention to the plans of the new offices, and is permitting nothing to stand in the road to make this exchange the finest in Philadelphia.

The offices will have a 20 foot ceiling which will enable the exchange to install a mezzanine in the rear. This room will be fitted out with reclining chairs of the most comfortable types.

Mr. Smith will have a large private office and small private offices will be occupied by O. F. Bower, Oscar A. Morgan, manager-director of publicity and advertising, a booker and bookkeeping department. The shipping department will be in the rear, as the building runs through to the next street. This makes it possible to receive and ship the films without causing any confusion in the office.

WORK ON "THE TRUANT SOUL" PROGRESSING.

The filming of "The Truant Soul," Essanay's seven-act feature for Henry B. Walthall, is now well under way, 150 exterior scenes having been completed and studio work begun. Mr. Walthall, Mary Charleson, his leading woman; Director Harry Beaumont and Company, have returned from Wisconsin where the out-of-door scenes were taken.

The first booking on the feature has been received from a municipality. Mayor D. E. Smith, of Richland Center, Wis., has applied to President George K. Spoor for first run on the superfeature. The city council intends to show it in the municipal opera house. The mayor reports that reservations up to capacity have already been received. The exterior scenes were taken in and about this little mountain town in Wisconsin, which lies entirely surrounded by massive hills, just the locality required. It was virgin territory for the camera, and each day the entire population followed the actors into the hills to watch the filming.

The first interior set required the duplication of an operating amphitheater, and photographs were taken of the one in Mercy Hospital, Chicago, where the late Dr. John B. Murphy performed his marvelous work. This was duplicated exactly and for the student spectators the senior medical class of the University of Chicago participated. In the pit with Mr. Walthall, playing the part of a master surgeon, were Chicago specialists, obtained to play in the picture so that its realism would be above question.

"The Truant Soul" is not being rushed to meet a program release date. Therefore, to make its quality as perfect as possible upward of a month will be taken with the interiors.

"FANTOMAS" STILL GOING STRONG.

The popularity of "Fantomas" as a cleanly sensational series has been fully demonstrated by the demand for these pictures which still holds up, despite the fact that the final episode of the series has been released. The New York Branch reports that every print is in demand and booked up for some time to come.

WINNIFRED GREENWOOD IN "THE VOICE OF LOVE."

For splendor and variety of setting no recent motion picture has surpassed the Mutual Star Production, "The Voice of Love," featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen, which will go out to the public on October 19. Director Rae Berger has procured charming light effects and perfection of photography which marks this unusual photoplay story as something far above the ordinary.

In it, Winnifred Greenwood plays the role of a woman of refinement, once wealthy, who through misfortune, has found it necessary to turn to astrology and fortune telling for her livelihood, and for that of her daughter who has been placed in a fashionable New York boarding school.

Some of the most attractive and thrilling scenes are set in New York, at a Belgian Relief Fair, where the daughter and the wealthy young Chicagoan whom her mother loves, meet, at the theater, at the boarding school. Others are in the attractive and richly hung rooms of the astrologer.

In this play of love and intrigue, Winnifred Greenwood is exceptionally attractive, and Edward Coxen is perfectly cast in his role of the manly and handsome young millionaire. In supporting roles are George Field, Laura Sears, Rena Carlton and Harvey Clarke.

"THE KISS" IS COMPLETED.

Marguerite Courtot has blushed her last blush and Owen Moore has flicked the last speck of powder from his shoulder, which is another way of saying that the Famous Players production, "The Kiss," in which they co-starred under the direction of Del Henderson, is completed and ready for release on the Paramount Program October 19.

This is the production for which Miss Courtot and Moore both made aeroplane flights at Amityville, L. I., in the Lawrence Sperry machine, in which the inventor-aviator later came to grief himself, being forced to spend the night on the ocean when his supply of gasoline ran out.

The story of the plan concerns Jean, an aviator in the French army, who comes to America to visit his wealthy relative, Mrs. Van Vechton. The delightful old lady has a private secretary named Luise, a pretty girl of French descent, who has earned the dislike of Mrs. Jack Van Vechton, the old lady's widowed daughter-in-law because Pennington, a social highwayman, has taken a decided interest in her, to the exclusion of the young widow.

There is a wild chase and a thrilling rescue which very nearly proves fatal for both Luise and Jean, who comes to her assistance, which makes this picture a rare mixture of farce comedy and dramatic action.

SIXTH EPISODE OF "THE YELLOW MENACE" RELEASED.

The title of the Sixth Episode of "The Yellow Menace," which is released this week by the Unity Sales Corporation, is called "The Torture Chamber." Those who love dramatic thrills in a picture and will demand gripping scenes, will find much in this episode that will make them clutch their seats.

In this episode Ali Singh discovers that it was Najla, his beautiful niece, who had betrayed him to his enemies and caused the raid on his houseboat by the government authorities. Determined to make an example of her and to prove to his followers that the Arch-Demon is prepared to punish disloyalty, even with torture that approaches death itself, Ali Singh has Najla suspended on a rack operated by an electric current, which, if allowed to continue running, would rend limb from limb.

The second reel of this episode treats of another unsuccessful attempt of the authorities to surround Ali Singh's haunt in a dismal New Jersey swamp, for the purpose of rescuing May Manning, Margaret Bronson and Najla. The three girls attempt to escape during the raid, but only May Manning is lucky enough to succeed. She makes a daring leap from an upper story through the use of a knotted sheet. Margaret and Najla attempt to follow her lead, but are prevented by Ali Singh's followers. They are spirited away, still in the clutches of Ali Singh.

FOUR LEADING MEN WITH NANCE O'NEILL.

A notable feaure of the fohthcoming McClure series, "Seven Deadly Sins," is that each McClure star, as she appears in her particular play of the series, is supported by several leading men of unusual dramatic ability.

In "Greed," the third play of this superseries, Nance O'Neill is acting with Robert Elliott. The heavy part has been entrusted to the care of Harry Northrup. Alfred Hickman, Nance O'Neill's husband, is also in the cast of "Greed." George Le Guere forms the last member of this notable quartet of actors; his work for Metro, Famous Players, Kleine, Essanay, and on the stage has made him a favorite with the amusement-loving public. "Greed" is directed by Theodore Marston.

THANHOUSER'S "HIDDEN VALLEY."

From New York City to the wilds of South Africa, the spectator is carried in "Hidden Valley," a Thanhouser feature starring Valkyrien, which is to be released through the Pathe exchanges on November 5. Boyd Marshall is the leading man and Ernest Warde directed the picture.

Few directors have had to travel as far for scenes as Mr. Warde did in making "Hidden Valley." He didn't do to South Africa, but he did take his company from New York to Florida in order to get the proper South African settings.

"Hidden Valley" tells the story of the daughter of an explorer, who is carried by an underground stream to the temple of a heathen tribe. They hail her as a goddess and keep her captive. They finally believe that she brings them misfortune, however, for their water supply is cut off and she is about to be sacrificed, when a young divinity student finds her and by a clever trick brings water to the arid lands and saves her life.

The settings are beautiful and Valkyrien, dainty and graceful, in the light robes of the "goddess," has an opportunity to introduce several of her famous classic dances.

"FLY COPS" IN "THE BREAKER."

In order to make the scenes in "The Breaker" as realistic as Possible, President George K. Spoor, of Essanay, engaged the services of Captain Michael P. Evans, the chief of the Chicago Bureau of Identification, and well known all over the United States as an expert in the Bertillon system, together with his son, assistant identification inspector, and several headquarter dectectives to take part in the play.

"The Breaker" is a five-act feature, written by Arthur Stringer, and featuring Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig. It deals with a counterfeiting band and the capture of the members by the police. Captain Evans works through several scenes, reproducing the exact methods of the police in taking records of criminals by the Bertillon system. He also follows out his clews thus received in capturing members of the band.

"PAYING THE PRICE" (Gaumont).

The Gaumont Company will contribute a two-reel photodrama through Mutual, October 30, "Paying the Price," which will have in the cast a number of old Gaumont favorites. Miss Marian Swayne will be seen in the leading role, that of a girl about to be forced into an unwelcome marriage to save the man who has won her hand. Joseph Levering, who directed the production, plays opposite Miss Swayne. Miss Flavia Arcaro, whose long list of Gaumont "vampires" is notable, has a role of this character. The political boss is played by Fritz Orlamond, a favorite in Gaumont stock in character roles.

This is an excellent opportunity to get a photoplay of two reels featuring Miss Swayne. She is now seldom seen on the screen in productions that are not of "feature" length, and "Paying the Price" thus affords exhibitors the chance to offer their patrons a great favorite in a role that will strengthen any evening's entertainment, no matter what the five-reel photoplay may be.

"Paying the Price" tells of the heart struggles of a girl whose fiance is "framed" by a political boss because he himself is in love with the girl. When the young man thinks he has murdered the siren, he flees. Even then the girl does not turn to the boss, but seeks consolation in a friend of the man she had loved, but whom she thinks faithless. Again the boss interferes, and it is his threat to have the new admirer indicted for murder that brings the old sweetheart back to fight one of the most thrilling duels with knives the screen has seen in a long time.

"UNPROTECTED," WITH BLANCHE SWEET AS STAR.

"Unprotected," in which Blanche Sweet is starred, has been completed by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and will be released on the Paramount Program November 6. It is the story of an innocent young girl who is convicted of a crime and sentenced to a long term in jail. She is a southerner, and, in accordance with the customs which prevail locally, she is farmed out by the warden of the jail to work on contract in the neighboring turpentine groves.

Scene from "Unprotected" (Lasky).

Though California is almost unlimited in its resources so far as furnishing scenic backgrounds for motion pictures is concerned, a turpentine camp run by negro convicts falls outside of its particular province. It therefore behooves the director in charge of the picture to decide whether it would be more feasible to construct such a camp or to go in search of a genuine one. He finally decided in favor of the latter plan and succeeded in locating a big turpentine camp of the required description in the south, after travelling hundreds of miles. Accordingly Blanche Sweet, Tom Forman, Ernest Joy, Walter Long, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Robert Gray, Jane Wolff and Director James Young disappeared from the studio one night and did not return for three weeks, during which time they were not heard from by any one at Hollywood. They returned as mysteriously as they went, and it was not for some time that their destination was learned.

The story itself is a thrilling drama, detailing the sufferings of this innocent girl who soon finds that she is in imminent peril of becoming the personal slave of the man to whom she has been leased as a laborer by the state. The rest of the story concerns itself with the rescue of the girl from her perilous position and the ultimate amelioration of the condition of the other prisoners of the camp.

TWEEDLEDUM COMEDIES NOW BOOKING.

The Unity Sales Corporation are releasing this week the second Tweedledum comedy, under the title of "A Scrambled Honeymoon," featuring the eccentric acrobatic comedian Perez in a series of amusing situations which still proves there is plenty of fun left in the mother-in-law.

The Unity Sales Corporation have added, during the past week, additional independent exchanges, who will handle the "Tweedledum" comedies, and reports from them indicate that these releases are meeting with prompt recognition at the hands of the exhibitors. In fact, the Unity officials feel that Tweedledum is proving himself to be as good a comedian for American exhibitors as he was on the other side, where he achieved such a marked success before coming to this country.

Among the new exchanges, which have booked these comedies are Koppin Film Company, Detroit, Mich.; Unity Pictures Corporation, Minneapolis, Minn.; Unity Photoplays Company, Denver, Colo.; Unity Pictures Corporation, Dallas, Tex.

WORLD FILM CONTEST AWARDS JANUARY 1.

The $5000 prize play contest of the World Film Corporation closed September 15, and the formal announcement of the winning authors will be made January 1, 1917. The interval will be none too long for the task of weighing the values of the manuscripts not already disposed of, as the number of plays and stories submitted in response to Mr. Brady's invitation has been enormous. In the final round-up there will be nineteen accepted manuscripts, the one considered best among these taking the first prize of $1000; the second best, $750; the third, $650; fourth, $500; fifth, $400; sixth, $300; seventh, $200; next twelve, $100 apiece.

A STORY OF FAITH HEALING.

A feature with a strong religious theme is "The World and the Woman," a Thanhouser feature starring Jean Eagles, that will be released through the Pathe exchanges in November.

Miss Eagles played the leading role on tour in "Outcast," and is to be featured in a play to be produced by Joseph Brooks on Broadway this fall. "The World and the Woman" is the first big picture she has done. She shows a complete mastery of a difficult role and gives an excellent characterization of the woman of the streets who turns back and becomes a faith healer.

The story is by Philip Lonergan. It is by no means to be regarded as propaganda for any certain religion, but before it was announced for release—in order that it might not offend any sect—it was shown to prominent members of different churches, including the Christian Science, and was heartily approved by all.

Supporting Miss Eagles in "The World and the Woman" are Boyd Marshall, Thomas A. Curran, Wayne Arey, Grace Do Carlton, Carey Hastings and little Ethelmary Oakland, who is the child under whose influence "the woman" fights her way back to a righteous life. Eugene Moore is the director.

INTERNATIONAL TO HAVE "FASHION DRAMA" SERIES.

The International announces "the fashion drama," a remarkable new and original manner of picturizing fashions on the screen, so they will be appealing to all.

Within a few weeks the International will present, in a series of episodes, "the Adventures of Dorothy Dare." Each episode will be complete in one reel and will combine a thrilling story of adventure with a gorgeous display of the latest modes.

For some time past, the International has been producing fashions on an elaborate scale, but of only 500 feet in length. There was a story in each of them, among the most successful having been "Fashions D'Art," "A Modern Cinderella," "Anywoman," "Beauty and the Beast," and "The Saleslady's Dream.' Because of their success, the International conceived the idea of the independent fashion drama of a full reel. Each episode will be of intense interest in addition to depicting the fashions.

The title of the first episode of "The Adventures of Dorothy Dare" will be "It's Never Too Late."

CORRECT "LIBERTY" TITLES.

Misapprehension has arisen as to the correct titles for the episodes of the Universal "Liberty" serial. The following announcements are made authoritatively to set these misapprehensions at rest: Episode nine will be entitled "Trapped;" epsiode ten will be entitled "The Human Targets;" episode eleven will be entitled "A Daughter of Mars;" episode twelve will be entitled "For the Flag."

"IT NEVER COULD HAPPEN" (Essanay).

Perhaps it couldn't, except on the screen, but then the plot isn't so illogical, at that. It's all about the scion of a wealthy family whose father sends him out to earn $100. He earns it all right, with an emphasis on the verb. The profession—trade, or whatever it is—of butler was the only thing with which he was thoroughly acquainted, so he took a job at it. When the heiress falls in love with him and he falls in love with a nurse, numerous complications naturally arise. Richard C. Travers is an actor who can make the most of a comedy-drama of this kind and he does in this instance. Anna Mae Walthall plays the feminine lead. "It never could happen," said the scenario editor when he read the piece. That's how this three-reeler obtained its name.

CORRECTION.

The name of Gladys Hulette's next Thanhouser-Pathe release is "Prudence, the Pirate," not "Prudence and the Pirates," as it has been called by some. Miss Hulette glories in the fact that in the picture she herself is a pirate, in command of the bad ship "Bucket of Blood," and she doesn't want the impression to get out that she isn't one of the bloodthirsty crew.

St. John's New Lyric Now Open

The Pretty New Moving Picture Theater on Main Street Just Opened by Charles F. Given Is Considered One of the Most Attractive Small Houses in the Province —Has Seats for 500 and Cost $15,000 to Build.

From F. F. Sully, 68 Landsdown Ave., St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Charles F. Givan, formerly a partner in the Sussex, N. B., opera house has just opened the new Lyric Theater on Main street. Following the fire, which practically destroyed the opera house, the firm of which Mr. Givan was a member opened temporary quarters and continued the exhibition of pictures. This promised, however, to be only temporary, and Mr. Givan believing in the future of the moving picture business in Sussex, erected a $15,000 house on the main thoroughfare of the city in a neighborhood that is sure to catch a large share of business. The theater, which is said to be one of the prettiest small theaters in the provinces, has a seating capacity of 500. It is prettily decorated and although it has been open but a week is playing to capacity houses. Mr. Givan is using the Universal service, the headquarters of which for the provinces is in St. John, under the management of G. V. Margatts.

St. John's Branch of Dominion Educational Films, Ltd.

St. John, N. B.—An organization has been started in Vancouver with the idea in mind of making moving pictures of an educational nature throughout Canada. The St. John Board of Trade has been informed that it is the intention of the management to open a branch in this city, as well as in other large cities in the dominion. The company has asked for information concerning the local industries, tourist attractions, and various other interests that would make good material upon which to build such pictures as they intend to film.

Films to Promote Immigration.

St. John, N. B.—John Dufresne, who has been serving as camera man for the New Brunswick government during the past month while a series of moving pictures for immigration purposes have been made, has returned to his duties at St. John exchange of the Pathe service. The provincial government is expending a great deal in attempts to increase immigration for settlement purposes. Through its bureaus, one of which is located in this city, it offers special homestead lands, which can be paid for in yearly installments. To further their plans the officials have adopted the moving picture form of advertisement. This is probably the first province in Canada, and possibly the first government on this continent to enlist the services of the moving picture in immigration.

Local Film Exchange Notes.

St. John, N. B.—Extensive improvements have just been completed at the local Mutual exchange office. The shipping room has been greatly enlarged. New office furniture has been installed, and the entire premises have been thoroughly renovated. There are very heavy bookings for the new serial, "The Secret of the Submarine," and the Chaplin specials, besides the new star productions. Charles H. Kerr is local manager.

Carl Crawford, manager of the Fox exchange has just returned from an extensive trip through Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the interests of the trade. Mr. Crawford reports that good business continues throughout this section of the dominion.

L. Ernest Ouimet, general manager of the Specialty Film company, has returned to the head office in Montreal after a several days' stay in St. John.

Made the Operator Laugh.

St. John, N. B.—The film of the exhibitors' convention in Halifax nearly refused to go when screened for the first time here in St. John. A. J. Mason, the Imperial theater operator, who was at the crank, doubled up with laughter and almost forgot to keep the film moving. D. M. Richards, better known as "Uncle Dave" and W. H. Golding and Mr. Fielding play no small parts in furnishing the comedy for 200 feet of views that will long be remembered by the Canadian men of the trade who were present at Halifax.

Expects to Open New Casino Theater.

Halifax, N. S.—R. J. McAdam, who is now in Sydney, N. S., expects to leave in a short time for Halifax, where he expects to remain permanently. If nothing unforeseen occurs he will open the beautiful new Casino theater by the latter part of next month or the early part of December. The Casino will rank among the most modern and finely appointed theaters.

E. A. Langley Managing the Royal.

Yarmouth, N. S.—E. A. Langley, formerly of the Standard Films, has taken over the management of the Royal opera house, Yarmouth. Mr. Langley has contracted for the Pathe service.

Music at the Unique.

St. John, N. B.—S. C. Hurley, manager of the Unique theater in St. John, has made arrangements for the famous Arlington Orchestra of Portland, Maine, to furnish music for Unique patrons during the coming winter. In addition to this feature he has contracted for "The Shielding Shadow." The Unique has a fine location on one of the principal streets of the city, and faces one of the prettiest parks in this section of Canada.

Consolidate Local Film Business.

Spring Hill, N. S.—The moving picture business in Spring Hill, N. S., is now exclusively in the hands of Miss Anderson and Colin Danson, who have succeeded in eliminating opposition after a hard fight, for which they deserve credit. During the past eight months they fought competitors in a clean and business like manner.

George E. Frauley, manager of the Imperial theater in St. George, was recently in St. John looking over the attractive fall bookings.

Bangor Can't Back Theater

Illegality of Exempting Property from Taxation Spoils P. J. Feeney's Opera House Plan.

By John P. Flannagan, 149 Park View Ave., Bangor, Maine.

BANGOR, ME.—The Bangor city government turned down the offer of P. J. Feeney, owner of the lot on which the Bangor opera house stood before the fire of January, 1914, to build an opera house providing the city would place a nominal valuation of $1,000 on the property for ten years from April 1, 1916. Acting on advice from the city solicitor that the supreme court of Maine had repeatedly held that it is illegal to exempt property from taxation, the city notified Mr. Feeney that it was unable to comply with his request, and the plan to build has been given up temporarily at least. Mr. Feeney planned to have moving picture in the new theater.

One World Man Stands Up with Another.

Bangor, Me.—John P. Flanagan, Maine correspondent of the Moving Picture World, has returned from Calais where he was best man at the wedding of Frederick F. Sully, St. John, N. B., correspondent of the Moving Picture World, and Miss Elizabeth McGarrigle of Calais.

A Live Manager of Maine Mutual.

Bangor, Me.—Manager R. Borrotto, of the Bangor branch of the Mutual Film Co., is a live wire who has tremendously increased business at the local branch since coming here. He has the able assistance of Arthur Allen, former manager of the Palace theater, as booker.

Manager Borrotto—What do you think of the ghost?—Some familiar spirit.

Here's a secret—His first name is Reginald, but he says "Call me Borrotto. I was too young to protest when they tacked that name on me. I'm the very antithesis of all that the name would imply." And he is, too, is Mr. Borrotto. We don't really need to say it except for those who don't know him. He has hundreds of friends among Maine exhibitors and is making more every day.

Baseball Machines 'Way Down East.

Bangor, Me.—Manager Stephen Bogrett, of the Bijou and Park theaters, has the distinction of having shown in his two theaters here last week the plays of the world's series on his baseball machine at the most easterly point in the United States, where such returns were received. The fans appreciated the innovation as shown by their large attendance. Mr. Bogrett had a direct wire from the field to the theaters.

WEEK IN BOSTON, MASS.

By Wm. M. Flynn, 90 Summer St. Boston, Mass.

Dan Horgan to Manage International Exchange.

BOSTON, MASS.—Following its established custom of promoting from the ranks men to fill important positions, Dan Horgan, formerly roadman for the International, was last week made manager of the Boston office, succeeding F. H. Vine.

Mr. Horgan was born in Boston and has been connected with the film industry the past two years, first as roadman for Pathe, later going with the International when they opened their local office. He is well and favorably known among New England exhibitors as a man entitled to their entire confidence.

District Manager Lyon has been in Boston the past week breaking in the new manager and reorganizing the sales force. Two new salesmen have been added this week to the local office. E. L. Knight, for several years manager of the Bijou theater, Springfield, will cover the territory vacated by Mr. Horgan, which is western Massachusetts and Connecticut. East of Hartford, S. P. Levenberg, formerly of the Unicorn, has been assigned to Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont territory that has been covered by W. S. Davidson, who is stationed in Rhode Island, Boston and vicinity and the Cape.

Mr. Lyon states that business of the International is in particularly flourishing condition, especially on the Golden Eagle feature photoplays. Exhibitors are constantly inquiring and requesting for private showings of these features to such an extent that arrangements were made with the Park theater, downtown Boston, for a private exhibition of "Jaffery" for exhibitors and press.

The Park theater has booked "Jaffery" for the full week starting Monday, Oct. 16; they have also booked "The Flower of Faith" to be played week beginning Monday, October 30.

Baltimore News Letter

Crescent Theater Changes Hands.

BALTIMORE, Md.—It is announced that J. J. Hartlove, who formerly managed the Crescent theater, 1110-12 South Charles street, has severed his connection with this house and that he no longer has anything to do with the business, but holds a big block of stock. W. N. Blaustein is now attending to the booking of the pictures for the Crescent, and it is understood that he is acting as its manager. He is hustling to please the patrons.

Red Mill Theater Leased.

Baltimore, Md.—The Red Mill theater, 1510 West Lafayette avenue, has been leased by J. J. McNamara, the owner, to J. E. Sheridan, who is at present managing the house himself.

Increased Prices for "The Chattel."

Baltimore, Md.—The Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, under the management of B. Depkin, Jr., has had to take care of enormous crowds which attended the run of E. H. Sothern in "The Chattel." On this account the prices of admission had to be changed and at night the lowest prices were 15 cents, while during the matinees some of the seats which heretofore have been 10 cents were raised to 15.

N. E. Bowden at Leader Helm.

Baltimore, Md.—N. E. Bowden, who has been for some time manager of the Ideal theater in Hampden, has now taken over the management of the Leader theater, 248 South Broadway. Both these houses are owned by Pearce & Scheck. Mr. Bowden took charge of his new duties on Wednesday, October 11, and he states that many changes are under contemplation by Mr. Joe Fields, the former manager of this house, will manage Berman's theater

New Nixon-Victoria Treasurer.

Baltimore, Md.—Charles Thropp, manager of the Nixon-Victoria theater, 415 East Baltimore street, has obtained a live wire and very affable person in A. M. Seligman, to act in the capacity of treasurer for this house. A good arrangement has been worked out whereby he has entire charge of the theater when at any time Mr. Thropp is called away hurriedly to attend to matters of importance.

"See America First" Films at Parkway.

Baltimore, Md.—The first reel of the "See America First" series, which is being produced by the Gaumont Company and released through the Mutual exchanges, will be shown at the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, during the entire week of October 23. Mr. Depkin, the Parkway manager, has arranged to have this picture for his patrons because it includes the views of Baltimore.

W. A. Busch, K. E. S. E. Representative.

Baltimore, Md.—William A. Busch has been appointed as special representative for the road [illegible] the first picture to be released under this banner, entitled, "The Country God Forgot." Mr. Busch was formerly associated with the Randolph Film company, which handled the Balto Parks [illegible] section.

Cork Gathering Film Shown.

Baltimore, Md.—At a meeting of the Traffic Club, which was held at the Hotel Rennert on Thursday night, October 12th, a moving picture which depicted the manner in which the agents of the Crown Cork & Seal Company secure cork in Spain was shown. This was a unique feature of the meeting, after which followed a collation and a cabaret show, all of which was enjoyed heartily.

H. P. Hopkins at Park Row Theater, New York.

Baltimore, Md.—It is reported that the Park Row theater in New York City will have a Baltimorean as its organist in the person of Harry Pattison Hopkins, who was formely the organist at the Franklin Street Presbyterian Church in this city.

S. H. Meinhold in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—S. H. Meinhold, general manager for Marcus Loew, suddenly appeared recently at the office of Loew's Hippodrome theater in this city and after Harry Woods, the resident manager of this theater, got over his suprise and delight, they had a short chat in which it was announced that a new policy had been placed in effect by Mr. Loew, whereby only first-run pictures would be shown on his circuit.

Another Theater Under Way.

Baltimore, Md.—Capt. W. A. Blake and H. P. Mann are erecting a moving picture theater on the site of the Old Presbyterian church on East Hamilton avenue, and the foundations have been laid. It is stated that the theater, when completed, will seat 400.

Fined for Employing Child as Operator.

Baltimore, Md.—Harry A. LeBrun, an inspector for the State Board of Labor and Statistics, swore out a warrant for R. E. Martin, who manages a theater on Fait avenue, charging him with violating the Child Labor Law, and testified that he had in his employ a boy under the age of 16 years who was working as an operator. Justice Williams in the Canton Police Station fined Mr. Martin five dollars and costs.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Willard Misses the Fight Film.

Vancouver, B. C.—Jess Willard is beginning to wonder if he will ever have an opportunity of seeing the moving pictures of the little argument which he had at Havana some time ago with Mr. Arthur Johnson. Willard played at date with the Sells-Floto circus at Bellingham, Wash., a short time ago, and while there called up J. W. Pattison, president of the Aero Club of B. C., to inquire if there was a copy of the picture here, so that he might take a day off and come up to see it. He announced himself as perfectly willing to hire a theater for the showing, if necessary, but it was found that there was not a print of the picture in this city, so Mr. Willard is still wondering just how the performance looked from the front.

Two Prominent Newark Theaters in Merger

Strand on Market Street and Goodwin on Broad Brought Under Same Management by Edward Spiegel.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent

NEWARK, N. J.—A merger of considerable importance was consummated Oct. 7 when the Strand theater, at 118 Market street, and the Goodwin theater, at 871 Broad street, were brought under the same management. The announcement of the merger was made by Edward Spiegel, head of the corporation owning and operating the Strand theater.

Only the highest-classed pictures will be shown at the two houses, as Mr. Spiegel has already closed contracts with the leading producers. According to a published announcement, no picture will be shown at any other Newark house within a period of between thirty and sixty days.

In an interview Mr. Spiegel is quoted as saying, "This merger means that Newark will get the very best motion pictures in the world and get them first. Not only that, Newark will get clean pictures and pictures up to the standard of the Strand theater, New York, which is considered the criterion. Newark is a splendid and progressive city and entitled to the best. My experience here has proved to me that when the best in entertainment is offered, Newark responds with a liberal hand.

"I hope that within a few days I will be able to announce the signing of contracts which will enable the Strand-Goodwin combination to furnish a daily program unsurpassed even in New York. My faith in Newark is unlimited, and I have been, and am still willing, to back that faith with cold cash."

The personnel of the two theaters will not be changed according to present indications. The manager of the Strand is Jules Gerstle, and of the Goodwin, Mrs. L. H. Webb.

Newark Lifts Picture Ban.

Newark, N. J.—The ban upon admission of children under twelve years of age in motion picture theaters has been ordered removed by Health Officer Craster. A notice to this effect has been sent to all proprietors of moving picture theaters here. Exhibitors are naturally anticipating an exceedingly good season after the lethargy during the summer.

Superior Theater Incorporated.

East Orange, N. J.—The Superior Theater Company, Incorporated, has been organized at 79 Carnegie avenue, this city, for the purpose of operating theatrical and moving picture enterprises. The authorized capital is $200,000. The incorporators are Leon Sanders, W. O. Robinson, Nathan Sanders, Max G. Cohen and Morris Israel.

Grand Theater Files Trade Name.

Kearny, N. J.—Mrs. Augusta C. Treat, of 18 Maple street, has filed Grand theater as the trade name of the motion picture house located at 23-25 Kearny avenue, Kearny, N. J.

"Civilization" Has Record Run.

Newark, N. J.—On Oct. 14, "Civilization" completed a three weeks' run at the Strand theater. This picture had a phenomenal run, being the first picture to stay more than two weeks in this city. The picture received favorable comment here.

Miss Young at Loew's.

Newark, N. J.—Clara Kimball Young, star of the "Common Law," appeared personally at Loew's theater, 99 Springfield avenue, on Oct. 3. On Oct. 11, Miss Ethel Grandin, who stars in the "Crimson Stain Mystery," also appeared at the same theater. Both actresses were greeted by immense throngs, hundreds of persons being turned away. The personal appearance of film stars has always been, and still is, a great drawing card in this city.

"Fall of a Nation" Here.

Newark, N. J.—Under the management of George W. Jacobs and William B. Putnam, managers of the Paramout theater, Broad and Hill streets, the "Fall of a Nation" was brought to the Orpheum theater, Washington and Court streets, for a week's run beginning Oct. 9. The picture enjoyed a successful engagement here. C. H. Ettenger is the traveling representative with the picture.

Earle Williams in Orange.

Orange, N. J.—Earle Williams appeared personally at the U. S. Palace theatre, 504 Main street, Oct. 2 and 3, and told in his interesting manner his experiences while making "The Scarlet Runner," which was also shown in visualized form. He was enthusiastically received. D. J. Shepherd, manager of the house, reports that he has booked Ince's production, "Civilization," for an early date.

East Orange Lyceum Reopened.

East Orange, N. J.—The Lyceum theater, Main street, has been reopened by Bernard S. Klotz and Philip Howell. Mr. Klotz was formerly with the United Amusement company, while Mr. Howell was with the Keefe Amusement company of Salt Lake City. The two men are also interested in the Orpheum theater, Asbury Park. The house reopened with feature films. "Ramona," which played to such large audiences at the Strand theater, Newark, was the initial attraction.

New Passaic Corporation.

Passaic, N. J.—With registered offices at 37 Lexington avenue, the Ray Amusement Company has been incorporated with an authorized capital of $10,000 to conduct amusements. The incorporators are L. Eskwint, R. Finkelstein and B. Goldberg.

Palisade Film Laboratories, Inc.

Fort Lee, N. J.—The Palisade Film Laboratories, Incorporated, with an authorized capital of $10,000, has been formed here for the purpose of developing and printing films. The incorporators are E. B. Walden, F. H. Hall and O. E. Watson.

Philadelphia News Letter

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Oscar Morgan's Paramount Pointers.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Oscar Morgan, the Paramount's live wire publicity man, issued Paramount pointers every week. This little advance messenger, which is mailed to all customers, contains some excellent hints for the exhibitors and much valuable information regarding the proper advertising of the pictures. Mr. Morgan has previously been an exhibitor himself in Asbury Park.

Fred Warren Dines Fourth Estate.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Fred Warren now with the Selznick enterprise paid Philadelphia a visit last week and entertained the local dramatic and motion picture editors with a dinner at the Bellevue Strafford.

Robert Lynch's 65 Contracts.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Robert Lynch, manager of the Blue Bird exchange, has secured sixty-five regular contracts for one a week releases in Philadelphia. Mr. Lynch is a great believer in local advertising and is using considerable space in the Philadelphia newspapers by way of co-operating with the exhibitors. His predictions of big business are exceedingly encouraging for the coming season.

Bluebird Theater Anniversary.

J. Elliot Goldman of the Bluebird theater will have a special anniversary celebration at his house on October 17th.

C. N. Fischer Prospers in Lancaster.

Philadelphia, Pa.—C. N. Fischer, local exhibitor, reports that he is meeting with success at Lancaster, Pa., where he is directing the management of the Lancaster theater at 605 Manor street. He finds that good serials pay and is now showing Pathe's "Grip of Evil" and the Universal's new serial "Liberty," in addition to an up-to-date feature program.

Philadelphia's Own Camera Man.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Philadelphia's city authorities now have a special moving picture camera man of their own by the name of J. Snow. Pictures of the First Regiment, N. G. P. troops returning from the Mexican border were made last week, and incidentaly Governor Brumbaugh and Mayor Smith were also included.

Theater Sold Under Hammer.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The motion picture theater at the northeast corner of Sixth and Pike streets was purchased at a Sheriff's sale by T. M. Daly, the attorney, on the writ, for $12,150. The house was sold to satisfy a judgment of $13,479.80.

The Somerset Closed.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Somerset theater owned by Messrs. Steinberg and Hopkins has been temporily closed. It is reported that this was due to the failure to meet the interest on the mortgage.

"Liberty" in Kensington, Pa.

Kensington, Pa., William Jones, of the Palmer theater in Kensington had a successful opening of the initial showing of the Universal's latest serial "Liberty." Elaborate stage decorations and Miss Liberty surrounded by a beautiful patriotic display helped to introduce the new serial with much pomp

R. Bloomgarden Believes in Big Films.

West Philadelphia, Pa.—There are no photoplays too big or too great to handle says Robert Bloomgarden of the Imperial theater in West Philadelphia. Recently he has presented "The Ne'er Do Well," Pavlowa, in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," and would be willing to book "The Birth of a Nation" if he could secure it. The big shows pay and draw tremendous crowds for him. Twenty thousand was recently spent in redecorations and improvements here.

Kalem's "Police Reporter" Series a Hit.

George T. Ames, general manager of the local General Film exchange, has had considerable demand for bookings on the new Kalem series entitled "Grant, the Police Reporter." At a recent private review by a body of newspaper men the opinion was expressed that in action, climaxes and thrills these one reel pictures contained enough material for any ordinary five reel feature. Special news publicity is also being given to the newspapers to introduce it to the public.

A. Greenberg Enlarging His Theater.

Camden, N. J.—Abe Greenberg, of Camden, N. J., is at present enlarging his Grand theater to twice the present size.

Carr & Shad's New House.

Reading, Pa.—Messrs. Carr and Shad, of Reading, Pa., are building a 2,000 seat motion picture theater which will contain all of the innovations and be strictly up-to-date. They have already contracted for the Paramount program six days a week.

Big Business for K. E. S. E.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Harry Scott of the K. E. S. E. service has had no difficulty handling in a very efficient manner their increased output of releases, considering their present cramped quarters. "The Country that God Forgot," a Selig masterpiece feature, is booking heavily.

Reservations by wire are continually coming in on the new Musty Suffer series featuring Harry Watson. These comedies have been continually on the go since they were first introduced here.

Herbert R. Lewis Opens "Liberty."

Philadelphia, Pa.—Herbert R. Lewis of the Tivoli theater, 128 Fairmount, reports a very satisfactory opening with the new serial "Liberty." Since this theater has been taken over by him he has had considerable amount of success. Mr. Lewis exhibited pictures at the Twentieth Century club, of Lonsdowne, Pa., at 15 and 25 cents admission before coming to Philadelphia.

Dembow's Big Increase.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. Dembow's of the Wm. Fox exchange has increased their business over 100 per cent. during the past month. On many occasions exhibitors find much difficulty in securing open dates.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

H. M. Osborn's Hobby.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Getting the vaudeville houses to book Pathe serials has been H. M. Osborn's hobby. "The Shielding Shadow," the latest Pathe serial has already been placed in a very large number of local and out of town theaters. In addition the following vaudeville houses have also booked it: Nixon's, Keystone, Keith's Bijou, Allegheny, Globe, Crooskey's and Sablosky's vaudeville theaters out of town.

Washington's Film Exchange Building

Many Enquiries About Possibilities from Film Men—Managers Don't Want to Be Held at Landlord's Mercies—The New Fire Regulations.

Washington, D. C.—Things have been coming so thick and fast of late that it is pretty hard to keep up with all the reports of proposed construction work. Following the appearance in The Moving Picture World, October 14 of the article "New Fire Regulations in Washington, D. C.," the Washington office has received many inquiries as to the possibilities of the erection of a "film building" in the near future.

It seems that the exchange managers are not at all pleased with such proposed regulations as have come to their attention, believing that their requirements will work to the disadvantage of the industry. As one exchange manager put it, there is the likelihood of a condition arising that would necessitate the renting of quarters in one particular building erected in compliance with the regulations, where they would be at the mercy of the landlord, as regards rent in particular. They would have to comply with the requirements of the person or persons owning the building, for there would be no other place in the city to which they could move should differences arise between landlord and tenant.

Regulations May Make Some Move Away.

There are among the exchange managers several who state that in the event of these regulations proving irksome they will withdraw their headquarters from Washington and locate in Baltimore. They look upon the regulations as being very distasteful, and point out that there has never been a conflagration in a Washington exchange, that the fire regulations as they at present exist are ample, and that they co-operate with the Fire Department officials in minimizing the possibility of fire.

It is now thought to be certain that the regulations referred to in the October 14 article will be adopted at an early date, and it is said that immediately thereafter work will be commenced on a building that will comply in all respects therewith.

A number of projects have been reported from time to time, but none of these have yet materialized. One seems sure that J. Tom Moore is to erect a 418-420 Eighth street northwest, directly back of the Garden theater. It is to be remembered that some time ago Mr. Moore bought this property to prevent the erection of a theater that would threaten his own business. He is now desirous of realizing on his investment and has offered the property to various promoters, who have not as yet taken advantage of the opportunity. Mr. Moore now states that, as all options have expired, he is going ahead with the erection of a building 51 feet by 100 feet on this site. The building will be from five to seven stories in height and, when completed, will be divided to meet the desires of the lessees. There will be all facilities for carrying on the film business in the most efficient manner, such as elevator service, express service, etc., and, best of all, Mr. Moore states that this space will be available to the exchange men at the same rate of rental as they are now paying. This is the fairest proposition of all. If all plans go to completion, the exchanges would be located in a modern building, having every convenience, at no advance in their overhead expenses because of such a move.

On the first floor there would be the exhibiting room and, in all probability, a cigar stand, news stand and lunch room. According to the plans of B. Stanley Simmons, the cost of putting up such a building would be $10,000 a floor.

J. Leo Yates Is Dead.

Washington, D. C.—The sympathy of everyone connected with the moving picture industry in the National Capital is with the widow of J. Leo Yates, for the latter passed away on October 11, after an illness of several months. Mr. Yates was one of the best liked Washington film exchange managers, for he was of the type that is always willing to meet the other fellow a little more than half way, and a more charitable man could not be found. From the latter part of June, 1915, to within a few weeks of his death, Mr. Yates was manager of the Washington Film Exchange, distributor of the Universal.

He started in the moving picture business with the General Film a little over seven years ago, as a bookkeeper. After a few months of desk work, he was made a traveling representative and later, assistant manager. After serving in the latter capacity for some time, he was sent to Baltimore to take charge of the branch there. He went to the United Film as traveling representative, remaining with that concern until assuming the management of the Washington film exchange. He is survived by his wife and daughter. Mr. Yates was a native Washingtonian, being born in this city September 29, 1879.

Crandall's "Reel News."

Washington, D. C.—Crandall has a new job, or, at least he is supposed to do something as head of the organization which produces "The Reel News," quite a good-sized booklet containing an untold quantity of advertising, and after one has waded through a lot of space, if he is lucky he will find the programs of Crandall's, Ninth and E streets northwest; the Apollo, 624 H street northeast, the Avenue Grand, 645 Pennsylvania avenue, southeast, and the Savoy, at Fourteenth street and Columbia road, northwest. In congratulating Mr. Crandall on his latest achievement, may we suggest to him that he put these programs in slightly heavier type, that the writer may know from which theater to select his evening's entertainment.

The publication made its appearance with the new month. A. L. Richmond is its editor, while Maurice Auerbach looks after the advertising and business management. Of course, it is a house organ.

Admission Prices Up at Campbell's Olympic

Public's Demand for Good Music and Other Expensive Adjuncts to Picture Shows Has Made Higher Prices of Admission Necessary.

Washington, D. C.—There has been a marked tendency of late all along the line to increase admission charges to keep up with the "high cost of doing business." The latest convert to this is "Bob" Campbell, of the Olympic theater. "The public demands many things of the exhibitors," said Mr. Campbell when queried by the World correspondent, "particularly good music. We have always endeavored to comply with the requests of our patrons, but it is a hard matter, particularly in a neighborhood house such as ours, to furnish a high grade program of pictures and assume other increased overhead expenses without making a compensating increase in the charge of admission.

"We have put in a four piece orchestra, where we formerly had but a piano to accompany the pictures, and have contracted for an earlier run of films. In addition to this, the Olympic has been given an overhauling, and both the interior and exterior redecorated. That the public is highly appreciative of our efforts is shown by the fact that, although we have increased our prices to 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children, there has been no noticeable falling off of attendance. We have found that give the public what they want and they will pay any reasonable price."

Manager Spurrier Dines Employes.

Washington, D. C.—Frank B. Spurrier was the host at a dinner party held at Castelli's on Saturday, Otober 14, given to the dozen employes of the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E exchange. There is a meeting held each week by the exchange, at which the employes discuss various problems that arise from time to time and exchange ideas for the betterment of the service. The principal topic at this dinner-meeting was this: How can the shipping department have automatically brought to its attention, seven days before the date of showing a particular feature, the need to send the necessary photographs to the exhibitor? It seems that often an exhibitor will get paper, but the photographs will be omitted, and it is to obviate this that Manager Spurrier has called upon his assistants to submit suggestions, and a prize was offered for that suggestion which will work out best.

Those present were: Samuel J. Mayer, Alan J. Bachrach, N. Glaser, J. W. Almony, S. Blumenthal, L. Gooding, W. E. Ivins, Miss M. Bailey, Miss Carrico and Miss Walker.

Tom Moore to Build New Theater

Washington Exhibitor Has Closed a Deal for Lease of Property on Ninth Street and Will Build a Splendid Theater with Seats for 3,250 Persons—Intends to Ask from Twenty-Five to Fifty Cents Admission.

By Charles L. Linz, 722 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"Tom" Moore, of the Garden, Strand and Plaza theaters, is announcing the closing of a deal whereby he secures the lease on additional property on Ninth street, which will bring about the realization of his dream contemplating the erection of a motion picture theater of the New York Strand type. This property lies on the east side of Ninth street, between D and E streets.

Mr. Moore's plans call for a house that will seat about 3,250 persons, and it is to be modern in every particular. One of the features of the theater will be an orchestra of twenty pieces, and a $15,000 Estey organ. Photoplays there are to be given long runs, with special stage settings and many new ideas and innovations.

The auditorium will have a breadth of 100 feet, and a depth of 160 feet. There will be a balcony, boxes, and mezzanine boxes. The entrance to the theater will have a breadth of 100 feet and a depth of 40 feet. It will be several months before actual work can be commenced. In speaking of the delay, Mr. Moore said that in order to secure immediate possession of the property, he would have been compelled to pay the equivalent of two or three years' rent to obtain the leases. All of these leases will expire not later than May of next year, and there is nothing to prevent him going ahead before that time and building an auditorium; it is the entrance that will delay him.

The admission to this theater will be twenty-five, thirty-five and fifty cents, the first named being for matinees.

Shortly after commencing the work of building the new house, which will be known as Moore's theater, many improvements will be made to the Strand theater, at the corner of Ninth and D streets northwest. The seating capacity of the house will be increased to 2,755, on two floors, and there will be many innovations that will bring this theater into greater popularity.

Mr. Moore personally will assume the management of the new theater and thereafter the care of the other three houses will devolve upon Arthur Robb, the present manager of the Garden theater, for Mr. Moore, in speaking to the Moving Picture World representative, stated that Mr. Robb would be appointed president and general manager of the business that includes the Garden, Strand and Plaza theaters.

Claims on Partly Damaged Mail.

Washington, D. C.—Members of the industry are probably under the impression that claims against the Post Office Department for indemnity when insured and C. O. D. parcels are received by them in a damaged condition, will not be entertained unless such parcels are refused, is incorrect, according to a statement from Assistant Postmaster General Dockery.

Postal employes have been instructed to explain to the addressees in every such instance that acceptance of the parcel will in no way invalidate any claim for indemnity that might otherwise be payable, but that, on the other hand, refusal of the article will necessitate that payment by the senders of the same, amount of postage required for its original transmission in order that the parcel may be returned to them for determination of the extent of damage and filing of claim. It is to be made clear that indemnity is payable for partial as well as total damage to parcels mailed on and after August 8, 1916, and that acceptance of parcels by addressees enables damage claims to be filed earlier than would otherwise be possible, and hence to be adjusted earlier. Addressees are also to be advised that if they accept damaged articles they should communicate with the senders, and, if claim is filed, either have themselves designated by the senders as the ones to whom indemnity should be paid or arrange to have the senders receive the indemnity and adjust the matter direct with them.

District Licenses Expire.

Washington, D. C.—William P. Richards, Assessor of the District of Columbia, has just issued a notice calling attention to the fact that on October 31, all licenses issued from his office to proprietors of theaters will expire. All motion picture exhibitors desiring to continue in business after that date, he states, must promptly renew their licenses. This is a city and not a Federal tax.

John Payette Goes to Pathe.

Washington, D. C.—John Payette has severed his connection with the firm of Hyman & Payette and has joined the sales force of Pathe, Inc. Mr. Payette is one of the best known members of the film industry in this territory. He started in several years ago as manager of a local theater. He later entered the employ of the General Film, and became assistant manager of the Washington Exchange, and was at one time in charge of the Baltimore branch. When Mr. Wyman organized the Hy Art Masterpiece Company, Mr. Payette joined him as one of the officers of the corporation. Some months ago both withdrew from the company and organized an independent exchange. This partnership has since been dissolved, and Mr. Payette will cover Virginia and a part of West Virginia for his new employers.

George W. Smiley, who has been covering the Virginia territory, has been given Maryland in which to travel. This is highly desirable to him for, being a "family man," it gives him better opportunities to be home occasionally.

Victor Abbey's Paper Goes Prepaid.

Washington, D. C.—The serial department of the Mutual, of which Victor L. Abbey is in charge, is sending out all paper on the Mutual serials by parcel post, prepaying the charges with the understanding that the exhibitors will return it in the same manner. In speaking of the change, Mr. Abbey said that from time to time many complaints have reached his desk of the high cost of sending paper by express, there being a minimum charge of twenty-five cents, and he has also found that a great saving to the exchange would result.

"Daughter of the Gods" Coming to the Pitt

Manager Patch Promises the Great Fox Spectacle Beginning Tuesday, October 24—Will Have a Run of Several Weeks.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Manager William Moore Patch, of the Pitt theater, Seventh street and Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., has announced the first production of the Annette Kellermann spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods," for Tuesday evening, October 24, having arranged to stage the production on a lavish scale for a run of four or five weeks. William Fox, the producer, will attend the Pittsburgh premier himself, and will bring his entire business and producing staff with him. Elaborate plans are being completed by Manager Patch in the way of stage sets, music and a trained ballet, which promise to eclipse any former achievements in presenting films at the Pitt. New and striking decorations will be used throughout the theater. Robert Hood Bowers, the composer, who has arranged a special score for "A Daughter of the Gods," will conduct on the opening evening. Thereafter Carl Bernthaler, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will have charge of the Pitt theater orchestra, which will be increased for the Kellermann production from thirty musicians to forty. The seat sale opened October 16, and indications are that all previous records will be broken.

Exit the Princess Theater.

Paris, Pa.—The Princess theater, St. Paris, O., has been discontinued and the house sold by its owner, George W. Williams. The theater will not be reopened, as the building is to be remodeled into offices.

School Matinees at the Grand.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Grand opera house, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, the large and magnificent photoplay theater of the Harry Davis interests, has introduced a novel and attractive idea especially for the edification of the school children. The new policy consists of a series of Saturday afternoon matinees, starting October 14, when in addition to the regular program of Triangle, Metro and World dramas a special feature of comedy reels of the highest type is presented. Manager William Mason states that the aim is to maintain a uniquely high standard of wholesomeness, with suitable pictures that have a strong and beneficent appeal to the youngsters and that are above criticism from particular parents.

Cameras and Lenses Stolen.

Aspinwall, Pa.—The studios of the Photoplay Entertainment Co., at Aspinwall, near Pittsburgh, Pa., were rifled by Burglars recently and property valued at between $500 and $600 was stolen. Two wagons are said to have been used to carry off the paraphernalia, including several cameras and lenses. The robbery was not discovered until the following day, when a camera man entered the studio to get his apparatus to take pictures of the preparedness camp at Ross, nearby. Investigation disclosed that even the wigs and grease paints used by the actors had been carried away.

Family's Attractive New Front.

Grove City, Pa.—The Family theater, Grove City, Pa., has been improved with a beautiful and imposing new front. This house is one of the most popular in its locality and the management has spared no expense in keeping it up-to-date in every respect. The redecoration and addition of new equipment lends the theater an attractive appearance both inside and out. Feature pictures are shown daily and the admission price is 10 cents.

"The Chattel' at the Cameraphone.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Cameraphone theater, East End, Pittsburgh, Pa., is conducting an unusually strong newspaper advertising campaign for the presentation of "The Chattel," the Vitagraph Company's production featuring E. H. Sothern. Manager H. B. Kester will run the picture four days beginning October 16. A large orchestra has been secured and special decorations will be used which will probably set a new mark.

Mr. Seelye has been as far west as Kansas City and was on his way home to New York. He visited Shea's Hippodrome and with Mr. Shea and Morgan took an automobile trip about the city. He was particularly optimistic about the bookings of the Pathe serial release, "The Shielding Shadow." He was also enthusiastic over the newest Gold Rooster release, "The Light that Failed," by Rudyard Kipling. He said the Boston theater, of Boston, Mass., seating 4,000, had booked this feature for a solid week.

F. Leonard to Travel for Metro.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Frank Leonard has been appointed traveling representative of the Metro pictures in this territory.

Al Becker of the Becker Feature Film, Buffalo, has returned from a visit to his home in New York.

Buffalo, N. Y.—M. Bloom has reopened the Happy Hour theater of Fulton, N. Y. He has also taken over the Quirk theater of that town.

The Family theater, Batavia, in charge of Mr. Stacey, is having a new organ installed.

Buffalo Screeners Prepare for Annual Ball

Mr. Christoffers showed your correspondent ten eliminations on which the Pennsylvania censors had taken action this week.

E. L. Hyman in New York City.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Edward L. Hyman, manager of Michael H. Mark's New Victoria theater, Buffalo, is spending his vacation in New York City. While there he also will pick up some new ideas and bookings for the winter season.

At the Triangle Exchange.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Fred C. Bitner, of the Havens theater, Olean, was a caller on George A. Hickey, manager of the Triangle Film, Buffalo.

"We run legitimate shows at the Havens regularly and moving pictures on dark nights," said Mr. Bitner. "We were one of the first customers of the Triangle and are still using this service."

Mr. Hickey, who was formerly with the Unicorn Film, has sent his congratulations to Fred Murphy, who has been appointed general manager of that corporation. Another Triangle caller was Edgar Weill, of the Strand theater, Syracuse.

H. C. Sandstrom Buys the Movie.

Jamestown, N. Y.—H. C. Sandstrom of Warren, Pa., has taken over the Movie [illegible] been closed for some time. He recently visited the Buffalo exchanges to line up good material for his shows. This house has been closed for some time. He was formerly proprietor of the Harald theater of Warren, Pa. He was the first exhibitor there, for he conducted the Theatorium of Warren in the early days.

Recent Callers in Buffalo.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Joseph J. Samuth, representing Williamson Bros., of the submarine motion pictures, was a recent visitor in Buffalo. Other callers were George Germain and Archie Moses of the Fox film.

Basil Brady.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"Thirty-two houses in this territory are showing the Beatrice Fairfax series," said Basil Brady, representative of the International Film Service here. A picture of Mr. Brady appears herewith. He reports that Manager Seeley of the new Picadilly moving picture theater, which will open in Rochester in November, has signed contracts for the Hearst International News. The Picadilly will be among the largest and finest theaters in the country. The Palace has the first showing of the Hearst News in Buffalo.

Toronto Theaters and Publishers at Odds

Exhibitors and Newspapers Grow Warm Over Increased Rates Asked for Local Display Advertisements.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E. Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO, Ont.—Practically every theater in Toronto engaged in a clash of words with the publishers of local daily newspapers during the early part of October when the public journals advised the managers that rates for amusement display advertising would be doubled. "Too much," declared both the legitimate and film houses and forthwith canceled all contracts for space except those for the Sunday editions. The theaters did not discontinue the recognition of newspaper passes and a number of managers expressed the opinion that an early adjustment would be made.

Premier Screenings.

Toronto, Ont.—Prominent representatives of the state were present at a private showing of the official British pictures depicting the fighting on the Somme in France.

An unusual trade show also held at the Regent was the screening of the first seven episodes of "The Scarlet Runner" under the personal auspices of W. C. Gookin, Canadian general manager for the Greater Vitagraph. A goodly representation of the trade saw the fourteen reels.

The first release of the film spectacle, "The Fall of a Nation," was on Monday, October 9th, when it was shown at the Strand theater, Toronto, and for the remainder of the week. Crowds lined the street each night.

Of Interest About Toronto Film Men.

Toronto, Ont.—E. D. Bissell, manager of the Strand theater, Camp Borden, made such a good fist of a difficult proposition during the past summer that he was soon grabbed up by an exchange manager. In other words, Bissell has become cashier of the Canadian head-office of the Greater Vitagraph at Toronto. He sat on his new chair on Thursday, October 5th.

Another promotion has come the way of W. A. Sault, who has been made manager of the Toronto branch of the General Film.

On top of this let it be announced that R. S. Marvin, big gun of the Toronto theater field and manager, incidentally, of the Strand here, has obtained possession of the Beaver theater. The latter is a big house in West Toronto. Marvin secured the Beaver before he had a manager for it. It was opened early on Monday, October 9, under Marvin's personal direction.

The Famous Players Film Service, Limited, has arranged for the local release of the International News Weekly, according to word passed out from the office of this exchange at 12 Queen street east. Manager Phil. Kauffman of Famous Players is also handling the official British feature, "The Battle of the Somme," the first release of which went to the new Regent theater for the week of October 16. It was shown under the auspices of The Toronto World.

Loew's theater, Toronto, adopted a new film policy on October 2nd when it was decided to include a five-reel feature in the regular program along with sundry other short subjects including Mutual Chaplins. The features are being booked on the open market. For the first time in many weeks, Loew's is not showing a film serial.

A prominent visitor in Toronto recently was William Niles of the War Film Syndicate, Chicago.

The Imperial Has New Front.

Toronto, Ont.—The Imperial theater, Queen street east, is now proudly displaying a new front as a result of desire for improvement on the part of Manager Sturgis. This house was originally known as the St. Paul's theater and was operated by a nearby Roman Catholic church which owns the property. Several interior refinements have been added to the premises.

"Nation" Film Fight in Ohio

Epoch Company's Supreme Court Suit Is Letting More Light in on the Big Censorship Controversy—Industrial Commission Passes a Resolution Disclaiming the Answer of Attorney General to the Suit.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, O.—The long controversy over the right to show the motion picture play, "The Birth of a Nation," in Ohio, has taken a new and peculiar turn. There is pending at present in the Supreme Court here an action by the Epoch Producing Corporation, of New York, against the Industrial Commission of Ohio and Charles G. Williams, Maude Murray Miller and W. R. Wilson, who constitute the Ohio Board of Censors.

Last week the Industrial Commission passed a resolution declaring it never authorized Attorney General Edward C. Turner to file the sort of an answer against the Epoch Producing Corporation's suit that he did draft. The resolution occasioned a hot fight in the commission. It was voted for by two Democratic members and opposed by the one Republican member on the ground that it served no useful purpose.

The resolution says that Turner's answer sets forth allegations that the Industrial Commission never authorized, because the latter claims never to have officially reviewed the picture in question. In concludes thus:

"Therefore, be it resolved by the Industrial Commission of Ohio that the use of the allegations hereinbefore set forth by the Honorable Edward C. Turner, Attorney General of the State of Ohio, were wholly unathorized and that said pretended answer insofar as the allegations hereinbefore set forth are concerned is not the answer of the Industrial Commission of Ohio."

Thus far the Industrial Commission has done nothing more than act on the resolution, declaring the Turner answer to the Supreme Court action to be unauthorized. Whether the commission will take court action has not been made known.

Lakewood Theater and Union Still at Odds

Theater's Management Had Been Branded as Unfair—Judge Kennedy Issues an Injunction Against Union, But Advises Compromise.

Cleveland, O.—Members of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and the managers of the Lucier motion picture theather in Lakewood, a suburb of Cleveland ,failed to get together and settle their grievances as they were requested to by Judge Thomas Kennedy, of the Cuyahoga county court of common pleas, when he issued an injunction against the union October 5.

The union had declared the management of the theater, Burt C. Maheu, Arthur C. Maheu and C. Maheu, had been unfair to labor because one of the managers had assumed the work of running the motion picture machine. The union was accused of allowing its members to congregate on the sidewalk, and of distributing cards implying that the theater was an unsafe place.

"You can picket men near the theater to tell the public that the managers are unfair to union labor," Judge Kennedy ruled, "but the fact that the work of running the film machine is done by one of the partners or members of the family sholl not be considered as unfair to union labor."

Cleveland Pathe Moves.

Cleveland, O.—The Cleveland Pathe exchange has moved to new and well furnished quarters in the Belmont building, on Prospect avenue, already the home of a number of other motion picture film exchanges.

Dramatic Club Takes Film Tyros.

Cleveland, O.—Four active participants in the Cleveland Plain Dealer picture, "The Love Chase," will play important roles in "Rolling Stones," to be presented about November 15 by the Cleveland Dramatic Club. This will be the first presentation of this play by amateurs. "The Love Chase" players, who did well in their motion picture roles and are now to try the "legit," are Josephine Day, Betty Jones, Harry D. Stone and Ernie Willson. Two performances will be given at the Colonial theater.

A Children's Program Circuit.

Cleveland, O.—It remained for a woman, Miss Bertha Thompson,, of Springfield, to start a child's motion picture circuit. She has already initiated her program at the Clifford theater in Urbana, O. She has signed up a circuit of theaters in towns and cities of the state, several of them adjacent to Cleveland, to devote the mornings, afternoons and, when possible, the evenings to her program for children and women. Fairy stories, some of them adapted by Miss Thompson, travel pictures, comedies and the most suitable regular dramas will be shown in pictures on the new circuit. Under her plan she can rent the pictures by long time schedule and at reduced rates.

INDIANA FILM NOTES.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

Messner Theater Nearly Ready.

ATTICA, IND.—The interior work on the Messner theater is progressing rapidly and the management expects to open the house within the next two weeks.

Manager H. E. Lerner Resigns.

Elkhart, Ind.—Harry E. Lerner, has resigned as manager of the Bucklen theater, a photoplay house, and has purchased Unger Brothers' billiard parlor at 503 South Main street. His successor has not been named.

Fort Wayne House Changes Hands.

For Wayne, Ind.—By a deal consummated last week, a number of Fort Wayne business men came into possession of B. H. Barnett's interest in the New Palace motion picture and vaudeville theater. It is understood that a stock company will be formed to continue the operation of the popular playhouse. The consideration involved was not made public.

Mr. Barnett, after closing the deal, resigned as secretary of the concern, and J. J. DeWald was elected in his place.

Redecorating Jefferson Theater.

Goshen, Ind.—While in the city last week, Charles J. Allhardt, of South Bend, head of the Goshen Amusement company, owners of the Jefferson theater property, made arrangements for the redecorating of the lobby and interior of the house. The large hall in the room above the theater also will be redecorated and will be used for dances and social gatherings. The motion picture operator's booth will be removed from the first floor of the theater to the balcony, where it was formerly located. Robert Codd, manager of the theater, has arranged for a number of feature films for the next few weeks.

Cincinnati Expects New Theater Soon

Persistent Rumor Foretells a New House to Be Built by St. Louis Interests—Site of Indian Hotel Said to Have Been Chosen.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CINCINNATI, O.—On the principle that where there is much smoke there must be some fire, it looks as if there might be something doing on West Fifth street in the way of a big new moving picture house. The project has been so often and so persistently rumored that there is undoubtedly knowledge in real estate circles of inquiries for property which would be suitable for the purpose.

It is definitely stated that the property on the south side of Fifth street, between Race and Elm streets, where the old Indiana hotel stands, is under consideration for a long-time lease by St. Louis interests who desire to construct a large house, to cost not less than $200,000, and have entrances on three streets. In connection with this plan, it is said that a continuation of the Emery arcade, which runs midway of the block between Fifth and Fourth streets and Vine and Race, is proposed, to give the house an easy exit to Race. It is certain that there is searching investigation of some suitable site for a big house going on, as big outsiders seem to have come to the conclusion that Cincinnati needs another up-to-date downtown house.

Norwood Theater Plans Enlargement.

Cincinnati, O.—Plans are under way by which the Consolidated Theater Co. will enlarge the seating capacity of the Norwood theater, at 4630 Montgomery road, by one-third, making it seat 1,000 persons. The company referred to was recently incorporated by I. W. McMahan, Jerome M. Jackson, Charles and Sam Schaengold and Benjamin Bernstein, all well known moving picture and theatrical men, with a capital stock of $50,000, to handle the exhibition ventures of the parties interested, and the acquisition of the house mentioned from the Norwood Amusement Co., the former holding company, was one of the first moves made.

Clifford Norris Struck By Locomotive.

Alliance, O.—Clifford Norris, manager of the Ideal theater, was painfully injured, but had a fortunate escape from death, when he was struck recently by a locomotive at the Pennsylvania railroad station. He had gone to the platform to secure a shipment of films, and stepped backward toward the track just as an engine passed. He sustained a scalp wound, but it is not believed that he was seriously injured.

Local Screeners to Give Ball.

Cincinnati, O.—The Cincinnati Screen Club, which, with Charles Weigel as its new head, numbers some of the livest spirits among the exhibitors, press and film departments of the moving picture business in Cincinnati among its membership, is virtually decided upon its long-discussed plan for a screen ball and carnival, to be given some time during the winter. Music Hall is mentioned as the only auditorium in the city large enough for an affair of the magniture contemplated, and one of the stunts which the film men propose to stage is a complete studio set, in which pictures will be taken as in "real life."

Illinois Theater Changes.

By Frank H Madison.

Chillicothe, Ill.—Charles Varner has started to tear down the theater he purchased a few months ago.

Metropolis, Ill.—The building occupied by the Star theater here was condemned of unsafe conditions, but steps have been taken to have it repaired.

Marion, Ill.—Robert T. Hopkins has sold the Egyptian theater to D. E. Thomas and A. C. Jones.

Oregon, Ill.—Arthur Locke has leased the Family theater for two years.

Troy, Ill.—Joseph Rieth of Highland has opened the Gem theater here. It is located in what has been known as the Opera House.

Mt. Vernon, Ill.—The Gem theater has been sold to Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Vandegrift who, after they had got the fair week business, closed it for improvements. The name probably will be changed.

Irving, Ill.—Walter V. Berry and C. O. Carriker have purchased the moving picture show here from Chester Kelly.

Brockton, Ill.—Gillis & Dunbar, who have been operating an airdome picture show, have moved into winter quarters.

Algonquin, Ill.—A moving picture show has been opened in the Dehmlow Building.

Alton, Ill.—The Temple theater, which has been redecorated, has been reopened. Among the attractions booked for the winter season is "Ramona."

Sterling, Ill.—Greenough & Flinn, proprietors of the Grand theater, have made plans for a fifty-foot extension to their building, which will add several hundred to the seating capacity. A new lobby will be made, a lighting system and new ventilation system will be installed. Safety for patrons is assured by the fact that Assistant State Fire Marshal Morgaridge, who is a former resident of Sterling, has gone over the plans.

New Michigan Theaters—Notes

Manistique, Mich.—Perkins & Kinsley have let the contract for their new theater and expect to open it about Thanksgiving.

Iron Mountain, Mich.—A. E. Brauns expects to open his new moving picture theater and opera house about December 1. It is being constructed of brick and tile and will seat about 1,200 persons.

Birmingham, Mich.—E. R. Keef is now manager of the Temple theater, succeeding Mr. Baechle.

Manistique, Mich.—The Grand theater has been opened here.

Detroit's Majestic Asks 25 Cents

Announcement of Increase in Admission Prices Comes with Promise of First Runs on Paramount Pictures and the Mary Pickford Films—Best Possible Entertainment Goes with the Higher Price Asked.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—One of the biggest pieces of news that has broken in Detroit for some time is the Majestic theater's increase of admission and its announcement that it has secured first-run on Paramount pictures as well as the new Mary Pickford features.

The Majestic is conceded by "men who know" to be one of our finest examples of motion picture theaters—it differs from most theaters in its amphitheater style of construction, and is successful despite the fact that it is a mile and a half from the heart of the city. On October 2 the Majestic theater raised its prices to 25 cents for every seat, except boxes, at the evening performances, with matinee prices remaining at 10 cents. When this was done, the following announcement was made to its patrons:

"There may be some Majestic patrons who will wonder why all seats have recently been advanced to 25 cents. It has always been the aim of the management to provide the very best possible entertainment. This policy has resulted in an increase in the price of films alone more than double the amount we spent some months ago. The increased cost of living has forced us to voluntarily raise the wages of our entire staff. In addition to this, we recently have added to our orchestra four of the best soloists obtainable in the United States. From the opening of the Majestic in April, 1915, we have tried to set the pace in the way of motion picture entertainment in the city of Detroit. How well we have succeeded is indicated by our ever increasing patronage."

The Majestic continues its first-run franchise on Triangle features, playing each week its choice of the two programs and paying for both services. In other words, the Majestic is paying for two features each week and using one in order to be absolutely certain of a good box-office attraction every week.

Noticeable Reduction in Small Theaters.

Detroit, Mich.—The State Fire Marshal's office in Detroit is making its semi-annual inspection of motion picture theaters. As far as the survey has progressed conditions are good, deputies say. A noticeable reduction in the number of small theaters has been found. The tendency is toward larger and newer theaters seating 1,000 and up. With this change fire dangers are reduced, as all new theaters are built according to plans approved by the fire department.

A Proof of Bigness in Showmanship.

Detroit, Mich.—While in New York the first week of October, the writer met Harry I. Garson, general director of the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, and Hugo Kalsow, musical director of that playhouse, at the Hotel Knickerbocker. "What's Mr. Kalsow doing in New York?" the writer asked of Mr. Garson. "Just down here to pick out some music for "The Common Law." How many theater owners throughout the country are "big" enough to send their musical directors or even their managers to New York or other cities occasionally for the purpose of broadening out their ideas. We just can't fail to recognize the fact that this man Garson is a real showman.

H. W. Smith Managing Drury Lane.

Detroit, Mich.—H. W. Smith is now manager of the new Drury Lane theater, Detroit, which recently went into the control of George Weeks. Mr. Smith will have full charge, Mr. Weeks being inactive. For some time Mr. Smith has been connected with the Detroit Metro exchange, and was previously manager of the Garden and Empire theaters in Detroit.

Bigger Things Coming for Picture Men.

Detroit, Mich.—A quiet, unassuming person in Detroit, and yet one who is an important factor in filmdom, is J. A. Fitzgerald, vice-president and on the directorate of the Metro Film Corporation, as well as financially interested in the Michigan Metro Corporation. He was one of the original crowd that started the Detroit Universal exchange. Besides his extensive film interests he operates a chain of cafeterias and restaurants in Detroit. "From the very start I could see a big future to the motion picture industry, and even today with all of the unsettled conditions I look for bigger things than ever in the next five years. There are unlimited possibilities to this business. We know that the people like to see motion pictures. It is just a question of supplying them with the sort of pictures that they should have. Productions must be good, of course, but there must also be co-operation between the porducer and the exhibitor.

Reel Fellows Club Hold Meeting.

Detroit, Mich.—The Reel Fellows Club, comprising the Detroit exchange managers, met at the Alt Heidelberg, last week, and had present their salesmen and traveling representatives. The purpose of the meeting was to impress upon these road ambassadors that they must be absolutely right in every statement they make and under no circumstances must there be misrepresentations of any kind. Of late there have been many false rumors circulated among exhibitors by some traveling representatives which have caused considerable trouble.

Serial at the Liberty and the Knickerbocker.

Detroit, Mich.—Two high-class motion picture theaters of Detroit that heretofore have kept clear of running serial photoplays have signed contracts for "The Shielding Shadow" serial now being produced by Pathe. These theaters are the Liberty, Bates and Farmer streets, and Knickerbocker, East Jefferson avenue.

Makes Films Pay His Way Through College

Intelligent Student at Illinois State University Opens a Show in Nearby Town—Will Run Three Nights a Week.

By Frank H Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

DELAND, ILL.—The bright youth of today who hopes to pay his way through college does not find it necessary to fire the furnace or wait on tables. Instead he looks out a live small town not too distant from the college city and gives the inhabitants a moving picture show two or three times a week. E. C. Furrer, of Easton, Ill., a student in the engineering school at the University of Illinois at Champaign, has rented a building here, installed 200 opera chairs and will give shows Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday nights.

Censorship and Home Talent Films.

Rock Island, Ill.—It is seldom that a home talent photoplay includes anything that might be termed objectionable, but "The Maid of the Mississippi," which was produced by the Rock Island Club, and exhibited at the Strand theater, narrowly escaped the hand of the censor. It lacks the traditional happy ending, a country maiden ending her troubles in the dark waters. The mayor finally passed the film.

Illinois History in Film.

Springfield, Ill.—The plan of the Illinois Centennial Commission, noted in The World two weeks ago, to make a historical picture, has been broadened and it is hoped to have the film ready by the time of the celebration in 1918. The films will recite the full history of the state from 1818 to 1918, taking in events such as the battle of Starved Rock, the massacre at Wood River, assassination of Lovejoy at Alton, the Chicago fire, the killing of the Mormons and driving them out of the state, the expulsion of the Black Hawk the birthplace, life and death of Lincoln and noted events in the life of Grant, the exploitation of the Legend of the Piasa Bird, the growth of the farming industry from the sickle to the harvester and thresher combined, transportation from the ox team to the beautiful palace cars now upon the railroads, from the canoe to the great steamboats now plying Illinois rivers, and things along this line, all true events connected with the history of the state.

Boehringer Interests Capitalized

New Orleans Amusement Company Has Completed Organization with a Capital of $125,000—All Stock Has Been Subscribed and None Is on the Market—Alex. Grouchy, Jr., Is President, Ernst Boehringer Is Vice-President.

By N. E. Thatcher, Times-Picayune, New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Quite the most important event in motion picture circles in this territory that has occurred in a long time is the organization of the Boehringer Amusement Company, which has been in the process of formation for some time, but which has not been in shape to announce its policies until Thursday, October 5. The company is capitalized at $125,000 and the greater portion of the stock has been subscribed and the money is now in the treasury. The remainder of the stock is to be distributed among favored persons and none of it has gone begging. The investment gains its attraction from the wonderful success that has attended the operation of the Triangle theater under the management of Ernst Boehringer since it was changed from a low-class burlesque theater with an unsavory name. It is the common custom to turn people away every night, and on Sundays the sale of tickets is stopped at intervals of such frequency as to give a proprietor of grasping disposition a bad attack of heart failure.

Ernst Boehringer.

Some of the best-known and strongest financiers of Louisiana are identified with the new company. Its officers are Alex Grouchy, Jr., of Baton Rouge, president; Ernst Boehringer, New Orleans, vice-president and general manager, and A. F. Cazedessus, cashier of the Bank of Baton Rouge, secretary and treasurer. The new company will operate the Liberty, the Triangle and the Columbia theaters, and each of these theaters will be conducted on the highest plane and be equipped with every modern appliance for the pleasure and comfort of its patrons.

New Liberty Theater.

On October 2 the work of demolishing the old Victoria hotel in St. Charles street to make a site for the new Liberty theater, was commenced, and it is to be pushed with vigor until the building is completed. The structure will be devoted to motion pictures exclusively and it is the intention of the Boehringer Amusement Company to make it the most complete motion picture theater in the South. It will be 50x172 feet and is to be constructed of steel and concrete, contracts for the material having been let some months ago. It will have a seating capacity of 3,000, including the two balconies, and is to be finished in the most attractive modern style.

Winter Business Begins.

New Orleans, La.—Theaters in this city with few exceptions report a marked increase in business with the advent of cooler weather and the return of hundreds of summer tourists to their winter haunts. Some of the poorly-equipped and barn-like concerns are having a hard time of it and two or three of them have recently closed, which is a good thing for the business in general, for it indicates a tightening up of the dignity of the industry, and gives to exhibitors who are enterprising enough to improve their houses some assurance that their efforts will net them an adequate return in increased and better class of patronage.

Times-Picayune Local Films.

New Orleans, La.—The Times-Picayune Photoplay Opportunity feature production in which fifteen young ladies in the four Southern states adjoining New Orleans took part to demonstrate their screen qualifications, will be ready for exhibition before this is read. It is a six-reel story and rather to the surprise of those who witnessed its initial showing, it is a very meritorious production, taking its place with the average feature releases without fear of suffering by comparisons. A two-reel comedy, produced exclusively by employes of the Times-Picayune, has also been finished, and will be used as a "chaser" to the big feature, and the show is already extensively booked in its local territory. The purpose of the newspaper was to give the young ladies an opportunity to demonstrate their ability as actresses if they have any—but it didn't have any fun doing it.

Pushing Work on New Strand.

New Orleans, La.—Work on the new Strand theater is progressing rapidly under the incentive of the Sanger Amusement Company, which is manifesting impatience to have the house finished and to begin business. Very elaborate plans have been made for the operation of the theater, and nothing is to be left undone to make it one of the finest photoplay houses in this section. It is the intention to have the theater ready for business early in February.

A Children's Picture by the Kiddies Themselves.

New Orleans, La.—In order to stimulate interest in the children's matinees, the committee having the project in charge for the Women's Federated Clubs have arranged with a local film manufacturing concern to produce a one-reel picture each week in which none but children who attend the kiddies' matinees take part. These films are to be shown the succeeding week at local play houses and they are awakening strong interest. The children's matinees are evidently assured of success, and censorship talk is correspondingly weakening.

Thelma Theater Sold.

New Orleans, La.—The Thelma theater, one of the most profitable of the suburban houses, has been sold by Mrs. Ed. Walsdorf to Charles Kuntz, an old exhibitor, and he announces his intention of rehabilitating the property.

Atlanta's Smart Set to Make Local Picture

Pleasure of Seeing Itself in Film and Knowledge That Others Will Want to See It Because It Is Smart Leads to Atlanta Society Film Comedy.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Not content with their splendid successes on the speaking stage, such as the recent production of "Prunella," the Atlanta Players' Club is planning to screen a social comedy which will present all of Atlanta society in a local photoplay which will have as its setting the fashionable homes and country seats in and around the city.

The Players' Club has not only decided to begin the production of the play, following a fad which has taken the smart sets of the east by storm, but they have formed definite plans which they are prepared to put into operation at once under the direction of James Calney, whose scenario, "Vice-Versa," has been accepted.

The filming will be done by the Scenic Film Co., and the first appearance of the picture will be in Atlanta to the Players' Club and their invited guests. The play will then be released and the proceeds from the bookings will go into the general fund of the Players' Club for the promotion of amateur talent in acting.

The filming will probably be completed by the 1st of November.

F. Ezell Managing Local Kleine.

Atlanta, Ga.—F. Ezell has been appointed manager of the Kleine Company in Atlanta and will cover six Southern states. Mr. Ezell comes from Charlotte, N. C., and takes charge this week.

Wells Hawks Visits.

Atlanta, Ga.—Wells Hawks, personal representative for Mary Pickford, was in Atlanta this week in the interest of his star and her newly formed film corporation. He is making a nation wide tour for Miss Pickford. Mr. Hawks left Saturday for Birmingham, Ala., and from there will go to New Orleans.

Benefit at the Grand.

Atlanta, Ga.—Sunday afternoon Oct. 7, the Hebrew Orphans' home was the beneficiary of the motion picture entertainment given at the Grand. "Judith of Bethulia" was the attraction, with Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Blanch Sweet and others of equal fame in the cast. A record crowd was in attendance

De Luxe Office in Exchange Building

Atlanta, Ga.—De Luxe attractions have opened an office in the new Exchange building, under the able management of U. T. Koch. Mr. Koch will have charge of six Southern states and have entire distribution of the Clara Kimball Young films. Marvin Barr is the special traveling representative for this company.

Miss Bianca Bak in Charge of Bluebird.

Atlanta, Ga.—Miss Bianca Bak has been appointed manager of the Bluebird Photo Play Company, with headquarters in the new Exchange building. Miss Bak was formerly manager for the Apex Film Company in the South, and won an enviable reputation for straightforward business methods among Southern exhibitors and exchange men.

Indiana Film News Letter

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

New Broadway, at Gary, Opens.

GARY, Ind.—The New Broadway, one of the latest additions to Gary motion picturedom, which was recently completed at a cost of approximately $75,000, opened Friday, October 13, for the first time. Verne U. Young, the owner of the theater, also controls four other Gary theaters.

The theater is located at the northwest corner of seventeenth street and Broadway, and will seat about 800 people. The interior decorations of the house represent a garden, the walls and trellis work over the ceiling representing a sky. The daily program will include both vaudeville and motion pictures during the winter months.

Mathew McBride Buys Ground.

Gary, Ind.—Mathew McBride, proprietor of the Lyric theater, recently purchased two lots on which he will erect a modern moving picture house. The lots are located on the west side of Broadway and Twelfth street in Charles Mest's addition to Gary. Mr. McBride paid $16,000 as the cash consideration for the property.

Nicklo at Linton Now Open.

Linton, Ind.—The Nicklo theater, recently completed, was thrown open to the public Wednesday night, October 11. The new theater has been decorated attractively and is said to be one of the most modernly equipped motion picture houses in the southern part of the State. J. H. Scherer is the manager of the theater.

Milford Theater Sold.

Milford, Ind.—Lewis Rowlibaugh has sold the Milford theater, a motion picture house, to J. W. Estep, a business man of this city.

Suit Over Exhibition of "High Hand."

Terre Haute, Ind.—Charging that their rights to the exhibition of the "High Hand" motion picture film had been encroached upon, the Celebrated Players Film Corporation brought suit last week in the Vigo county Superior court against the Wieland Film exchange, of Pittsburgh, for $100 damages and attached the films which were shown Friday night at the Crescent theater. In the complaint it is set out that the plaintiffs hold the privileges for the exhibition of this picture in the state of Indiana and that the Wieland company was leasing the films in territory that it does not control. No action has been taken on the suit.

For Lower Taxes in Tennessee

Exhibitors Plan to Make Plea Before the Coming State Legislature for a Fairer Distribution of the Tax Burden—Picture Theaters Have Been Bearing More Than Their Share—Discriminating License Fees.

By Ray. Bell Stebbins, Exclusive Nashville Rep.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Word is being [illegible] the state legislature [illegible] exhibitors in the draft[illegible] to amend the tax [illegible] and in the existing Tennessee statutes. The Tennessee legislature will convene in bi-annual session with[illegible] and it is planned by the showmen to go before the lawmakers with a bill to reduce the heavy tax now levied upon monion picture theaters in this state.

It is claimed by the exhibitors that certain provisions contained in the Revenue Bill enacted May 11, 1915, are not fair, inasmuch as such provisions appear unjustly discriminatory in favor of vaudeville houses, etc. For instance, theaters with a seating capacity of 400 or more, operated exclusively for the exhibition of motion pictures, are assessed a tax of $200 annually, regardless of the population (if over 5,000) while ordinary theaters are graded from $10 to $200, according to the size of the town or city. This means that if an exhibitor decides to open a 500 capacity house in a 10,000 town he will have to pay into the state treasury a tax of $200, whereas with an ordinary theater the assessment would be $25.

Another feature to be considered is the fact that the schedule of admission prices maintained by the theaters is invariably far [illegible] of the motion picture houses, and consequently the volume of revenue and resultant profits are much greater in connection with an ordinary theater. It is believed by the picture men that a wide interest can be aroused among the exhibitors of the state, and that some needed legislation will result from their efforts.

Artistic Crescent Lobby Displays.

Nashville, Tenn.— One of the characteristics of the houses operated by the Crescent Amusement company on Fifth avenue is the clearly executed series of lobby displays which appear in connection with features running at these theaters. One of the latest novelties was used in connection with "The Light at Dusk," a Lubin subject. A colored photograph of "The Angelus" was enclosed in a large framework of black velvet, etc., and placed in the lobby, with an electric bell continually tolling. It lent more or less of a sacred atmosphere to the entire theater, and was the subject of much comment.

Another splendid piece of lobby work was the life size Chaplin display, mounted on a step ladder in the corridor of the Elite. Charlie was armed with a broom as a cue stick, and took a stroke at the well known "three balls" every two seconds. The image was an exact replica of the pose caricatured on the posters, and was kept in motion by electric current.

Seven Reels with Vaudeville.

Knoxville, Tenn.—What is conceded to be one of the most generous (to its patrons) programs in the country is offered by the Bijou theater. In addition to offering a complete five act vaudeville show, the management runs a five reel Triangle drama and a two reel Keystone comedy at every performance, with a semi-weekly change of program. No advance has been made in the admission prices since the addition of the big feature pictures, and the slogan of the house is "Just Come a Bit Earlier and Stay a Bit Later." This is further evidence of the demand for good pictures, even though a little vaudeville is ground out in addition to the films.

Daniel Webster Visits.

Nashville, Tenn.—Daniel Webster—not the statesman—but special representative of the Unity Sales Corporation, was a recent visitor in the city in the interest of "The Yellow Menace." Mr. Webster was formerly connected with the advertising department of Klaw & Erlanger, but is now handing Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi for the Unity Company, and is booking his big serial solid through this territory. Nashville is running this picture at two houses simultaneously, the Rex being the latest house to sign up. The Star theater, for colored people, is also running the serial, and interest is being well sustained at both houses.

Howell Graham Master of Ceremonies.

Chattanooga.—Howell Graham, well known Chattanooga theater man, served as master of ceremonies at the annual meeting of the Chattanooga Automobile Club, at which varied entertainments were offered.

Nashville.—M. Y. [illegible], formerly manager of the Crescent Amusement Company's Clarksville house, the Elite, has been transferred to Nashville, where he is at present supervising the Crescent theater, one of the company's local houses.

St. Louis Considers Lighter Theater Bill

Alderman Kraleman Introduces a Measure Demanding That Theaters Be So Light That Signs on Walls Can Be Read.

By A. H. Giebler, 226 Varel Building, St. Louis, Mo.

ST LOUIS, Mo.—A bill—apparently aimed at "spooners" who frequent the dimly lighted theaters of St. Louis—was introduced in the Board of Aldermen during early October by Alderman Kraleman. The bill provides that the theaters be lighted during performances to such an extent that signs on the walls will be clearly visible. This lighting of the theaters will, it is claimed by its sponsors, tend to improve the morals of picture patrons who have become accustomed to the dimly lighted picture shows. Many of the St. Louis exhibitors have taken it upon themselves to have their theaters lighted up enough always to be able to see how to get in and out, by the use of red and other colored lights, and such theaters as both the Lyrics, the Delmar, the Pageant, and all the modern houses are always well lighted. It is the smaller and older theaters that are rather too dark to suit the "anti-spooners."

Royal Has "Fall of a Nation."

St. Louis, Mo.—The Royal theater [illegible] Sixth street near Olive, started a week's run of "The Fall of a Nation" on Sunday, October 1st, at twenty-five cents admission. This is the first time the film has been shown in St. Louis, and the Royal has been packing the house at every performance.

Shenandoah Again a Picture House.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Shenandoah theater, Grand and Shenandoah avenues, after a varied career of pictures, vaudeville, and stock companies is again [illegible] big feature photoplays to its patrons.

Edith Storey's Visit in St. Louis.

St. Louis, Mo.—Miss Edith Storey, who passed through St. Louis on Thursday, October 6, on her way to the western Vitagraph studio in Hollywood, California, appeared at a number of moving picture theaters in the city during her brief stay. Miss Storey's first "appearance in person" was at the Royal theater, on 6th street. After that until closing time for theaters, she appeared at the Pageant, 5851 Delmar; the Congress, 4021 Olive street; the Shaw, Thirty-ninth street and Shaw avenue, in South St. Louis, and several others in different sections of the city.

Miss Storey received many floral offerings at the theaters she visited, and all the managers who could get them, ran pictures in which the actress was featured, but perhaps the most appealing tribute the star received was a magnificent bunch of flowers presented to her by the patrons of the Family theater, on South Broadway, instead of the usual offering of the house [illegible].

War Film for Red Cross Being Booked.

St. Louis, Mo.—A new war film, called "Our American Boys in the European War" is being booked for showing at numerous theaters in St. Louis for the benefit of the American Ambulance Field Service. Stanley Stoner, a member of the local committee, is placing the film, and gave a private showing to the press representatives and the St. Louis committee of the American Ambulance in France.

Option on $55,000 Theater Site.

St. Louis, Mo.—Percy Knoebel has taken a forty day option on property at 211-13 Collinsville avenue, East St. Louis, for $55,000, with the understanding that the property is to be used for the theater. For several weeks past an option on numbers 209-11-13 was held by Frank R. Tate, a prominent theatrical manager of St. Louis, but that option expired at noon Friday, October 6, and an hour later Knoebel had obtained the second option. Number 209 belongs to the Knoebel estate.

Kansas City's Grand to Show Films

One of City's Prosperous Legitimate Theaters Has Been Leased by A. E. Elliot of the Sapphire Amusement Company—It Will Be Remodeled for Motion Pictures —Will Seat 2,500—Rent for Ten Years Is $120,000.

By Kansas City News Service, 206 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—A. E. Elliott, of the Sapphire Amusement Company, has leased the Grand Opera House and will remodel it for moving pictures.

This statement is quite as important to Kansas City and the territory, as the announcement two years ago that the Willis Wood would become a moving picture house. More important, perhaps, because the Grand has had a consistently successful career. It has always been the one prosperous house in Kansas City, the popular price house; and many of the greatest plays have been seen there. It was built in 1891 by A. Judah and Melville H. Hudson, and Mr. Judah managed it until his death about a year ago. It is interesting to recollect that the Grand was built on the site of the old Midland theater, which had a circular auditorium, and had been used as a Panorama; one of the famous spectacles shown there being "The Battle of Gettysburg." The Grand had kept away from pictures more consistently than any other theater until, a little more than a year ago, "The Birth of a Nation" was shown, running for a record of three weeks, and to crowded houses.

Mr. Elliot will have a house that now has 2500 seats. His rental for the ten years of the lease is $120,000. He will spend $10,000 remodeling. His company has also a 99-year lease on East Twelfth street, where a large picture show house will be erected, adjoining or including, the present Sapphire theater.

Family Group Night.

Fort Scott, Kans.—Miss Marie Smith, Pictureland Theater, Fort Scott, Kans., is featuring "family group night" on Friday nights at the Pictureland, and has received the cooperation of the schools through the Mothers' and Teachers' Club.

Edith Story at the Gene Gantier.

Kansas City, Mo.—R. G. Leggitt, manager of the Gene Gantier Theater, Thirteenth and Quindaro, Kansas City, Kans., prepared a full stage setting for Miss Story, who spoke at his theater, and was received enthusiastically by a full house. Miss Story was introduced by Miss Gene Gantier, who is the sister of the manager, and whom the theater was named after. Miss Gantier is well known to the film people of Kansas City.

Speaks on "Better Pictures."

Compdon, Ia.—Mrs. J. C. Paterson, wife of the manager of the Auditorium Theater at Compdon, Ia., will speak on the subject, "How Can We Obtain Better Pictures," at a Suffragette meeting to be held in that city the last of October. Mr. "Pep" Balsly, Kansas City Feature Film Company, who is assisting Mrs. Paterson in the preparation of the talk, says Mrs. Paterson will endeavor to convince the ladies of that section that they are already receiving better pictures.

Explained the Meaning of Programs.

Cape Girardeau, Mo.—In the recent street fair at Cape Girardeau, Mo., a local exhibitor, E. M. Doyle, of the Park Theater, had a booth which was divided into three sections. One was Paramount section, another World, and the third was Metro. A young lady in each booth explained the merits of the plays and handed out photographs and novelty advertising. The booth was a marked success because it made it possible to explain to nearby towns the various programs.

Use for Vacant Window Space.

Newton, Kans.—Ed. V. Wagner, Star Theater, Newton, Kans., one of those energetic advertisers who uses every plan to stimulate his business, lately secured the window space in a vacant store. On one side of the entrance were Paramount productions, such as "Madame Butterfly," played by Mary Pickford, decorated with Japanese umbrellas and photographs of Mary Pickford. On the other side of the entrance were Fox features, "Under Two Flags," Theda Bara, decorated with American and French flags.

New House for Brownell, Kan.

McCracken, Kans.—Mr. Ryan, of the firm of Mason & Ryan, was recently in Kansas City buying the equipment for a new theater which he is opening shortly at Brownell, Kans. This firm operates motion theaters at Brownell, Bison and McCracken, Kans. While in Kansas City Mr. Ryan booked several Paramount pictures which will be circuited in the three towns.

A Busy Exhibitor.

Breckenridge, Mo.—A. Yarbrough, an exhibitor, also a successful merchant in novelties and notions, and president of the Commercial Club of Breckenridge, is manager of the opera house. He is showing photoplays three nights a week, two nights are devoted to Paramounts and one to serials. On open dates Mr. Yarbrough shows the big features such as "The Eternal City" and "The Battle Cry of Peace," charging advance admission prices.

Hospital Benefits at the Empress.

Wichita, Kans.—Mrs. Harvey Schellenberger is giving a series of benefit shows at the Empress Theater for the Wichita State Hospital. The subjects for October and November are Paramount features. They are "The Spider, Pauline Frederic; Margarite Clark in "Molly Make-Believe," Mary Pickford in "The Eternal Grind"; Charlotte Walker in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," and Geraldine Farrar in "Temptation."

New Springfield Theater Opened.

Springfield, Mo.—The New Princess theater, which opened recently, has a seating capacity of 1,200, and cost $20,000. It will be managed by Roy Wilhoit.

C. C. Perry a Visitor.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. C. Perry, controler of a string of theaters in Kansas, was in town recently booking some Paramount features for Buckner, Kansas. Mr. Perry's home is in Fowler, Kansas.

Local Exchange Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. W. Hardin, manager of the Metro Service of Kansas City, is making a tour of Missouri to announce the new feature, "Romeo and Juliet," which will be released October 23.

P. J. Schlaifer, who formerly had charge of the "Yellow Menace" for the United Film Service of Kansas City, recently left for Denver where he will take charge of the local branch of the United Film Service there. Mr. Joe Levy, manager of the Kansas City office, will now take charge of the "Yellow Menace" in this territory. Mr. Levy reports that the "Yellow Menace is giving the greatest satisfaction in the territory.

Howard Jameyson, who has recently been promoted to the assistant managership of the local Pathe Film Service, is making a tour of the State visiting the small town exhibitors.

Recent visitors to the Kansas City exchanges were: Mrs. M. C. Smith, Pictureland theater, Fort Scott, Kans.; W. A. Barris, Marionville, Mo.; C. R. Blublugh, Vaudette theater, Fort Scott, Kan.; Joseph Partridge, special representative of the Vitagraph Co., New York; Mr. Rhine of the Princess theater, Joplin, Mo., and Abe Reingman, Colonial theater, St. Joe.

"The Wild Rose of Iowa" an Historical Film

Iowa's Story to Be Incorporated in Five Reels by History Department of University—Choosing the "Wild Rose."

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

DES MOINES, IA.—"The Wild Rose of Iowa" will be the name of the five-reel production which will tell the history of the pioneer days in this state. It will be produced under the auspices of the State Historical Film Corporation, which will bring 100 young women from various parts of Iowa to this city where the selection of the title character, "The Wild Rose," will be made. The stay of the young women in Des Moines will not be without its entertainment features. Des Moines Federation of Women's Clubs will give a reception while they are in the city. After the photography here is done the principals of the cast will be taken to Chicago, where the interior scenes will be filmed in the studio of the Rothacker Moving Picture Company. The scenario was written by Alice C. Weitz and Edgar R. Harlan, curator of the Iowa historical department.

There is more than a touch of romance in the name and the honor of taking the lead in this Iowa picture under the dignity aegis of a great state must be very affecting to the proudest of Iowa's daughters.

Interesting Iowa Theater Notes.

Muscatine, Ia.—Darwin Karr, Essanay star, who is making a motor tour of the country with films in which he played, was at the Gayety theater for the matinee and night.

Charles City, Ia.—The attendance record at the Hildreth theater was broken by the film, "Where Are My Children?"

MORE NOTES FROM ST. LOUIS.

By A. H. Giebler, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis, Mo.

Winter Theaters Open.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Bridge theater on Euclid and Natural Bridge road, has just opened for the cool weather season, with moving pictures, showing special features on certain days of the week.

The Easton theater, 5177 Easton avenue, St. Louis, has again opened for business, this time under the management of Carter and Daily, who went about the matter of opening up the house with a business like system which should mean success during the coming season.

E. A. Schwartz, who was formerly manager of the Broadway and St. Charles theaters, both on St. Charles street, between Broadway and Sixth, St. Louis, has reopened the Broadway for the winter, the St. Charles having been sold during the summer.

D. Biondo, new proprietor of the St. Charles theater, St. Louis, opened his house on September 30, with "The Velvet Paw" as the chief attraction. Mr. Biondo has just recently come into possession of the St. Charles, and he will maintain the same policy in the management of the house as has been in force in the past.

Minneapolis Film Trade Prosperous

Overcoat Weather Fills Theaters and a Record-Breaking Business Is Expected in Both St. Paul and Her Sister City Across the River—New Theater Opened in St. Paul at Seven Corners and One in Minneapolis.

By John L. Johnston, 814 Produce Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—With "overcoat weather" prevailing the business at the various moving picture theaters in the twin cities has increased in leaps and bounds and if early indications can be taken as a criterion the 1916-17 season here promises will be a record breaker. In Minneapolis the Strand, New Garrick, New Palace, New Grand, New Astor, New Garden, Lyric, Crystal and the Bijou-Jitney, prominent loop district houses, are all doing a big business.

In St. Paul the down-town district, the Majestic, Alcazar, Blue Mouse, Hippodrome, Strand, Princess, Gem and Gaiety have attracted good crowds at each performance.

The Seven Corners' theater in St. Paul was opened during the week with Florence La Badie in "The Shine Girl" and the "Shielding Shadow," Pathe serial. This new house, modern in every detail, is a handsome one and is located on Seven Corners, which is half way between the loop and the western residential portion of the city.

In Minneapolis the New Pantages theater at Seventh and Hennepin was opened on Sunday, October 15, with vaudeville and "The Crimson Stain Mystery," Consolidated serial.

The Bowling Scores.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Universal film team sprung a surprise in the Film Men's Bowling League last week by beating the Mutuals No. 1 league leaders. The Mutuals No. 2 will be called the Universal DeLuxe team and Reel News' aggregation will be known as the Reel Fellows' team.

L. V. Calvert Plans for "War's Women."

Minneapolis, Minn.—Lowell V. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick theater here, has made elaborate preparations for the run of "War's Women" at his theater, beginning October 15. Mr. Calvert has arranged for special settings to go with the picture and a special musical program has also been prepared. The Garrick seats 2,400 people.

"Purity" for a Week at the Strand.

St. Paul, Minn.—Manager Maitland of the Strand theater has arranged for a week's run of "Purity," featuring Audrey Munson, and will announce the opening date some time this week. "Purity," handled in this territory by the Progressive Film Co., of which B. N. Judell and E. A. Westcott, are president and general manager, respectively, was shown to students of the Saint Paul Institution School of Art.

J. B. Reisman's Children's Shows.

St. Paul, Minn.—Manager J. B. Reisman of the Dale theater here "stole" a big portion of the social section of the St. Paul Sunday Pioneer Press, October 8. Mr. Reisman had another of his children's matinees last Saturday afternoon and the affair was made a big thing by society mothers. Marguerite Clark in "The Pride and the Pauper" was the feature.

Among Local Exchanges.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager H. C. Andress of the Hearst International exchange spent three days in northern Minnesota and Wisconsin last week. Hearst "Beatrice Fairfax," news-pictorials, "Jaffery" and other International service.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Paramount exchange here is making plans to greet Geraldine Farrer when the star of "Joan of Arc," "Maria Rosa" and "Carmen" comes to St. Paul with the Ellis Grand Opera Co. next week. Assistant Manager Bert Barnett, Jr., of the Paramount is spending a vacation in New York.

Minneapolis, Minn.—F. O. Frederickson and R. C. Fox have resigned from the local Vitagraph exchange. Both Mr. Frederickson and Mr. Fox have been in the employ of the exchange for some time and have a host of friends in this territory. Mr. Frederickson has been booker while Mr. Fox has been road man for Michigan and Wisconsin. Messrs. Frederickson and Fox are the sixth and seventh employes to leave the Vitagraph exchange within the last six weeks.

Minneapolis, Minn.—J. George Feinberg of the Theatre Equipment Co. here spent two days in Aberdeen, S. D., last week, looking after work being done on a new theater in that city by his firm.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Monogram Slide Co. has resumed the making of lantern slides here. G. C. Johnston is in charge of the laboratories at 694 De Soto street, and R. F. Holmgren is doing the art work.

St. Paul, Minn.—Manager Samuel Thompson of the Feature Film Co. has booked "A Tour of the World," a ten-reel subject, in theaters at Rock Island, Ill., Davenport, Ia., Des Moines, Ia., and other cities through central Iowa and Illinois.

Great West Film Co. Getting Under Way

"The Golden Goddess" Being Made at Malta, Montana, Is Nearly Done—Work Will Be Begun on "The Indians' Tale of Christ."

ST. PAUL, MINN.—The Great West Film Co., the organization of which was commenced last spring, is beginning to develop into one of the largest producing companies in the Middle West. The Great West Co. has just sent to its local laboratories from Malta, Mont., over 4,000 feet of negative of "The Golden Goddess," a five-reel subject, to be released shortly on one of the foremost programs of the country. The Great West players are completing the action of "The Golden Goddess" at the Coburn ranch in Malta, Mont.

Following the finish of this feature will begin work immediately upon "The Indians' Tale of Christ," the scenes of which are laid in the Little Rockies in Montana. The Great West has secured Lee Caldwell, recognized as champion bronchobuster of the world at the recent competition at Pendleton, Ore., and has also procured C. M. Giffen, who played the lead in "The Cowpuncher," a well known feature released last spring. Wallace D. Coburn, known as "the cowboy poet," is to have the lead in "The Golden Goddess," the story of which is from Coburn's poem, "Yellowstone Pete's Only Daughter," and the supporting cast is made up of experienced Western actors and numerous range riders, "buckaroos" and ranch employees. Charles Webster Hitchcock and William Cooper, of Chicago, are assisted by Charles Bell, of St. Paul, directing the taking of the films.

Mr. Hitchcock produced "Cousin Jim" last summer and was for some time with Essanay. Mr. Cooper is one of the best photo-artists in the West. William F. Tobin is general manager of the Great West Co. and James G. Gilosky, owner of the Gem, Alhambra and Rex theaters, St. Paul, and president of the Northwest Exhibitors' Association, is president.

Minneapolis' Strand as a Leading House

Saxe Brothers' 1,300-Seat House Making a Name—Manager James Keough Has Charge of It—Some Features Coming.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The Strand theater here is rapidly nearing the top rung of the Northwest theaters' ladder of popularity. Manager James Keough, better known as the "friend of the working man," ably assisted by Charles G. Branham, has begun a campaign for more business which has already brought about astonishing results. The Strand's house organ, "The Strand Magazine," has been reissued and is being distributed to the extent of 12,000 copies weekly, the Mary Pickford features have been booked, also "Romeo and Juliet," featuring Hackett and Bayne and with the regular Triangle and Metro program features, Mutt and Jeff cartoons, Keystone comedies and news weeklies, it looks as if the Strand is going to give its patrons more than value received for their patronage.

"Romeo and Juliet" will be run as soon as released and the Pickford feature, "Less Than the Dust," will follow shortly after. It is also stated that Manager Keough is considering booking Clara Kimball Young features. The theater orchestra has also been enlarged and several improvements made in the operating booth. An extensive advertising campaign in the newspapers and on the billboards has also been begun by the Strand. The theater seats 1,300 and is owned by the Saxe brothers.

Charles G. Branham, former editor of Amusements, has become publicity manager of the Strand theater, Minneapolis.

Another Fine Denver Theater

John Thompson, Head of International Amusement Co., Announces a New Theater to Cost $50,000—Site Is Corner of Colfax Avenue and Ogden Street—Will Seat 1,200 Persons—Local Success of Big Houses.

By E. C. Day, Denver Times, Denver, Colo.

DENVER, COLO.—This city is to have still another moving picture theater. Plans have just been made public by John Thompson as head of the International Amusement Company for a $50,000 show house to be erected at Colfax avenue and Ogden street in the center of the fashionable residence district.

The announcement has again caused the question to arise. Will wonders never cease in the moving picture industry in Denver?

Two years ago the cry was raised that the city was then overcrowded with picture houses. Since then six high-class theaters have either been built or gotten under way. With each succeeding addition the doubting Thomases have let out a wail to the effect that it must fail. All could not survive, they said. There must be a crash, according to their belief.

But notwithstanding the pessimistic predictions, three of the six new theaters have been completed and opened for business and each is thriving. The other three are now in course of construction. Instead of the business suffering a setback, the opening of each new theater, instead has seemed to create new interest and, contrary to predictions, all the houses, new and old included, are prospering as never before.

John Thompson, who is building the latest addition to the list of Denver theaters, is the owner of the Thompson theater at Colfax and Adams, which is one of the six referred to above. He erected this playhouse in the face of predictions that a costly high-class theater would never be a "go" outside of the business district. He took a chance and demonstrated that where the small ordinary neighborhood house in the same locality failed, his proved a big success.

His faith in the future of the industry is best demonstrated by the fact that he proposes to invest $50,000 more in his new venture. The new Thompson theater is to be located in the same section of the city as the first playhouse. Colfax avenue is the main artery east and west across the city. The new place is about two miles nearer the heart of the city than the old theater.

These two are just the beginning of a chain of like places that Thompson plans to build in Denver and Colorado.

The new theater will have a seating capacity of 1,200 and will be distinctive in its appointments for comfort, beauty and ventilation.

Artie Johns and Hazel Hobson Wed.

Denver, Colo.—Miss Hazel Hobson, an inspector in the office of the Mutual company, surprised her friends this week by becoming the bride of Artie Johns, head operator at the Rialto theater, one of Denver's big Curtis street houses.

Walsenburg Theater Burns.

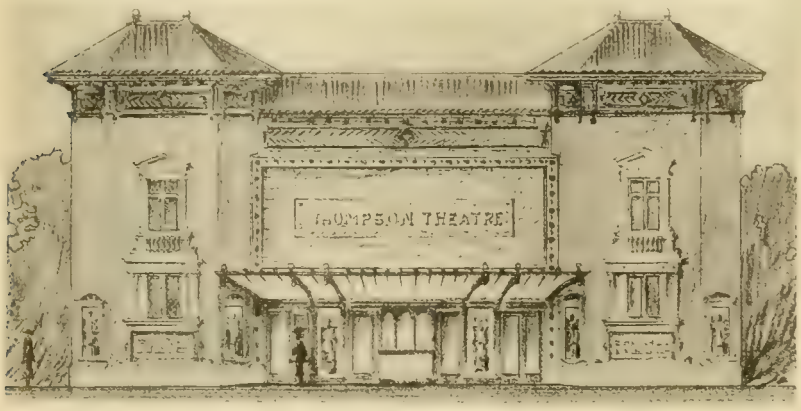
Walsenburg, Colo.—Four reels of film were destroyed in a fire which seriously damaged the moving picture theater of Archie Levy at Walsenburg this week. Work of rebuilding was begun at once and it is expected that the theater will reopen November 1.

McCormick Gets Fine Job.

Denver, Colo.—It has remained for a Denver man to draw the honor of being the first manager of the Circle theater, Indianapolis' newest and finest photoplay house. S. Barrett McCormick is the man. He left this city Thursday, October 5, to assume his new duties, resigning his position as manager of the Princess theater in Denver.

S. Barrett McCormick.

McCormick started in the moving picture business in Denver five years ago when he established a Photoplay Department on the Denver Times. From this he went to Lubin in a clerical capacity, then into the Mutual exchange as a feature booking clerk. From the Mutual he went with Ince as a scenario writer and later returned to Denver to accept the management of the Princess.



New Thompson Theater, Denver, Colo.

McCormick is one of the most popular young men who has ever been connected with the film industry in Denver and his loss will be keenly felt.

J. J. Sarah Buys Theater in Wiley.

Wiley, Colo.—J. J. Sarah has purchased complete equipment through the Denver Mutual exchange for a moving picture theater at Wiley, Colo. He has leased the Opera House and will at once convert it into a photoplay theater.

New Faces at Local Mutual.

Denver, Colo.—Two additions were made to the Mutual office staff this week by Manager Ward E. Scott. Mrs. Sarah Brown, stenographer, and C. Messenger, poster and shipping clerk, were placed on the role of employes.

A Weeks News in Texas

By E. E. Belcia, 902 West Second Street, Ft. Worth, Texas.

Palace Theater of Little Rock Leased.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—The Palace theater has been leased by George Slater of Dallas, from Stortch and Gans. Mr Slater has been in Dallas for the past week closing up film contracts for the Palace and booking some big extraordinary features. The Palace is one of the finest theaters in Arkansas and Mr. Slater is one of the old timers in the business, which undoubtedly means a big success. Mr. Slater was for many years connected with the exchange end of the business in Dallas

E. T. Peter Moves to Little Rock.

Dallas, Texas.—The veteran film manager, E. T. Peter, has gone hence after manys years residence in Dallas. Mr. Peter moved to Little Rock, Arkansas, and opened the Unicorn exchange, which we understand he calls the Exclusive exchange. In addition to Unicorn programs Mr. Peter also handles the Mutt and Jeff pictures and quite a number of old Paramount prints. E. T. Peter has been in Dallas since 1910, and has managed several different exchanges here, the last one being the United. Mr. Peter was one of the first managers of the Texas Film Company, which was originally the Universal exchange in Dallas. As he has been here so many years naturally he will be missed exceedingly, especially as he was always a prime mover in all meetings of exchange men or exhibitors.

New Fox Exchange Manager in Dallas.

Dallas, Texas.—The Fox exchange has again changed managers which makes the third manager for Fox in Dallas during the past three months. O. P. Hall has gone to Atlanta and has been succeeded by G. C. Reid. Mr. Reid when interviewed said he was from Atlanta and formerly from New York, further than this we were unable to learn, except that Mr. Reid says he expects to go after business like a whirlwind.

Buddy Stewart Has Returned.

Dallas, Texas.—Mr. Buddy Stewart, the smiling manager of "Texas's Greatest Show," the Old Mill theater, of Dallas, has just returned from a three week's sojourn in the East, where he visited all the largest theaters, acquiring ideas and learning what the other fellow has been doing. Mr. Hulsey, whom he accompanied, did not return with Mr. Stewart.

Dallas Locals.

N. E. Depinet has just returned from New Orleans, where he went for a conference with Wm. Oldknow.

H. T. Peebles, manager of the Houston office of the Consolidated Film, was heard from this week. Harry says business is rushing down there. He said the soldier camps were good customers. Harry F.

Botto is the assistant in the Houston and South Texas territory.

Alfred Raymond of the Mutual forces was a recent visitor in Houston. J. L. Wade, of Lewisville, Texas, was a Dallas visitor Sunday. Wade reports excellent business.

H. C. Kimball, manager of the Pope theater of McKinney, was in Dallas this week and reports that he is doing a good business with vaudeville, which has been added to his feature program.

A. W. Plues of the Vitagraph force is spending a week in Dallas. Mr Plues has just recovered from a pretty sick spell and while not looking his usual self still looks pretty good at that.

WISCONSIN THEATER NOTES.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

BOYCEVILLE, WIS. An opera house costing $7,000 is under construction here.

Plymouth, Wis.—A. R. Scheibe, who formerly operated the Crystal theater here, has purchased a moving picture theater at Menasha.

West Allis, Wis.—J. H. Aiken has assumed the management of the Rex, succeeding his son Clarence, who has gone to Duluth, Minn., to manage an acetylene gas plant.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Princess theater, Third street, near Wells, which has been remodeled at an expense of $12,000 became a 10-cent house at its reopening. The new policy provides for the use of Paramount, Universal, Triangle, Fox and World film services.

West Allis, Wis.—Community moving picture entertainments will be given here this winter in connection with the local schools.

La Crosse, Wis.—Manager F. J. Williams of the Casino and Strand theaters cooperated with the local fire department on October 9, Fire Prevention Day, and showed a film based on the famous shirt-waist factory fire in New York City.

ALONG THE PACIFIC COAST.

San Francisco Briefs.

Charles Love, of the staff of Edward H. Kemp, will shortly take pictures along the proposed military road, El Camino Sierra. The Kemp office is very busy at present, both with finishing work and equipment. One of the late sales has been that of two machines for the Atkins theater, at Marysville, Cal.

The management of the Portola theater has booked the "Common Law" for a run of two weeks, commencing Oct. 22.

"Doc" Hart, a well known film man of this city, is now with the California Film Exchange as salesman.

S. A. Powell, who formerly handled "The Clansman" in this territory, is now with the World Film.

J. W. Allen, assistant to manager Herman Webber of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, returned recently from a trip through the nothern part of the state.

G. A. Metcalfe has disposed of two machines to be installed in the new theater to be opened shortly at Los Gatos, Cal., by W. Black.

California Notes.

Chico, Cal.—The Lyric theater, recently damaged by fire, has been repaired and reopened.

Santa Rosa, Cal.—The new Cline theater will be opened early in November.

Salinas, Cal.—Frank Vesely has disposed of the equipment of the Liberty theater and will devote his entire attention to the management of Brown's opera house.

Lindsay, Cal.—The Lyric theater has been opened by L. W. Willis.

Orland, Cal.—The Orland theater was opened recently under the management of W. R. Claman.

Serials Liked in San Francisco

Local Exhibitors Are Paying More Attention to Serials Than Ever Before—Big Downtown Theaters Follow Lead of the Turner & Dahnken Tivoli and Are Making Good With Some of the Late Installment Pictures.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Local exhibitors are now paying more attention to serials than ever before and there is a steady increase in the number of houses featuring these photoplay productions. This increase is not as noticeable in the residence districts as it is in the larger downtown houses, and some exhibitors with small houses express the opinion that serials are less popular with their patrons than was the case a year ago, but the fact remains that more and more of these are being booked. The Rialto theater, which opened several months ago on Market street, and which has been a great success has featured serials and the management has been well satisfied with the results. Turner & Dahnken found that "Gloria's Romance," with Billie Burke, was a great drawing card at the Tivoli theater, as well as at the other houses on the T. & D. circuit. Pantages theater has been showing serials for the past year and two attractions of this character are sometimes featured on the same bill.

The latest of the large downtown houses to add serials to their bills is the Market Street theater, conducted under the management of Eugene Roth. Heretofore, he has refused to book serials, no matter how attractive they might appear, but recently decided to give them a thorough trial at the house recently placed under his management. He has booked "The Shielding Shadow," the Pathe serial, and "The Scarlet Runner," produced by the Greater Vitagraph, and these will be started on the same date.

Peerless Film Service Growing.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. H. Emmick, president and general manager of the Peerless Film Service, 100 Golden Gate avenue, returned recently from a trip to Los Angeles and announces that this concern has taken over the office and films formerly handled in the southern territory by the Nat A. Magner company. This firm also recently took over the business of the Sun Photoplay company in this territory and now controls a number of large features, which places it in a very enviable position.

While a comparatively new company, the Peerless film service is already ranked as one of the busiest film exchanges in California and in addition to handling features is releasing three new comedies weekly.

Board of Trade Manager Takes a Vacation.

San Francisco, Cal.—F. S. Peachy, manager of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, has arranged to take a week's vacation in the Feather River country, where he will hunt deer. The Board is now holding luncheons every two weeks and the members are eagerly looking forward to the next one, when it is expected that venison will be served as a result of the prowess of its manager.

George Chamberlain Returns.

San Francisco, Cal.—George E. Chamberlain, head of the Independent film exchange, has returned from a two months' automobile trip to Oregon, upon which he called on a number of exhibitors. He found business conditions in northern California in good shape.

Off On United States Tour.

San Francisco, Cal.—Miss Freda Rubenstein, one of the most capable women in the film exchange industry, has left to make a tour of the United States for Sol L. Lesser in the interests of the "Ne'er-Do-Well." For the past five years Miss Rubenstein has been connected with the local office of the Golden Gate film exchange and the All Star feature distributors, during which time she has filled positions in almost every department from bookkeeping and correspondence to booking films and managing the business during the absence of Mr. Lesser. She is especially familiar with the booking of the "Ne'er-Do-Well" and added interest in this production will doubtless be taken in the places to be visited by her.

Savoy Opening Date Set.

San Francisco, Cal.—Plans have been completed for the reopening of the Savoy theater on McAllister street and a large force of workmen is busy redecorating and remodeling the house for the opening, which has been set for October 14th. A fine organ is being installed and in addition there will be an eight-piece orchestra. A screen of special make has been installed, two Simplex machines placed in the operating booth and an elaborate stage set made ready. M. E. Cory, a well known local exhibitor, and for a time manager of the local office of the World Film, has been placed in charge of the house. Large productions, which can be run for an indefinite period at prices ranging from 25 cents to 75 cents, will be featured.

Screen Maker Busy.

San Francisco, Cal.—William K. Hill, who has been engaged in the manufacture of moving picture theater screens in this city for the past six years, is now busier than ever before, having some unusually large jobs on hand.

Lasky, Inc., Ready for Release.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Lasky Amusement Enterprises, Inc., has moved its offices on the sixth floor of the Humboldt Bank building to larger quarters on the same floor and is ready for the first releases of the Art Dramas, Inc. which it will handle in California. It has also secured the world rights to "The Lure of Venus," an artistic production made in the hills of Marin County, by Miss Lolita Perine and featuring Miss Ida Christy, of Venus fame, at the recent Exposition. Miss Perine was formerly with the New York Hippodrome, and has a wide reputation as a designer of artistic effects. The production, which was recently completed, has received a great amount of publicity in the daily press, society folks having taken a prominent part in it. It will be shown shortly at a leading local theater to enable all those who took part in it to inspect it. The film will be handled through the De Luxe Feature Corporation of San Francisco, a branch of the Lasky concern.

Visitors in San Francisco.

J. Van Sant, Jr., of the Empire theater, Eureka, Cal., was a welcome visitor recently and made the rounds of the leading film exchanges.

E. J. Christopher, of Fresno, Cal., was also here a short time ago and placed an order for a large organ.

A. C. Rattenbury, of the Palace theater, Dixon, Cal., called upon the local trade recently, as did also A. T. Cunnard, of Taft, Cal.

Tom North, formerly manager of the V-L-S-E office at Seattle, Wash., stopped off here for a short visit with friends on his way to Chicago.

Portland's Curfew Rings Again

Portland, Oregon, Exhibitors Complain of Overly Strict Enforcement of Law That Keeps Children From Theaters—Children's Attendance Drops 60 Per Cent.—Exhibitors Escort Children Home.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Oregon.

PORTLAND, Oregon.—During the past few weeks the curfew law has been strictly enforced. By its terms unaccompanied children are required to be off the streets at 8 o'clock.

Since the strict enforcement of the law, police officers have stationed themselves outside of picture theaters and children unaccompanied by parents who have entered the theater before 8 o'clock are reprimanded and escorted home by the officers. The exhibitors believe that such strict enforcement of the curfew law in all cases is not justified by the existing circumstances.

W. E. Tebbetts, manager of the Alhambra theater, located in one of the best residence districts of Portland, says his children's attendance has fallen off 60 per cent. since the new curfew edict went into effect. Children are but a small percentage of Mr. Tebbetts audiences, he says, and he does not suffer much financial loss. J. B. Washtock, of the Victoria in the Alhambra, in the Alberta district, is more vitally effected because children form an appreciable percentage of his audiences.

Some suburban managers have met the situation by personally escorting the children home from their shows.

Former Exhibitor in New Role.

Portland, Oregon.—Melvin G. Winstock, formerly Portland's foremost exhibitor, and now sojourning in Seattle, came back to Rose City for a few days as a special representative for "Purity," which showed at the People's the week of October 9.

Mr. Winstock has been experimenting with an innovation of his own in photoplay exploitation and exhibition effiiciency which he reports is most successful. In Seattle and Portland he has appeared in the theaters scheduled to show his picture and delivered a short, pithy, artistic talk preparing the audiences for the picture the following week. This initmate local publicity, so to speak, creates a bond between the audiences and the exhibitor that no long-distance publicity sent out by manufacturers can effect, he said.

Mr. Winstock stated he was gratified with the signs of returning prosperity in Portland. He believed, however, that in the film industry much reorganization in the system employed by manufacturers and distributors in dealing with exhibitors is necessary before the picture theaters will have their old power of making money.

Mr. Winstock also represents the Republican National Committee in this territory and has speaking dates arranged in the most prominent cities in the state. He received a most royal welcome from his Portland friends.

Education Campaign Needed.

Portland, Oregon.—At the first meeting of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association at the T. & D. Theater building, October 5, Dan Kelleher, representing the publicity committee handling the campaign for the repeal of the present Sunday closing law, told the assembled exhibitors why the law should be repealed for their own safety. The Sunday closing reformers are after the moving picture shows, said Mr. Kelleher, pointing out that it is a matter of self-preservation for every exhibitor in the state to fight for the repeal of the law and to use their screens to enlighten the people.

The ultimate object of reformers in Oregon is indicated by the statement of Rev. G. L. Tufts in the Pacific Christian Advocate: "It required many years of educational work to prepare the public mind for prohibition. And so will it be on the Sabbath question before we will attain state wide prohibition of Sunday business and Sunday amusements."

The Sunday closing situation is bringing the exhibitors in line for organization as nothing before has ever done. More than a dozen local exhibitors joined the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association at the meeting of Oct. 5. A thousand slides advocating the repeal of the present Sunday closing law are being prepared and will be in the hands of the state's exhibitors before the election, Nov. 7. It will be necessary to vote "Yes" on the ballot to repeal the law.

Columbia Dresses Up.

Portland, Oregon.—The Columbia theater has put on its fall and winter garb. The house has been redecorated throughout, new blue velvet draperies have been hung, all lamp shades have been decorated with gold and silver grapes, the rest-room refinished with French chatteau cretonne, and even the doorman has been garbed in a natty military suit of dark brown fitted with a purple-lined, gold-trimmed cape. Manager Myrick has reinaugurated the afternoon tea service. The Columbia has secured the new Mary Pickford films.

With Oregon Exhibitors.

Tillamook.—L. E. Partridge, Star and Gem theaters, has taken a partner and the firm is now Partridge & Morrison.

Condon.—W. D. Inglis, American theater, is planning a new house here.

Pendleton.—The Temple theater has been sold.

Eugene.—A. H. McDonald, owner of the Rex, is reputed to have acquired two other theaters here.

British Columbia Film News

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

May Make Film in Victoria.

VICTORIA, B. C.—J. Arthur Nelson, formerly of the Frontier company, recently visited this city, and presented the question of establishing a moving picture studio here, at a meeting held at the headquarters of the Victoria and Island Development Association, and attended by several of the aldermen, Commissioner Cuthbert, and others interested.

Mr. Nelson presented the advantages of having a company established here, and requested the support of local people in starting production in this city. No definite decision was arrived at, but the matter has been taken under advisement by the authorities, and the matter will be taken up again in the near future.

Business in Western Canada Good.

Vancouver, B. C.—Sam W. Whitehead, who is piloting "The Spoilers" on its second trip to Western Canada, has arrived in town, looking as healthy as ever—which means a good deal. Mr. Whitehead reports that business with the feature has been very heavy throughout Western Canada, and he is now arranging bookings in this city. The attendance record established by "The Spoilers" when shown by Manager Hector Quagliotti at the Colonial theater last year, following the passing of the picture by the Attorney-General, over the censor's veto, still stands as the heaviest week's business ever done by a picture in Vancouver, and its former success here will undoubtedly be repeated to a considerable degree.

Edmonton Theater's Sixth Year.

Edmonton, Alberta.—Manager O. J. Hallgrimson of the Dreamland theater, recently celebrated the sixth anniversary of the opening of the Dreamland, and started in on his seventh lap with renewed vigor. Mr. Hallgrimson came to Edmonton six years ago from Seattle, and opened the original Dreamland in a frame building on Jasper street, near Grierson, doing a great deal of pioneering work in establishing the pictures as a distinct part of the lives of the people. The theater is now housed in a handsome brick building at 97th street and Jasper.

Seats Have Been Heard From.

Vancouver, B. C.—Although the Broadway theater has been completed for some time, the opening of the house has been delayed by the non-arrival of the seats, which are being sent from Eastern Canada. However, W. P. Nichols, managing director of the National Amusement Company, states that the seats have passed Winnipeg on their way west, and the house should open within a very short time.

Thanks to Good Friend Allen.

Vancouver, B. C.—H. J. Allen of the Famous Players Calgary office, who lately spent some time in this city, has departed for home. He promised to send us lots of news, with full details, initials, dates—all that sort of thing. Other exchange managers and exhibitors are cordially invited to do likewise, including personal items regarding those in the film industry, stunts, benefits, etc., as well as the larger questions affecting exhibitors and exchangemen generally.

B. S. Courtney Here with "Nation" Film.

Winnipeg, Man.—Basil S. Courtney, at the head of the Basil corporation, controlling the Canadian exhibition rights for "The Birth of a Nation," visited this city with the big picture recently, when three days of capacity business were played at the Walker theater. This is the third transcontinental trip of the Griffith masterpiece, and the engagement just completed at the Walker proves that the spectacle is still a business-getter.

The staff of musicians with the picture has been kept up to its original number, and no part of the "production" end of the show has been allowed to sag, but every change has tended toward improvement. "The Birth of a Nation" is now working its way toward the Pacific Coast.

Lyceum's Two-Day Benefit.

Winnipeg, Man.—The formal opening of the new extension to the Lyceum theater was made the occasion of a two-day benefit for the Returned Soldiers' Toy Factory, which has just been established to provide a means of livelihood for disabled soldiers who have returned from the front.

The Lyceum has just discontinued the showing of pictures of any particular brand, and will in future book its subjects in the open market, changing three times weekly.

Notes from Western Canada.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Cedar Cottage theater has just reopened under the management of J. W. Roberts, using Paramount service.

Revelstoke, B. C.—A benefit for the Prisoners of War Fund was recently put on at the Empress theater, musical numbers being contributed by local singers and by the Revelstoke Juveniles.

Vancouver, B. C.—Billboards are announcing the coming of the newest Pathe serial, "The Shielding Shadow," which has been booked by the Pantages circuit, and will soon open at the local house. A private showing of the first three episodes was given on a recent morning, and the picture looks like a winner.

Vancouver, B. C.—Herbert Lubin, of

Metro is supplying the Vancouver Sun with the Beverly Bayne series on "How to Become a Motion Picture Actress," and the articles are creating a great deal of interest. Mr. Laban also showed the city the biggest picture ad ever taken in a newspaper here when he used a full two-page spread in the Sunday News-Advertiser. This was sandwiched in between a full page ads on Saturday and Monday, and included a facsimile of a telegram from Frances X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne to Vancouver picture fans through Manager J. R. Muir of the Dominion theater. The Metro attractions for this week were "The Soul of a Woman," with Emily Stevens, and the Bluebird-Beauty production, "A Man and His Soul."

Vancouver, B. C.—Mr. Muir reports that the first week of Metro was the best week the Dominion ever had with a single exception.

Kamloops, B. C.—W. A. Wilkinson of the Empress theater, Kamloops, B. C., recently visited Vancouver, and returned home with a Metro contract.

SEATTLE NOTES.

Rex Will Show Bluebird and Universal.

Seattle, Wash.—John W. Hamrick of the Rex has contracted for the last run of Bluebird and Universal features in Seattle. To interest people in his new program Mr. Hamrick started an automobile contest on October 1.

Mutual Managers Called to Meeting.

Seattle, Wash.—A managers' meeting was recently called in Seattle by J. S. Woody, Mutual manager for the Northwest, to discuss ways of handling the new "Lure of the Lumberlands" series. R. P. Madden, Mutual manager in Spokane, and G. A. Reed, head of the Portland office, came in answer to Mr. Woody's invitation. They are all expecting a big run on this new Helen Holmes picture.

New Salesman in G. A. Metcalfe's.

Seattle, Wash.—E. L. Switzer has just arrived in Seattle as a new salesman in G. A. Metcalfe's store here.

What Embarrasses Theater Owners

Leading Exhibitor in Seattle Talks on the Showman's Problems—At First the Path Looked Bright, but Expenses Have Increased Faster Than the Admissions—Sees Need of Adjustment Between Parts of the Business.

By J. Anderson, Exhibitor, Seattle, Wash.

Seattle, Wash.—The World Is Dizzy, [illegible] talk, with [illegible] Clemmer the other day, or rather he had the talk, we did the listening. Mr. Clemmer is a man of thought and force to make his words worth any one's concentrated attention. [illegible] discourse on this [illegible] building future [illegible] theater has [illegible] of elegance and [illegible] charging ten or fifteen cents admission cannot make ends meet.

Conditions Have Changed Fast.

[illegible] so fast it makes you dizzy," said Mr. Clemmer. "Why, when I was running the little Dream theater down [illegible] and clearing two thousand a month I thought, 'Gee. If I can make a 350 capacity house with a ten cent admission price pay like this I'd just like to show people what I could do charging the same admission to a bigger, finer house seating 1,000 or more.' Well, I spent over $120,000 on this house, and my theater with its good ventilation, its beautiful finish and furnishings, and its then unique ladies rest room was the talk of the town. The first year my profits averaged about five thousand a month, but [illegible] Attendance fell away a little, but not much.

High Cost of Business.

"That wasn't what ate into my profits. To keep abreast of the times and my competitors the addition of expensive attractions became necessary. Before I knew it new and improved models of projection machines must be installed; pictures began to cost more, and advertising had to be conducted on a larger and more elaborate scale; finally the pipe organ became passe, except to supplement the music of a concert [illegible] that orchestra now as much as my entire [illegible] Theater. The Dream, Vaudette, Rex, Alhambra, Liberty, Strand, Coliseum, Clemmer, Lyric, Alaska, Colonial, Bijou, Mission, Palace, Grand, Empress, Star, Rialto, Crystal, Isis, Sunset, Majestic, Lincoln, Rainier, Class A, Class B, Class C, Class D, Class E, Class F, Class G, Class H, Class I, Class J, Class K, Class L, Class M, Class N, Class O, Class P, Class Q, Class R, Class S, Class T, Class U, Class V, Class W, Class X, Class Y, Class Z, Class AA, Class BB, Class CC, Class DD, Class EE, Class FF, Class GG, Class HH, Class II, Class JJ, Class KK, Class LL, Class MM, Class NN, Class OO, Class PP, Class QQ, Class RR, Class SS, Class TT, Class UU, Class VV, Class WW, Class XX, Class YY, Class ZZ still standards keep soaring. There are newer, bigger, and finer theaters in town than mine that are paying out as much as they make. Unless there is some sort of adjustment made I don't know where the exhibitors will land."

Adjustment to Conditions.

That word adjustment strikes the keynote of the Northwestern exhibitors' present need. As in the case of most comparatively new and very successful industries. The dangers of too keen competion with no cooperation are threatening to undermine the prosperity of the motion picture houses in this part of the country. Whereas in the East exhibitors have already met the more luxurious standard with increased admission prices, their brothers of the West have not dared follow their example for fear of competitors. Seattle's photoplay houses are just as big and fine, if not finer, than those in most of the eastern cities. Their music is as good, and their programs are the best that can be had; yet, where the manager of a similar house in the East charges twenty-five cents admission, the Seattle man asks only ten or fifteen cents at the outside. Only two theaters in the city charge fifteen cents regularly, and one of those only in the evening, the matinee price being ten cents. Exhibitors in this vicinity admit that if they would get together and decide upon an admission price that would be fair to them and their patrons, and then stick to it, they would not lose any appreciable amount of patronage. The people are too fond of the pictures. This way lies the logical road to that sane adjustment which Mr. Clemmer says is necessary, and it is probably true that lack of cooperation will do harm.

Will Build Central Exchange in Seattle

Local Capital Is About to Put Up Modern Building to House the Film Distributors in the Neighborhood—To Be Near the Moore Theater.

Seattle, Wash.—A real estate [illegible] this city is getting up plans for a big exchange building, which they intend to erect in the new business section near the Moore theater. Such a building is very much needed in Seattle, since that in which the Mutual and Universal offices are located is the only one specially built for exchanges. The other distributing offices are in buildings scattered from one end of the business district to the other, and some of them are by no means suited for film exchanges. The new building is to have all the features necessary for the most convenient and efficient operation of the business of an exchange. There will be sufficient accomodation for at least six exchanges, and the managers of Metro, Fox, World, Paramount, Kline, and the De Luxe Feature Film company have spoken for rooms.

Artcraft Chooses Headquarters.

Seattle, Wash.—After October 15 Artcraft will have its offices at [illegible] avenue. Manager Rosebaum reports contracts for the Mary Pickford films already closed in Seattle, Portland, Spokane, Butte, and Tacoma, and is closing rapidly in the smaller cities and towns. The first feature, ready for release November 6, will be shown at the Coliseum, Seattle.

Al Bloom Manager of Reel Play.

Seattle, Wash.—Al Bloom, [illegible] year assistant manager of [illegible] office in this city, has taken over the management of the Reel Play Feature Film company. Manager Hager of the Universal exchange told us he was very [illegible] Mr. Bloom.

New Faces at Local Paramount.

[illegible] Paramount [illegible] sults as already being obtained through [illegible] publicity department opened up here by C. F. Hill only a few weeks ago.

C. O. Winnick;

Manager Hill;

H. K. Brin

The two new road representatives, Harry K. Brin and C. O. Winnick, whose appointment has already been announced in these columns are also bringing in the business. Here are photographs of all three of these "live wire" gentlemen.

R. A. Grombacher Heads Triangle.

[illegible] Wash.—Follow [illegible] tion of H. G. Rosebaum, which came as a blow to the Triangle office in Seattle, Roy A. Grombacher has been appointed new manager. Mr. Grombacher is an old time exchange man and is known and well liked by every exhibitor in the Northwest.

W. H. Smythe Dismisses Orchestra.

Seattle, Wash.—When W. H. Smythe of the Strand theater brought up from San Francisco Franz Adelmann and his Bohemian concert orchestra of eight pieces and built a new orchestra pit for them, he hoped to increase his box office receipts by a few hundred each week. Finding, however, that in spite of the good music and Mr. Adelmann's former popularity in this city, patronage did not increase noticeably. Mr. Smythe decided that the best thing to do was simply to let them go, and that is what he did.

Coliseum Takes Adelmann Orchestra.

Seattle, Wash.—With the news that Franz Adelmann and his orchestra have been dismissed from the Strand comes the announcement from C. S. Jensen, manager of the Coliseum, that Herr Adelmann and his seven men with four other artists added will furnish the music hereafter for the Coliseum.

Visitors on Seattle's Film Row.

Among this weeks' visitors were: [illegible] Mercy, theater magnate of North Yakima, H. T. Moore, Colonial theater, Tacoma; I. M. Lucas, Theatorium, Lewiston, Idaho; Ed. Dolan, Weir theater, Aberdeen, Wash.; [illegible] owner of the [illegible] and Bell theaters, Bellingham; Clarence Summerville, of the Melbourne and the Hippodrome, Tacoma; J. E. Ferguson, Wenatchee theater, Wenatchee; W. E. Tebbets, Alhambra theatre, Portland, Oregon; W. P. Armour, Mineral theater, Mineral, Wash.

When Your Banker Asks Questions

When your banker asks a lot of searching questions about yourself and your business, he is only doing what you ought to do before you extend credit to one of your customers.

Your banker "sells" money or credit, at a profit, just as you sell goods.

And he is as eager to get new credit customers, as you are.

But he must know that his customers will pay him on the date due, just as you should know, in handling your credit customers.

If your attitude and your answers show your banker that you are "at sea" on important facts in your business, you can't blame him for hesitating to extend the credit you ask.

By adopting the latest N C R System, you put yourself in a strong position with your banker.

You are able to show him daily, weekly and monthly records of your cash and credit sales, your receipts-on-account, and your items of cash paid out.

Your Cash Register Summary Sheet enables you to make a "bank statement" that is proved by printed unchangeable cash register records.

It shows the banker that you know the exact state of your own business.

It assures him that you are safeguarding yourself against leaks and losses.

It gives you a confidence that inspires his confidence.

It will help you to borrow the money that you need for earning cash discounts, making advantageous cash purchases, and otherwise conducting your business along modern, money-making lines.

You may not be able to do these things with your old Register, but you can make your old National Cash Register pay part of the cost of the New-And-Better System.

ESSANAY.

BORROWED SUNSHINE (Two Parts—Oct. 24).—The cast: John Glenarm (Richard C. Travers), Helen Grant (Marguerite Clayton); Goldie, her little sister (Mary V. McAlister).

Helen Grant lives in a wretched tenement with her little sister, Goldie, aged 6, where the former makes a meager living for both by coloring cards. The chief delight of the baby is her flower, on which the sun shines for a few fleeting moments at three o'clock in the afternoon. John Glenarm, a young draughtsman, sees the girl in the window. While on their way to eat lunch in the park the child is nearly run down by an automobile but is saved by Glenarm. A love affair, sponsored by the child, develops. But Glenarm's salary is too small for matrimony. Just as he is about to request a small increase, his employer announces that the city's principal banker will pay a $5,000 prize to the architect who will design a house to suit him. Glenarm puts every ounce of ability into the contest, and wins it. His salary is trebled and Helen and Goldie leave the tenement for their new bungalow, far less pretentious than the banker's palace, but also far more homelike.

THE FABLE OF THE THROBBING GENIUS OF A TANK TOWN WHO WAS ENCOURAGED BY HER FOLKS WHO WERE PROMINENT (Oct. 25).—Lila, daughter of the Egg and Poultry King, scored a Knock-out in a War drama held as a Charity Benefit. Friends advised her to go in the Movies. Thereafter, when Lila moved from one Room to another, the Portieres had to be spread the entire length of the Pole, so as to make Room for her Head. A Local Haberdasher, who was plotting to surround her with a new Bungalow and a lot of Mission Furniture, went to call as per Usual, and found her too busy to hold Hands. Father saw he was hooked, so he took her to a Moving Picture School to have her searched for Talent. It took many an Egg to have her properly conservatoried. Lila took her Diploma the rounds of the studios, and found that Artist temperaments were more abundant than Lamp Posts. She finally got on as the Maid who enters with her back to the Camera in the early part of Act Two. When Lila saw the First Run and found her scene had been cut out, she caught the first Train for the Home Town. The Next Day she had a strip of Red Carpet spread for the Haberdasher, and was learning to Cook on a Fireless Heater.

MORAL—The True Friend to Home Talent is one who goes to the Benefit and Hisses all the evening.

IT NEVER COULD HAPPEN (Three Parts—Oct. 28).—The cast: Robert Prandor (Richard C. Travers); His Father (John Cossar); Thrya Wyman (Anna Mae Walthall), Wyman (Thomas Commerford); Elsie Forbes (Frances Benedict).

Incensed at Robert Prandor's escapades, his father tells him to leave home and return only when he has earned $100. This will move the elder man to make him a partner. The boy is soon forced by necessity to take a place as waiter. Here he catches the eye of Wyman, who hires him as butler. Thrya, his daughter, is the chilliest thing Prandor ever met. When she decides to marry him he gets frightened and tries to escape, but tumbles down stairs and is severely injured. Prandor immediately falls in love with Elsie Forbes, his nurse. Thrya is using her supposed engagement to Prandor as a cloak to cover her real affection for another man, opposed by her father. An arrangement of forged checks worries Wyman, and his secretary arrests young Prandor. Elsie Forbes is arrested also. While Prandor is making the secretary confess to the forgeries, his father, long a friend of Wyman, enters and the situation is happily solved, the final obstacle being removed when word comes that Thrya has eloped with the other man.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE

TREADING PEARLS (Three Parts—Oct. 20).—Mrs. Carlton has two daughters, Alice, a modest unassuming girl, and Ermer, a high-headed, self-willed girl. On her death bed, Mrs. Carlton calls Alice to her. "You are so backward, Alice," she says; "I don't like to die and leave you alone; your sister Ermer will be treading pearls, while you are everybody's servant."

John Blair, well-to-do merchant, and his wife have two sons who are direct opposites in character. Ned is quiet, grave, while Ray is gay. When Mrs. Carlton dies, the orphan sisters are forced to look for work. Alice obtains a position as servant in the home of Blair. Ermer becomes a salesgirl in Blair's store. Ermer scorns Alice for working as a servant, while Alice is full of anxiety because of the dangers Ermer is exposed to in her store position. Ray spots Ermer in the store, and the young fellow starts a flirtation.

When pay day comes, Alice has five dollars saved, while Ermer has only a dollar left after paying for room and board. Alice mails her five dollars to Ermer with a note saying that she does not need the money, and telling Ermer to buy clothes with it. Ray has persuaded Ermer to lunch with him at a cafe. There Ray places a beautiful chain of pearls about Ermer's neck, and offers to loan her money to buy clothes. Ermer hesitates at first, but is finally persuaded to accept both the pearls and the money. Ermer is contemptuous when she receives Alice's letter. She sends the money back with a note, "Keep your chink; I don't need it. I'm wearing pearls already, while you are what mother said you'd be."

Alice is disturbed over Ermer's letter. A premonition comes to her in which she sees their dead mother placing a chain of pearls about Ermers neck with the words, "The pearls of your virtue my child, guard them jealously." Then a muddy hand comes out of the water, seizes and breaks the chain, and the pearls fall into the water. A sneering, laughing face appears from the water. It is Ray's face. Alice hurries to Ermer's boarding house, tells of her premonition, and pleads with Ermer to be careful. Ermer turns her out of the room. An undeclared pure love has sprung up between Alice and Ned.

Ray takes Ermer to his birthday party, given at the house, where the two sisters face each other. Ray takes Ermer for a boat ride and a stroll in the park, where he tries to accomplish her ruin. Through breaking of her pearl chain, Ermer realizes Alice's warning. She escapes from Ray before it is too late.

Meanwhile Ned has declared his intention of marrying Alice and has been turned out of the house by Blair. Ned and Alice meet Ray, whose hands and face are muddy from wading in the water in an attempt to pursue Ermer. Alice, fearful of her premonition, hurries to the lake with Ned. There they find a safe and repentant Ermer, who points to some loose pearls in the bottom of the boat, saying, "You were right, Alice, look, I am treading pearls." Ned, angry, returns to the Blair home with the girls and accuses Ray. The latter finally admits his guilt and is led off in disgrace. Mrs. Blair extends a welcome to Alice.

THE CHORUS GIRL AND THE KID (Three Parts—Oct. 27).—Mary Jones, better known as Flora De Vore, is a struggling, half-starved chorus girl, in love with Billie Rogers, a chorus man, who has consumption. Mazie Stuwart, another chorus girl, is loved by Billie. It is Mary's $50 left her by her mother that sends Billie out West for his health, but it is Mazie he sends for and marries.

Mary's life is changed. She is embittered and hard. Three years elapse. Mary is still a chorus girl. She is called "Hard as Nails." Mazie and Billie die, leaving their baby an orphan. Mary hears of it and is elated. That night as she is having supper in the apartment of Thad Jackstone, a man about town, she hears a new-born baby in the apartment above cry and instantly she thinks of Billie and his child. She leaves the apartment and runs into Dr. Fremstead, who is interested in her. On the impulse of the moment, she sends for the child, but when Nancy arrives, she resembles her (Mary's) mother and Mary leaves the home.

Later Nancy is taken ill and Dr. Framstead is called in. Mary again having supper with Jackstone, when she has a premonition that things are not as they should be at Nancy's home. She returns, frenzied, sees Dr. Fremstead and instantly maternal instince is aroused. She promises the doctor she will take care of the child. A few months elapse and Mary and the baby live in the country in the cottage which her mother left. Dr. Fremstead comes to see them and of course all ends happily.

VIM.

THE PRECIOUS PARCEL (Oct. 19).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); Telegraph Operator (Edna Reynolds); Runt's accomplice (Florence McLoughlin).

News flies swiftly in small communities, and although it is supposed to be an official secret that Edna, the telegraph operator at Lonesome Gulch, has been notified of a valuable assignment of gold soon to arrive, it was but a matter of a few hours before the entire town knew of it. It reached the ears of Runt and his accomplice, Florence, and they plan to gain possession of the gold. While Florence by her wiles keeps Plump, Edna's sweetheart, engaged in a flirtatious conversation, Runt and his man, Friday, seize Edna and tie her on the trestle over which the Overland Mail is due to pass in a few minutes.

Then safe from interruption, Runt opens the strong box and the three conspirators drive off with the gold in their possession. Edna, by aid of a broken telegraph wire, manages to send out a call for help which Plump receives. Running to the trestle he releases her just as the train thunders past. Mounting their horses, Plump and Edna ride after the fleeing villains and after overhauling them a fight ensues in which Runt and his assistant receive a terrible beating and are hurled into the river by Plump.

HERE AND THERE (Oct. 20).—The cast: Pokes (Robert Burns); Jabbs (Walter Stull); Flossie Footlights (Ethel Burton).

Pokes, coming home late one night, is ordered out of the house by his wife. Seeking refuge in a side door pullman, Pokes falls asleep, little knowing that his train de luxe is bound for Cyclone Gulch, miles away in the desert. Here Jabbs, the local sheriff, realizing the need of a loving female to mend his socks and sew a few buttons on his shirts, advertises for a wife. The "ad" catches the eye of Floosie Footlights. Flossie, knowing that the early bird catches the worm, burns up the road in getting out to Cyclone Gulch to land the lonesome sheriff. Pokes has been hired by Jabbs as a cowpuncher and when Flossie breezes into the Gulch, Pokes immediately poses as the sheriff and makes a rapid play for the erstwhile Broadway chicken.

Jabbs, learning of the deception, wrathfully confronts the artful Pokes, but in the fight that follows Pokes, by a trick, sends the sheriff on a "flying" trip to dreamland. After securing the sheriff's badge from the vanquished opponent, Pokes receives from Flossie all the adulation due a conquering hero. Later, however, Jabbs, posing as a real old time bad man, meets with Pokes just as the latter is feasting on the plaudits of the townspeople gathered in the local dance hall. Caught at a disadvantage and his wits refusing to come to his assistance, Pokes seeks safety in putting as much distance as possible between himself and Jabbs. At the station Pokes comes face to face with his irate spouse, who, having learned of Pokes' whereabouts, has come in search of him. When Mrs. Pokes learns from Jabbs of her husband's flirtation with Flossie she sets out to finish in her own manner the task Jabbs had begun.

A MAID TO ORDER (Oct. 26).—The cast: The lazy husband (Babe Hardy); his wife (Kate Price); the man of the house (Raymond McKee); his wife (Florence McLoughlin).

When Raymond's frivolous young wife informs him that household duties were too hard for her, they ask Kate, the cook, where a neat maid can be secured. Kate, being the proud possessor of the luxury of Plump as her husband, instantly sees a chance whereby she can keep the job in her own household and also force Plump to work for his daily bread. Informing the young couple that she knows a jewel of a maid, she hurries home and dresses Plump in some of her clothes. Both Raymond and his wife, impressed with the appearance of the new maid, try to make it as pleasant as possible for her.

However, Kate's jealousy comes to the surface when she sees her loving man petted by the young wife and Plump, to his disgust, is forced to submit to the attentions of Raymond. Finally when the young wife discovers her husband flirting with the maid, her anger arises suddently and she orders Plump out of the house. Raymond pretends to be the maid and matters rest until Kate again catches the wife getting Plump in the mansion. Raymond warns that the supposed maid is a man and Plump is done up in a jiffy.

FRIENDS (Reissue—Oct. 23).—The cast: The girl (Mary Pickford); Dandy Jack (Harry Walthall). His old chum (Lionel Barrymore).

At the mining-camp of Golden Creek, the little orphan girl of the late proprietor of Golden Creek Inn, is the pet of all the miners. Her father had long been their friend and protector. She becomes infatuated with Dandy Jack, who is considered by all as her sweetheart. Jack decides to leave the camp for other diggings and the little one is almost heartbroken. As he is leaving, he meets Bob, his old chum, who has just arrived at the camp.

Their greeting shows clearly the value of that little word "friends." Later on, Bob comes to the camp and falls in love with the little girl who has reached the age of love. But for Jack was information rather than love. Hence she and Bob are engaged to be married. Shortly before the day set for the wedding, Jack returns and is twitted by the boys about the apparently fickle girl, whereupon he wagers that he can win her back not knowing of her love for the successful suitor is. The outcome is a revelation to all.

THE BARFLY (Oct. 23).—The cast: Mr. Newlywed (Eddie Lyons); Mrs. Newlywed (Priscilla Dean); Weary Willie (Lee Moran). Scenario by V. Kirtley. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed receive an invitation to a mask ball to be given at the Clarendon Hotel, and a prize is to be given for the most novel and unique costume. In order to surprise each other they refuse to divulge what their respective costumes will be until the night of the ball. Mrs. Newlywed has her costumes already picked and Mr. Newlywed is puzzled what to wear. Upon going to the office that morning he passes a "Weary Willie" and is immediately impressed with his make-up. He induces him to go into a saloon with him and have a drink. Newlywed's idea is to get a suggestion for his make-up for the costume ball.

That night while the ball is in progress Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed make up in their costumes for the ball. The tramp also arrives, and while Newlywed is away for a moment Mrs. Newlywed mistakes the tramp for her husband, and, taking him to the ball, starts complications, which cause the tramp's arrest. Newlywed is afterward arrested by the police and they all meet in the police station. Explanations make every one happy.

Kelly is a detective who is called in on a strange murder case. The dead man has a piece of leopard skin in his hand. Later at the club he sees Shields, a desperate character. He follows the man and sees him meet the Leopard Lady, an actress, and overhears an appointment that they make.

Later he gets in the home of the actress and accuses her of the murder. She says that Shields is the guilty man. The next day Kelly is caught by Shields's gang and taken to the den of some ferocious lions that he keeps for such occasions. But the actress is warned and arrives in time to save the detective from his horrible fate by shooting the lion just as the tragedy is about to take place. Then she sails away in an airship and leaves the detective madly in love with her.

THE MISSING WITNESS (Special Release—Oct. 16).—The cast: Young Worker (William Shay); Sailor (Herbert Brennon); Girl (Jane Fernley). Produced by Herbert Brennon.

John is in love with Jane, and they both work in a factory, the owner of which is in love with Jane also. Later he tries to lower the wages of the men and this gives rise to a strike.

The manager is pursued by the men, and takes refuge in Jane's house. She shelters him, and then tells him to get out. He forges a note to get her to meet him in the woods, and as she is talking to him he is shot. The man who shot him is her father, but the gun that he used belonged to John, so he is accused.

John has been in the city with a sailor friend. The boat on which he serves is scheduled to sail the day of the trial. Jane learns that the only witness who can save John is on the boat, and with the lawyer she chases the boat in a tug. But the captain will not let the man leave, so the latter jumps off the boat and comes to save his friend. His testimony saves John, so the lovers are happy.

THE DECOY (Oct. 19).—The cast: Felese and Raymond's Mother (Lois Wilson); Raymond Everard (William Garwood); Morat (Ed. J. Brady); Raymond's Father (Wadsworth Harris); Ambassador (Jack Conly); Dr. Everard (Frank MacQuarrie). Scenario by Bess Meredyth. Produced by Billy Garwood.

Felese has set her heart upon ensnaring Raymond Everard, who is connected with governmental affairs, for she is bent upon his downfall. In her employ is Morat, and a band of his men, who are watching his every movement, and together they plan that she will invite him to her home and when he stands in front of a certain window Morat will shoot him from the outside.

Raymond is really in love with Felese, and when he tells his mother all about the beautiful girl whom he intends to marry the mother is more than pleased. Raymond gets a commission to leave for Europe upon some official duty and phones Felese that he wants to see her.

She thinks that he has no intention of marrying her, and so is greatly surprised, Raymond says, that he really loves her and intends to marry her. But Morat is waiting for the signal. Knowing that only one person can leave the house, she bids him to dress in some of her clothing and sends him with a note to the Ambassador for help. She stands at the window and is shot by Morat and later found by Raymond and the officers.

THROUGH SOLID WALLS (Two Parts—Oct. 27).—The cast: James Wheelock (Marc Fenton); Elsie (Peggy Custer); Parsons (Tom Jefferson); Dick (Jay Belasco); Therese (Irene Hunt); Cummings (Lou Short). Scenario by E. J. Clauson. Produced by Walter Morton.

James Wheelock, eccentric but wealthy, has in his household his niece, Elsie, and the butler, Parsons, who has been in his employ a long time. Dick, an electrical genius, is in love with Elsie. Dick has a wonderful invention—a machine that will permit the operator to see through opaque substances. Wheelock, upon seeing the invention, at first is not very enthusiastic over it, but on looking through the lens at the house across the way he seems to see something that interests him.

The next day Therese is found on their doorstep in a sorry plight—hungry, ragged and ill. Wheelock takes her in, and ere long she apparently has the run of the household and eventually succeeds in having Parsons discharged. Elsie dislikes the woman extremely, especially when she finds her making love to Dick. A new butler, a friend of Therese's, is engaged—Cummings by name.

Then, one day, a beautiful diamond belonging to Wheelock is missing. Elsie accuses Therese, and the latter discovered some one in the yard. Cummings brings him into the house, it is discovered to be Dick. Elsie will not believe that her lover is the thief, and Dick is astounded when Wheelock tells him to go home and go to bed—he thinks the old man crazy.

The next morning Cummings says he is ill and Wheelock sends for the ambulance. As the man is being taken from the house Therese gives him a small box, supposedly his medicine, but in reality the diamond. Then comes a surprise. The man being carried out is Parsons. The ambulance attendants and policeman and Therese and her partner in crime are arrested. To Elsie Wheelock presents the diamond and discloses that when he looked through Dick's invention that he saw Therese and Cummings plotting in the house across the way; that he retained Parsons, unknown to the others, and let Therese and Cummings "hang themselves" with their own rope.

REX.

THE GOLD BAND (Oct. 20).—The cast: John Masters (Raymond Mack); Edgar Reeve (Hal Cooley); Helen (Helen Leslie); Inga (Cleone Loring). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Charles E. Bartlett.

Edgar Reeve is earning a meagre salary as a draftsman, but he has wonderful prospects. His wife, Helen, who had been a stenographer previous to marriage, overrules Edgar's objections and seeks employment, telling her employer that she is a "Miss."

She secures a position with John Masters, who soon is in love with her, not thinking that she is already married. She accepts his flowers and attentions, but does not think them serious. Then comes the time when Edgar is also employed by Masters, but in no way is the relation between his two employees disclosed to him.

One day just as Masters is declaring his love and on the point of giving her a beautiful diamond Edgard enters and berates Masters. Then Helen makes her confession and Masters, being the right sort, raises Reeve's wages and tells him to buy his wife a wedding ring.

THE MOVING FINGER (Oct. 29).—The cast: Charles Meredith, M. D. (Lee Hill); Capt. Guy Bracebury (Paul Byron); David Graham (E. P. Evers); Amy Grant (Maude George). Written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude. Produced by Donald MacDonald.

So engrossed has David Graham become in his work that he seems to have no time for his wife, Amy, and she has been amusing herself with Capt. Guy Bracebury. Things go on after this fashion for some time, until Dr. Meredith, the Graham's family physician, hears of all this. It is Amy's birthday and she promises Bracebury that if her husband forgets the day she will elope with him.

The morning of her birthday Graham leaves word with the maid that he will not be able to return until after midnight. Amy determines to keep her word to Bracebury. She asks Dr. Meredith for an appointment that evening before the train leaves, as she wishes to see him once more before she leaves. Bracebury also makes an appointment to see the doctor before leaving.

Amy comes, very nervous, but will not listen to the advice of the kind doctor. Before Bracebury arrives the doctor turns the hands of the clock back and detains him so long that he misses the train. The doctor also has succeeded in getting in touch with Graham, and the latter goes to the train with the present for his wife, for he really has not forgotten about the birthday. Of course, it ends happily.

LAEMMLE.

STOLEN HONORS (Special Release—Oct. 9).—Mary is a sentimental girl who is in love with music. She is an accomplished performer herself, and this creates a bond of sympathy between her and all musicians. She meets a young musician and at once there is a mutual interest.

The young man is a composer of some little renown and has compositions sent him all the time for his approval. One day he receives a manuscript from an unknown composer that he at once recognizes as a masterpiece. Over and over he plays the piece and never tires of it. He takes it to an impressario, and he is enthusiastic over it, assuming, of course, that the young man is the author. He asks if he can play it at a concert and the latter assents, falling into the temptation to let the other think that he is the author.

But Mary has found out that the real author is an old, blind violinist, and on the night of the concert she brings him to the performance. When the calls for author come, he goes out and the young man knows that Mary has found out his deception and realizes that he has lost her love forever.

A CASE OF BEANS (Special Release—Oct. 16).—The cast: Mrs. Newlywed (Fritzie Brunette); Mr. Newlywed (Jack Prescott); The Grocer (Jack Bramall); The Maid (Jane Bernoudy); The Ice Man (Tom Walsh). Written by L. V. Jefferson. Produced by Robert Daly.

Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed are almost happy. They would be really happy if the wife had not neglected her husband for the sake of her friends. Hubby gets angry and rebels at his diet of beans. He fills the bean can with rocks for a joke.

Wife's friends give her their jewels to put in the vault for them, and she hides them in the bean can until she has time to go to the vault. The servants find the jewels and think that the couple are crooks. They set the police on their trail and then the fun begins. The bride sets out for the vault with the can of gravel.

In the end, the husband is forced to eat the gravel so that that part of the joke does not turn out quite as expected. But the mystery is at last cleared, and the couple are made happy by the experience.

WINSOR McCAY AND HIS JERSEY SKEETERS (Cartoon Comedy—Oct. 26).—Windsor McKay is in his summer home in Jersey with his daughter and they are pestered to death by mosquitoes. It is by accident that the artist happens to meet a professor, who says that he is studying the language of the mosquitoes and knows all about them. He suggests that the artist make a series of drawings to illustrate just how the insect does its deadly work. So McKay sets to work and several months later the two of them go to a moving picture studio to see the finished work on the screen.

The picture that McKay has drawn shows the adventures of a lonely mosquito getting its dinner on the neck of a fat member of the species human. But the greedy animal overdoes the good thing and is blown to pieces by the explosion that results from the overtaxation of its capacity.

JOKER.

A CROOKED MIX-UP (Oct. 28).—The cast: John (Milburn Morantl); Liza (Gale Henry); Frank (Charles Conklin); Lefty (William Franey); Katie (Lillian Peacock). Scenario by Charles J. Wilson, Jr. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

Liza is characteristically careless, so her husband plans to scare some sense into her. He phones an actor friend to make up like a notorious crook and rob the house. The friend agrees and sets out in his disguise. In the meantime, Lefty and his pal, Katie, attempt to really rob the house, and Liza, who has overheard her husband's plan, gives him a very nice reception. She fixes a fine lunch and insists upon giving the thief all her jewelry.

When the actor arrives he meets the other

But at last the real crooks, in an attempt to get away, are caught by the police and the mystery is cleared up.

L-KO.

A RURAL ROMANCE (Two Parts—Oct. 25).—The cast: Lucile, the girl (Lucille Huttonx); The Rube (Bill Bevan); Dick (Dick Smith), The Landlord (J. Russell Powell).

Farmer McNutt was satisfied that his daughter marry Dick, the farmhand, until the villain appeared on the scene. The villain was in the guise of the landlord, who threatened to foreclose the mortgage on Pa's farm unless his daughter, Lucille, would marry his son. Lucille at first would not hear of the proposition, but really the boy had captivating ways and she finally consented to take a little walk with him. After walking a short distance they decided to rest a while on a water trough.

Dick managed, by clever manipulation with a rope, to overturn the trough on which they sat and soon both were up to their necks in water. This did not satisfy Dick, though. Lucille and the Rube, having a nice quiet chat, were unaware of Dick's plans. Above in the hayloft was he, letting down the haylork and very shortly the Rube found himself in the air. He disappeared entirely from Lucille's sight.

Some time later a bale of hay walked down the road and landed into a feeding trough. A horse, feeding, ate the Rube out and he reported the rough treatment given him to his dad. Farmer McNutt was furious, but his fury was further aroused when he looked for Lucille and was just in time to see her running away with Dick in his flivver. The flivver did its duty until it got to a cliff, and, after dodging it again and again, over it finally went with Lucille and Dick. The carriage followed shortly and we once more are taught the lesson that villainy never escapes punishment.

BIG U.

A PAIR OF SHADOWS (Special Release—Oct. 9).—The cast: Fritzi (Fritzi Brunette); Ed, her husband (Arthur Trazeris); Nan, girl detective (Jane Bernoudy); Burns, detective (Thomas Walsh). Scenario by F. McGrew Willis. Produced by Robert Daly.

Fritzi is jealous of her husband, and he is no less jealous of her. When each finds a portion of a letter in the other's possession, each becomes so suspicious that each one decides to employ detectives to ferret out the mystery. Ed hires a young girl detective, and Fritzi employs a nice looking young man to "get the goods" on Ed.

The sleuths take each other for soul mates of the couple. Nan, the girl detective, arrives at the home to find Fritzi in the company of Burns, whom Fritzi has employed, and rushes back to report to Ed that there is a man in the house. As she enters the cafe where Ed told her to report Burns happens to see them together.

He rushes back to inform Fritzi and in a taxi they make a record dash for the cafe to catch Ed and the other woman. But in the meantime Ed and Nan, in another taxi, are hurrying towards home and the machines pass each other. When Ed gets home the maid tells him that the "missus" just left with a man. This is the last straw and he decides to hurry to Reno for a divorce. He packs and leaves. Burns sees him and follows him on board the train. A moment later Fritzi appears, Reno bound, followed by Nan. All take the same train, and more complications ensue, until at last the mystery is solved.

TIGERS OF THE PLAINS (Special Release—Two Parts—Oct. 16).—Lieutenant Hanford is in love with Betty Edwards, the colonel's daughter, out in India, the Colonel has higher ambitions for his daughter, and forbids the match. Later Betty marries a major and Hanford moves to another post to forget his grief.

Some years later, Betty's husband comes out to the post where Hanford now is to take command. They have a little son, and Hanford takes an interest in the boy. They go on many trips together, as the little fellow is an accomplished horseman.

One day the two pals leave on a trip in the jungle. At this time a band of mountain raiders are on the warpath and come down to raid the post. Hanford saves the chief of the band, and so gains his good will. Later the lieutenant gets lost in the jungle with the boy, and after many narrow escapes, they are found. In the meantime, the raiders have been driven back in a big battle. In the end Hanford dies as a result of his many wounds, and Betty's son is restored to her.

THE NARROW CREED (Two Parts—Oct. 26).—The cast: Dr. Hendricks (Murdock MacQuarrie); Deacon Wilde (W. L. Rodgers); Wilbur Wilde (Arthur Moon); Mrs. Hendricks (Mrs. Jay Hunt); Ruth (Edythe Sterling). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Jay Hunt.

Ruth is put off the train at a small country town and is befriended by old Dr. Hendricks. The next morning the girl gives birth to a child and the whole village is scandalized. The deacon in particular is astounded that the doctor should ever think of harboring a person who must be evil and calls to see what can be done. The doctor refuses to turn out the girl and the deacon leaves in a huff.

Later the deacon gets some of the old ladies in the town together and they protest to the doctor, threatening to ostracize him if he does not turn the girl out. Still he is adamant. Then the deacon's son, Wilbur, comes home. In the meanwhile the old doctor has learned from the delirous ravings of the girl that Wilbur is the father of the child. But the girl will not tell her betrayer's name.

At last Wilbur can stand it no longer and decides to go to the city to find the girl whom he has wronged and marry her. Just as he is leaving the old doctor takes him home and leads him to the room where the girl is with her child. Then follows a happy reunion. The deacon is summoned, and he turns against his son. He threatens to disinherit him if he has anything more to do with Ruth. The son turns on his father and denounces him. When the son has finished his denunciation the old deacon is subdued, as Wilbur is all he has in life and he cannot bear to lose him. The sight of his grandchild wins him over and the picture ends with the happy family united.

A PRICE ON HIS HEAD (Oct. 27).—The cast: Jack Clarke (Kingsley Benedict); Anna Phillips (Gretchen Lederer); Jim Bottsford (E. P. Evers); Joe Phillips (Tom Webber). Scenario by Bess Meredyth. Produced by Ben Horning.

One day Anna Phillips is startled by the sudden appearance of a chap who tells her that he is Jack Clarke. Anna recognizes him as the son of a man who had saved her father's life years before, and so she is very kind to Jack for this reason. Jack tells her how he had been playing cards in a Western saloon, when a fight started, and in self-defense he had shot one of the cowboys. Anna tells him to go to sleep in the cabin and not to worry.

Soon after, Jim Bottsford appears at Anna's cabin, and tries to bully Anna into admitting that she has seen Jack. Jim decides that he had best not go too far, so he nonchalantly makes himself at home, and Anna, inwardly fearful, plays the game in the same way.

As Jim is sitting there he suddenly hears a loud snore, and starts investigating. When Anna returns, Jim has Jack handcuffed and ready to return to town. She gives him signs, so that when she hands him a cigarette she gives him the opportunity of taking her gun. When Jim looks up, he is looking into the barrel of a gun. It then appears that the man has not died, so Jack is not guilty. The sheriff wanted to arrest him before his innocence was discovered to get the reward.

BISON.

THE BETTER MAN (Two Parts—Oct. 28).—The cast: Joe Cullison (Jack Holt); Grace (Lucille Younge); Jerry Henley (Jack Nelson); Graves (Albert MacQuarrie). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Jay Hunt.

Big Jim Cullison, boss of the Henley logging camp, engages as typist a girl by the name of Grace Ivers. Jim soon sees in the girl more than a business assistant. Some time later Jerry Henley, the owner of the camp, arrives on a tour of inspection, accompanied by his secretary, Graves. The latter is an old confidence man, who had once wronged Grace, and he threatens to expose her if she gives his game away. Jim overhears this conversation and ships Graves out of the camp.

Graves, however, gets off the train and goes back to the camp. In the middle of the night he tries to break into Grace's cabin and is only stopped by the arrival of Jim. They fight for the girl and Jim is victorious. Jim tells Graves that he will have to get out for good and forces him to write a note to his employer, saying that he has been called out of town on business. Then Jim leaves the way clear for a romance between Henley and Grace, as Henley had previously told him that he intended to propose to the girl.

At last the date that had been set for Henley's departure comes and he leaves without the girl. This is a puzzle to the big, honest woodsman. At last he musters up courage enough to ask, and is told what has happened. Henley asked and has been refused. Grace said that she found that she really loved the boss of the camp, and so could not marry Henley. In the end, the lovers are united.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

SOCIETY HYPOCRITES (Special — Three Parts—Oct. 24).—The cast: Lone Eagle (Ben Wilson); Henry Payne (Charley Perley); Kitty (Helen Leslie); Kirk Butler (Joseph Girard); Baron (F. MacQuarrie); Mabel Storey (Mina Cunard; Storey (Edward Cecil); Lucy Waldron (Neva Gerber); Waldron (William Welsh). Written by Willis and Woods. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Mabel Storey's father has promised her in marriage to Kirk Butler, a clever lawyer, upon the consummation of certain sale of ammunition to a foreign government. When the father has obtained his end of the bargain he only laughs at Butler when he would secure his prize. Storey has been clever enough to have Butler's signature affixed to the documents, so that he holds the whip hand and Butler is powerless.

Mabel is affianced to Henry Payne, a society idler, who is ever on the lookout for the unusual. So it is that for the announcement party he persuades the old professor, an anthropologist, to allow him to take Lone Eagle, an Indian. Lone Eagle is the last of his race, and the professor and his daughter, Lucy, are endeavoring to "civilize" him. Lucy, out West, had pleaded with Lone Eagle to save her father's life after he had killed two other men, and the Indian is in love with her. At her suggestion he accepts Payne's invitation and dons, for the first time, a dress suit. He attends the party, where he is made the laughing stock of the guests. Lone Eagle realizes that something is wrong and returns home.

The professor, angered at his rudeness to the host, insists that he return and apologize. The Indian refuses. In the meantime, he learns many of the ways of the "civilized" people. By chance he prevents the elopement of his host's youngest daughter with a designing baron, secures the signed papers which Butler has hired two men to steal from Storey's safe, and inadvertently learns of the operations of Butler and Storey. He then decides that he has had enough of "civilization" and asks Lucy to share his life and fortune, but she firmly tells him that it is not good for the races to mix, and so he returns to the tribe alone—the last of his race.

LIBERTY (Episode No. 10—"Human Targets"—Two Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Liberty (Marie Walcamp); Bob Rutledge (Jack Holt); Lopez (G. Raymond Nye); Pedro (Eddie Polo); Theresa (Maude Emory); Col. Winston (Neal Hart); Emanuel Leon (Bertram Grassby); Jose Leon (L. M. Wells). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Pedro, having held the band of Mexicans sent out by Lopez at bay for sufficient time, he thinks, to enable Liberty to make good her escape, beats a hasty retreat, upon which the Mexicans endeavor to scale the cliff in pursuit. To Pedro's surprise, he finds Liberty lying unconscious upon the trail where she has been thrown by her horse. Both are without horses, and Pedro picks up the girl and presses onward to a Mexican hut. The major receives instructions, ordering him to advance upon Chihuahua. He orders Marshall, the aeroplane scout, to fly in that direction. This information is overheard by Theresa and carried to Alvira, then both mount and ride away.

Lopez and his men still surround the hut where Rutledge and his companions, the rangers, are. Lopez, flag of truce in hand, offers to release them if their frends will surrender and pay five hundred dollars each to him. Their answer is a renewal of the fusillade. The fight continues, for Rutledge is convinced that Liberty is now beyond the reach of the bandits. The commander of the detachment of Mexicans sent in pursuit of Liberty reaches the hut in which she and Pedro are concealed. Pedro places her in the cellar and takes up his position behind the outer door, having cautioned the old master of the house that if he admits having seen them, he will shoot. The Mexican commandant is angered at the old man's simulated ignorance and shoots him down in cold blood.

The commandant and his men then set fire to the cabin. Pedro makes his way to the cellar. Feeling sure that the place is deserted, the bandits leave. Pedro breaks down the door, and with Liberty emerges in time to signal Marshall's aeroplane, and he lands and takes them with him. But before they are gone far, the aeroplane is sighted by the Mexicans, and a machine-gun fire is opened upon them, forcing them to land. Meanwhile, the couriers of Lopez are sounding the alarm which will concentrate all the bandit bands at the pass of Diablo, where he hopes to successfully ambush the Americans proceeding toward Chihuahua.

The Paper which is Read and Filed will be Read Again

Mr. Advertiser, do you believe that your "ad" pays best where it is read most frequently and diligently?

If you do the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the place for your "ad."

It gives you a special and exclusive advantage, because your "ad" becomes part of the greatest and most widely consulted Book of Reference in the whole field of moving pictures. Readers of the M. P. W. file their copies; many have files as complete almost as our own.

Why?

Because the M. P. W. invites, yes, almost compels, the reader to keep it close at hand and to preserve copy after copy. You know that the exhibitor must keep track of things of the past no less than of the present. There is a constantly recurring need of consultation. What the Encyclopedia Britannica is to the general public, the M. P. W. is to the man who makes a business of showing moving pictures. Through years of experience the M. P. W. is most minutely geared and adjusted to meet the practical needs of the exhibitor EVERY DAY IN THE WEEK AND IN ALL CONCEIVABLE DEPARTMENTS such as reviews, projection, advertising, special service features, etc. The exhibitor looks upon the M. P. W. as THE AUTHENTIC VOICE of the industry. Therefore you find the files of the M. P. W. bound or unbound in nine out of ten managerial offices. "Let me look at my 'World,'" is almost a motto with the exhibitor—yes, a motto and an article of faith. He looks at his files of "Worlds" FREQUENTLY AND DILIGENTLY and every time he does so he is likely to see your "ad." Your "ad" BECOMES A HOUSEHOLD WORD to your patron.

To keep yourself warm in the heart and fresh in the memory of your clientele, there is no place like the advertising columns of the M. P. W. It has been said of our files that they are the best source for a concise and complete history of the moving picture in America, and that very much includes THE ADVERTISING PAGES.

RED FEATHER.

THE BLACK SHEEP OF THE FAMILY (Five Parts—Oct. 23).—The cast: Esther Saunders (Francelia Billington); Kenneth Carmont (Jack Holt); Elwood Collins (Gilmore Hammond); Bert Saunders (Paul Byron); Bertha Carmont (Mina Jeffreys); Madison Carmont (Norton Hammond); Mrs. Carmont (Mrs. Jay Hunt); Simon Hathaway (Hector V. Sarno). Written by Frank Wilterwood. Produced by Jay Hunt.

Bert Saunders and Penneth Carmont are roommates at college. Bert is in love with Kenneth's sister, Bertha, and Kenneth is in love with Esther Saunders. Bert, whose family is not by a big margin as wealthy as the Carmonts, tries to keep up with the wealthy fellows, and gets into debt. In order to pay a gambling debt he appropriates the funds of which he has control as treasurer of the fraternity. The deficiency in the funds is discovered and a detective is called in to catch the theif.

The man whom they get is Elwood Collins, a detective who is in love with Esther. Esther is told that she must do all in her power to help her brother. Kenneth does all he can to raise the money, but does not succeed. The only way is to "fix" Collins. The detective says that the only price that appeals to him is the hand of Esther. At last she gives in to the pleadings of her brother and agrees to marry the man to save her brother. Elwood himself pays the money and no questions are asked.

A few years after the two graduate from college they drift apart. Kenneth has taken some money which his father has given him, and is succeeding in business. Bert is wasting his life hanging around cheap dives and gambling houses. Esther has proved to be a conscientious wife and is living happily with Elwood.

At last Bert really enters upon a career of crime and is sentenced to a term of imprisonment in jail. But on the way to the penitentiary he escapes and goes to a farmhouse to hide. He sends word to Kenneth to help him for old time's sake, and asks him to come with Esther to see him. He decides to go and Esther agrees, as her husband is to be out that night on a case.

But that day Kenneth learns that one of his largest creditors has failed, and he is insolvent unless he can raise money at once. His father, in a stormy scene, refuses to help him, and the poor fellow is ruined. Then Kenneth calls for Esther and takes her to see her brother. On the way back they are detained, and it is daybreak before they reach home.

The next morning old Carmont is found dead on the floor of his study, and the clock is set at 1:05. Elwood is called in to unravel the mystery. Things look very black for Kenneth, as the servants testify to the quarrel between him and his father, and the safe has been robbed of all its contents. He cannot account for his whereabouts at the time of the murder without compromising Esther and giving away Bert.

Esther cannot tell her husband where she and Kenneth were on the fatal night, as it would mean her ruin. She is torn between her own happiness and that of Kenneth. At last the day of the trial arrives and she can stand the strain no longer. She rushes to the courtroom in time to hear the verdict of guilty. Then she confesses that she was with Kenneth on the fatal night, and he is acquitted. The case falls away against him when the real murderer confesses. So Kenneth is set free, and when Elwood learns that the two were to see Bert he forgives his wife, and they live happily ever afterward.

THE LAW OF NATURE (Two parts—Oct. 17)—The cast: Ernest Morton (Edwin August); Helen Morton (Iva Shepard).

Ernest Morton, a young man of wealth and position, finds after marriage that his wife does not wish any children. Learning that the great wish of his life is to be unfulfilled and discovering his wife one day in another man's arms, Morton divorces Helen. Time passes, and he marries a girl with the instincts of motherhood strong within her, and a child is born to him. Helen, on the other hand, finds that the man for whom she gave up her husband is a drunken degenerate, and her life becomes sadder when a child is born to her. She is deserted by her husband, and learns shortly afterward from the doctor that she is about to die. With superhuman strength she takes the baby to the home of her first husband and leaves it, with a note asking that he keep it, and returns to die unknown and alone, while the happy wife of the man who had loved her first, takes the motherless babe to her breast.

THE FOLLY OF FEAR (Two Parts—Oct. 24).—The cast: La Rue (Elwin August); Grace Ellis (Ive Shepard); Ethel Rutledge (Ruth Blair); Gerard Weir (William Bailey).

La Rue, an author, is in love with Grace Ellis, who refuses to marry him. Ethel Rutledge, La Rue's secretary, has an unfortunate affair with Gerard Weir, but discovers in time that he is an adventurer. La Rue marries Ethel and they are happy until Weir again crosses the woman's path and shows her a mysterious document which causes her to keep him in her home, masquerading as her cousin.

Later La Rue discovers the deception and asks an explanation of Ethel, but, through fear of Weir, she will not explain. Through an odd chain of circumstances Grace Ellis discovers what the document is that Weir is holding over Ethel's head and tells La Rue of it. Years before Ethel had been tricked into a mock marriage with Weir but had discovered it in time. Weir had doctored a hotel register to make it look as though she had been his wife and this was the document he was holding over her. Weir is killed, and Ethel is once more folded in her husband's arms.

VOGUE.

HER PAINTED PEDIGREE (Two parts—Oct. 22)—The cast: Princess Star Eyes (Gypsy Abbott); Grey Wolf (Arthur Moon); His Lordship (Paddy McQuire).

Star Eyes, an American Indian princess, who has received the benefits of an education, is loved by Grey Wolf, who is also educated but who retains the cruel, revengeful nature of his tribe, underneath the surface of refinement. Lord Harry, a member of an aristocratic English family, meets the girl, Star Eyes, and falls in love with her. Later they are married and go to England on their honeymoon. Grey Wolf discovers Star Eyes' family located in a beautiful home given them by the girl, but they are dressed in their old blankets and still retain their savage ways. Grey Wolf goes to England and there is welcomed into Lord Harry's home. He tells Star Eyes that her family is very lonesome for her and so his lordship sends for the Indian family to come and visit them. Lord Harry's mother is shocked at the terrible actions of the lazy, drunken Indians and finally the red skins are played upon by a fire hose, after becoming drunk and starting a war dance, and driven from the house. They leave Lord Harry and his bride to continue their honeymoon, undisturbed.

HE DIED AND HE DIDN'T (Two Parts—Oct. 29).—The cast: The gambler (Ben Turpin); the prospector (Rube Miller); the girl (Lillian Hamilton).

The prospector enters the western dance hall and, upon seeing the gambler, takes a mallet and apparently kills the man. He is captured by the posse and as he is dangling from a tree tells the story of how, years before, he and Ben had been in Texas together, Ben fleecing Rube of all his savings, robbed him of his girl, and disappeared. As Rube is about to breathe his last word, a message comes to the effect that Ben has recovered. The posse cut Rube down and take him back. He discovers that the girl is still with Ben and is the mother of seven urchins. Ben tries to rid himself of this domestic burden, but Rube flees on his trick mule and has the last laugh on the gambler.

CUB.

HE WOULDN'T TIP—(Oct. 20)—The cast: Amos Pipp (Neal Burns); The Pippin (Betty Compson).

While strolling down the street, Amos meets Betty, who induces him to join her, as she is going to a meeting of the anti-tipping society. He is made president and wears a badge which reads, "I Don't Tip."

On his way to the barber shop Amos meets his old friend, Dave, who laughs at badge. He has a terrible time in the barber chair, barely escaping alive, as the barber reads an item in the paper to the effect that Amos is president of the anti-tipping society. From there he goes to the restaurant, where he can't get the waiters to wait on him, as they too have read the item. He kicks the waiter and rushes out to the check room to get his coat. The check boy gets even by slipping him the wrong coat, which happens to be Dave's. Amos is arrested for stealing Dave's coat and has to tip the Judge to let him off. He writes Betty a letter telling her that he is the victim of foul play at the hands of Dave and will be up to see her to explain.

Betty and Dave are walking along and Betty sees a cat which she would love to have, so Dave decides to get it for her. The owner of the cat ties a string around its neck and places it on the porch. A tramp comes along and steals it. He meets Dave, who buys the cat for Betty and brings it to her. The owner of the cat misses it and she and a policeman trace it to Betty's home. Dave is arrested and once more Amos and Betty are happily reunited.

"THAT DOG GONE BABY" (Oct. 21)—The cast: Hubby (Neal Burns); Wifie (Betty Compson); Mother (Stella Adams); Father (Harry Rattenberry); Mr. Miller (Dave Morris); Mrs. Miller (Jane Waller).

Mr. and Mrs. Parker had been married almost a year, when one morning a friend sent to Mrs. Parker a poodle. The letter announced that the dog was high bred and valuable and the Parkers were pleased. A letter from Mrs. Parker's mother announced that she would shortly return from Europe and hopes that she might be the proud grandmother she has longed to be. Shortly after her return she was informed of the arrival of Snooky in the world at the Parker home. Mother imagined that Snooky is a baby of the human species and never dreamt he is only a poodle. She communicated the glad tidings to Mr. Parker senior. He and mother started to see the baby. They bought some baby clothes and arrived at the Parker home. By luck, however, the Parkers had taken Snooky for a walk and were not in. When the maid was questioned she told them that they had taken Snooky out, so the fond parents laid out their gifts in the living room.

The maid saw the baby clothes and at once surmised the mistake. She rushed after Mr. and Mrs. Parker and told them what did happen. The Parkers at once realized their danger of being disinherited and started on a search for a baby. Mrs. Miller, wife of a photographer, was passing with her baby and agreed to loan her baby to the Parkers for the afternoon. Mother and father had taken advantage of the Parker's absence and went shopping for toys and clothes. Mother saw the Miller studio and she and father made arrangements to have baby's photo taken. The Parkers arrived home with the baby. Its mother was concealed in the kitchen. The fond parents arrived and all went well until baby became hungry and cried. The anxious Mrs. Miller heard her child cry and could hardly restrain herself. Mrs. Parker brought her the baby and it ceased crying. The photographer arrived and as he posed the child he recognized his own infant. He at once claimed it and the secret was out. Mrs. Miller rushed in and she and her husband departed with their offspring. Mother and father were furious and demanded explanations. The real Snooky was produced to the disgusted parents; Mrs. Parker, however, whispered a little word to her mother about an interesting coming arrival and all was forgiven.

THE DEACON'S WIDOW (Oct. 21).—The cast: The Deacon (Eddy Barry), Jimmie (Nolan Leary), The Widow (Billie Rhodes), Col. Gruff (Harry Rattenberry).

Deacon Squibbs, pillar of the First Church of the Strict Principles is informed by the family lawyer that there is one important document to be read in the presence of the Deacon and his nephew Jimmie. The document is nothing less than the will of Jimmie's father, which leaves his entire fortune to his son provided the son marries and settles down directly after his twenty-fourth birthday. Another provision of the will appoints the deacon as sole judge of the young lady to be elected. Jimmie is already in love with a young widow whose father is an old veteran of the wars. Upon sight of her photo in Jimmie's watch the Deacon becomes interested and wants to go to see her. He learns that she is a widow and, according to the laws of the First Church of Strict Principles, cannot marry a man under forty. The news breaks the widow's heart but the deacon bids her hope as he himself is just a mite over the required age. To save Jimmie's fortune the widow agrees to an engagement between herself and the deacon with the mental reservation that the deacon will be glad to break his engagement soon. The deacon spreads the news of his engagement among the brothers of his church. They are amazed and not a little doubtful. Jimmie learns of what has happened, but is reassured by the widow and her father, the gruff old colonel, that there is a plot behind it which will result in happiness to all.

The church committee are short one member for their lawn social and the deacon volunteers the services of his fiancee. She states that she has a little society dance that she will do for them and the deacon is delighted. The day of the social arrives and the people of the First Church are congregated full of pleasure and anticipation. Brother T. Winkels' mouth organ solo was successful and all was well until they announced the widow's number. Jimmie, at the organ, plays an Oriental strain. The widow glides on in shimmering beads and a few yards of gauze. She twisted and shook and jarreted in a way to shock the whole congregation. She retired amid glares from the crowd, leaving the helpless deacon a target for all unfriendly comments. The next day the deacon breaks his engagement and offers Jimmie $5,000 to wed the widow and take her from the city.

Jimmie, now enjoying the fun, refuses. The father challenges the deacon to a duel with swords. In the cold grey dawn of the following day the deacon with his backers of the church face the father of the widow, Jimmie, and the doctor. Tearfully the deacon begs Jimmie and the widow to accept his check and call off the duel. Finally the colonel and the widow are pacified and Jimmie holds the check and tells the deacon that he and the widow were married the day before. The deacon swoons in the arms of his brethren.

GAUMONT.

REEL LIFE No. 23 (Oct. 8).—Mary Miles Minter, the popular young actress who is now so prominent in Mutual star productions, will be shown both at home and at the studio in "Reel Life" No. 23. The section of the reel devoted to Miss Minter is called "A Day with Mutual's Youngest Film Star."

The second section of this magazine in film shows how a city farmer can raise a large crop in his back yard by intensive cultivation of the soil.

The third section is devoted to "How to Handle a Canoe." It pictures the wrong and the right method of navigating in the supposedly dangerous vessels, proving that one who exercises ordinary prudence and is acquainted with the proper procedure can paddle with utmost safety.

SEE AMERICA FIRST No. 57, "Richmond Va." (Oct. 11).—Richmond, Va., is undoubtedly one of the best advertised cities in the United States, its name being heralded throughout the land since the Confederacy made it its capital and the Federal battle cry became, "On to Richmond." Hence it is of interest to managers of motion picture theaters to learn that the Gaumont Company will show Richmond in its "See America First" series.

Among the panorama views are Capitol Square, the Capitol and State Library Battle Abbey, the spot where the first iron foundry in America was established, the battlefield of Gaines' Mill, the battlefield of Seven Pines, and the Post Office and its environs.

Places of ante-bellum interest shown in this release include the home and school of John [illegible] by pictures of the Confederate Veterans' Home, home of General Robert E. Lee, the Confederate Monument, and monuments to Generals [illegible] the Capitol, Museum, and many [illegible] relics of that period.

PAYING THE PRICE (Two Parts—Oct. 30).—The cast: Mary Vail (Marian Swayne); Robert Trent (Joseph Levering); Forbes, the boss (Fritz Orlamond); Vera Desmond (Flavia Arcaro).

Robert Trent is engaged to Mary Vail. Robert's friend, Hal Murray, is also in love with Mary, but because of his friendship for Robert conceals his affection. A political boss named Forbes, is also enamored of the girl, and seeks to make her his own. When he finds that she is engaged to Robert he plots to lure him from the straight and narrow path.

Forbes has an adventuress named Vera Desmond snare Robert. She leads him into extravagant follies, and his indiscretions cause Mary to break her engagement. Robert loses his position, and Vera promptly throws him over. He chokes her and leaves her dead, fleeing to a better life in the west with the thought that he is a murderer.

Later, Hal and Mary become engaged. Forbes tells Mary that he has proof Hal killed Vera. Unless she breaks her engagement and marries him (Forbes), he will see that Hal is convicted of murder. In the west Robert hears that Forbes is planning to have his friend accused of murder. He hastens east to clear Hal.

Upon arrival he finds in Hal's room a note in Mary's handwriting telling him that she is going to marry the boss. Robert starts to find Mary, not knowing that Hal and the police are also searching for her. Just before the ceremony Robert comes upon the pair. Telling Forbes that in the west men kill enemies with knives he fights a knife duel with the boss. Forbes is killed—just as Hal and the police break in. The girl is thus free to choose for herself, and the end brings her happiness.

THE UNDERTOW (American, Five Parts—Oct. 29).—The cast: James King (Franklin Ritchie), Esther (Helene Rosson), Mrs. King (Eugene Forde); Hammond (Orral Humphrey), John Morden (Harry Von Meter).

James King has unfortunately married a woman void of ambition. King warns his wife against her questionable associates but she pays no attention to him. He becomes the head of a large factory employing many hands. Hammond, his foreman, is dishonest and mean to the help who hate him. Morden another foreman in the factory is honest and trustworthy. He has adopted David Strong who is employed in the factory and later takes Esther, his brother's daughter, into his home. The girl has been used to wealth, but accustoms herself to her surroundings and also goes to work in the factory.

King, unable to stand his wife's actions any longer, settles a good sum on her and she leaves for England to secure a divorce. The ship she sails on is wrecked and she loses her life. A disturbance arises in the factory and Esther writes a letter to King, the letter being suppressed by Hammond. King's attentions are directed to Hammond, however, and he also meets Esther and falls in love with her. Hammond bribes one of the workmen to fire the factory, but Esther overhears the plot and warns King. King then calls all of the workmen in, reinstates them in their former places, and with Esther's consent introduces her to them as his affianced wife.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

THE LONE HERMIT (American, Five Parts—Oct. 26).—The cast: Tom Weston (William Russell); Marie (Charlotte Burton); Jack Hillman (William Stowell); James Bolton (Harry Von Meter); Grace Hamilton (Queenie Rosson).

Tom Weston, in the company of James Bolton a wealthy broker, rushes into the office one day after a triumphant day and is greeted by his employer, who invites him to spend the week-end at his country place. He also includes Tom's brother, Hal, and his fiancee, Grace Hammond, in the invitation. Jack Hillman is a suitor of Marie, Bolton's daughter, and because of Hillman's wealth is greatly encouraged by Bolton. At the country place of his employer Tom declares his love for Marie and is made happy by the return of his affection. They are seen by Hillman, who tells Bolton of his daughter's attachment for his clerk.

The next day the two are surprised in the library just as Tom has kissed her. Marie's father glares resentfully at them. Realizing her father's attitude, the girl pushes Tom aside and denounces him for daring to kiss her. Tom is taken aback at this attitude and leaves for the city. The brothers achieve independence for themselves and Tom has sought solace in playing with the hearts of women and then casting them aside like a toy. By manipulating the stock market Bolton has been brought face to face with absolute ruin by Tom. Marie goes to Tom's rooms and there explains to him her action of years before. They are reconciled.

GREATER VITAGRAPH (V-L-S-E).

THE SCARLET RUNNER (Fourth Episode, "The Hidden Prince"—Two Parts—Oct. 23).—Christopher receives a letter from Eloise Dauvray requesting him to call on her and meet the other of the only two real men she has ever known. He goes and meets Prince Mirko of Dalvania, who is planning to regain the usurped throne of his father. The prince has become secretly engaged to Eloise, and does not want the fact known, because Rudovois, the Dalvanian Ambassador has promised the prince his aid provided the prince marry his daughter.

Fitzgerald, an old enemy of Christopher and Eloise, learns of her engagement and sees a chance to profit by it. He tells Rudovois that the prince is about to marry Eloise and suggests that they make off with Mirko and hold him till Eloise is willing to give him up. The ambassador reluctantly agrees and the prince is kidnapped and hidden. Christopher seems to suspect who is responsible. He discovers that Peter, Mirko's brother, is in love with Valda, the ambassador's daughter. He suggests a plan whereby Peter and Valda [illegible] to word.

This affects Rudovois, who loves his daughter dearly, so that Christopher easily gets a confession from him. They go to the rescue in the Scarlet Runner, which by its superior power and speed once again wins the day for its owner and his friends.

THE BLUE ENVELOPE MYSTERY (Five Parts, Oct. 23).—The cast: Leslie Brennan (Lillian Walker), Ewen Kennedy (John D. Dunton), Harry Heath (Jack Hayt), Uncle Bob (Charles Kent), Miss Davis (Josephine Eaton), Fischer (Harry Northrup); Mrs. Davis (Florence Reynolds), Mrs. Graves (Isabelle West), George (William Shea). Written by Sophie Kerr. Directed by Wilfred North.

Leslie Brennan an heiress, suddenly discovers that she is about penniless and face the ordeal of making her own living. Before learning this condition of affairs, he had become dazzled by the pretty manners of a cold hearted fortune hunter, but becomes disillusionized when she discovers that he is attracted solely by her supposed wealth, and goes at once to earn her livelihood in the City of New York. There she studies typing and makes friends among the lowly. She secures a position with a brusque preoccupied young chemist who is in the midst of a great discovery of value to the government. How Leslie becomes aware of the machinations of a foreign spy, how she saves her young employer's secret to the government in a series of encounters and how she comes to learn that he has fallen in love with her and that he is one who is really worthy of her, is told in a series of compelling scenes.

THE REVOLT (Five Parts—Oct. 2).—Anna, a young shop girl, is urged by her rather disreputable stepmother, Mrs. Biddle, not to be so particular—to liven up and get presents and favors from rich young fellows. Lena Schmidt, a co-worker at the store, "stands in" with the manager and lies to her mother about the jewels and dresses. Lena's affair is cut short when the proprietors find her telling the manager about her delicate condition. She believes Anna has told on her and threatens revenge for her discharge. Anna attracts the attention of John Stevens, a salesman, who believes her to be like Lena; but when he attempts advances after a dinner, he finds out his mistake. His respect is aroused and he begs Anna to marry him.

For a while the young couple are happy, but Mrs. Biddle's nagging gradually gets on John's nerves and he begins to seek amusement outside of his home. Mrs. Biddle tells Anna she is a fool to stand for this treatment; John is having a good time, why doesn't she go out and enjoy herself. Lena who still harbors a resentment against Anna, plays on the girl's loneliness when she learns from Mrs. Biddle of the conditions in Anna's home. After long miserable waitings for John's homecoming, Anna decides one night to stand it no longer and accepts Lena's invitation to a party.

Arrived at Lena's apartment she is somewhat surprised at the people she meets there, and later in the night, when the men arrived to carouse and make free with the girls, she awakes to a full realization of the nature of the party she is attending. She tries to get away, to flee from the repellant advances of the "Deacon," one of the guests, but Lena tells her there is no escape. As the Deacon seizes Anna in his arms the door bursts open and Dr. Goode enters—he had been a sweetheart of Anna's before her marriage and had never ceased to care for her. He had learned of her presence at the party and had determined to

THE BRAND OF COWARDICE (Rolfe Photoplays; Five Parts; Oct. 23). The cast: Cyril Van Cortlandt Hamilton (Lionel Barrymore); Marcia West (Grace Valentine); Colonel Gorden West (Robert Cummings); Mrs. West (Kate Blancke); Navarro (John Davidson); Idiqui (Frank Montgomery); Corporal Mallin of the National Guard (L. Welheim); Rana, Idiqui's daughter (Tula Belle). Scenario written by Charles Maigne. Directed by John W. Noble.

Cyril Van Cortlandt Hamilton, one of the wealthiest young bachelors in New York, has led a life of ease. He is engaged to be married to Marcia West the daughter of a Colonel in the army. While Cyril and Marcia are at a house party news comes that the National Guard has been called into service. Cyril, a member of a militia regiment and not caring to be subjected to discomfort, declines to accompany his regiment to the border and resigns his commission. For this Marcia breaks her engagement, and accompanies her father and mother to the border, where Col. West is to take command of his regiment. Upon his return home Cyril considers his act and later enlists as a private in an Irish regiment and goes to the border. His society manners annoy the rough and ready men among whom he has cast his lot, and they proceed to make [illegible] for him. Corporal Mallin especially loses no opportunity to bully him. Cyril wanders about by himself when not on duty, and meets Idiqui, a Mexican Indian, whose gratitude he earns by aiding his daughter, Rana, who has fallen and hurt herself.

into camp. He has been educated in the United States and has fallen in love with Marcia, who has refused him. He gets Mallin to steal one of the machine guns for him. When the theft is discovered Mallin accuses Cyril and Idiqui of the crime. Cyril and Idiqui are ordered to the guard house. The Indian attempts to escape to his daughter, whose condition is critical, and Mallin raises a gun to shoot, but Cyril overcomes him. Then, realizing that he has placed himself in a serious position and can hope for no leniency from Mallin, he deserts, Idiqui going with him. They set out afoot on the Mexican side of the river.

Marcia has come across the river on her early morning ride and stumbles upon the bandits taking the automatic away. She is seen and captured, and Cyril and Idiqui, unarmed and helpless, follow in pursuit to find out where she is being taken. Idiqui is struck by a rattlesnake, and Cyril cauterizes the wound. The Indian goes to warn the American troops, and Cyril goes on to the Mexican village, where the Mexicans are carousing in front of Navarete's house, where Marcia is held prisoner. Cyril draws the villagers away from the chief's house by setting the village on fire, and then enters the house in time to save Marcia from Navarete, killing the bandit. They escape. They are overtaken in the morning, and ensconced in a sand pocket put up a brave fight. When one cartridge alone remains, Marcia, now acknowledging Cyril's bravery, asks him to kiss her and then kill her with the remaining cartridge, to save her from falling into the hands of the Mexicans. He is about to do so when he himself is shot down.

The bandits swoop upon the two, but are stopped by Col. West and a number of his men. A squadron of cavalry and a battalion of infantry also come to the rescue from different directions, cutting off the escape of the Mexicans. Cyril is lifted into Col. West's auto in a dying condition. By the blessing of Providence and his own vigorous constitution, Cyril recovers, and two months later, as he watches the return of the regiment with his beloved wife, Marcia, the men recognize him and discipline is forgotten while the marching troops turn to cheer him.

CONSOLIDATED FILM CORP.

THE CRIMSON STAIN (Episode No. 9—"The Haunting Specter"—Two Parts—Oct. 16). It is Tanner who discovers where Stanley is keeping Mrs. Clayton's necklace. Reporting back to Pierre La Rue, Tanner tells how he overheard Stanley say to Mrs. Clayton that the necklace was in his safe. Pierre immediately leaves with his henchmen for Stanley's home, intent on stealing the necklace. As they enter the waiting taxi outside, Robert Clayton comes up, and sensing that something is in the wind, climbs on top of the taxi, unnoticed by the gang.

Arriving at Stanley's home, Pierre, the black mask, and Tanner enter, leaving Kiel on guard. As Kiel's back is turned to the automobile, Clayton springs on his shoulders and knocks him down. Before Kiel can offer resistance, Clayton binds him hand and foot. Clayton then changes clothes with Kiel and enters the house, disguised as Kiel.

Within the house, Pierre, Tanner and the black mask are making preparations for blowing up the safe. Just as they are ready to do the job, Stanley, unaware of his visitors' presence, enters the house. As he enters the room, the explosion goes off, knocking him unconscious. Pierre puts the necklace in his pocket. The telephone rings and Clayton, disguised as Kiel, answers it. But before he can speak, Pierre orders him to put down the receiver. An idea flashes into Clayton's head and in putting down the receiver, he shoves some books under it, preventing a disconnection. At the other end of the wire is Florence and the epithets directed at the unconscious Stanley reaches her ears. She also overhears Pierre's order to put Stanley in a trunk. She rushes out and with several policemen, jumps into her automobile and speeds to Stanley's rescue.

Realizing his impotency against the Crimson Stain gang, Clayton controls himself. Stanley is put in the trunk and as the gang exit with the trunk, Clayton picks Pierre's pocket, recovering the necklace. As the trunk is put in the taxi and the gang file in and drive off, Florence and the police come into the scene and they give chase. The chase is close until they reach a grade crossing, when a train comes between pursuer and pursued. The short delay gives Pierre a chance to throw the trunk into the river. Clayton interferes and in the struggle his disguise is torn off, Pierre attacks him. Florence and the police give chase immediately the train has gone past. Florence, seeing the trunk in the water, makes a dive from the bridge while the automobile with the police continues in the pursuit of Pierre.

A strong swimmer, Florence has no trouble in bringing the trunk ashore, where, with the aid of Clayton she opens it, revealing a new phase to "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

WITCHCRAFT (Lasky—Five Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Suzette (Fannie Ward), Richard Wayne (Jack Dean), Makepeace Struble (Paul Weigel); Nokomis (Lillian Leighton). Directed by Frank Reicher.

Until the Governor's proclamation put an end to the folly hundreds of innocent people suffered persecution in the New England colonies in 1692-93 from the horrible delusion of witchcraft. Suzette and her mother, Hugenot refugees, take up their residence in one of the colonies. The mother falls ill and Suzette enlists the services of Nokomis, an Indian, to assist her. Nokomis is considered a witch and Suzette's mother's delirium strengthens the suspicion.

Suzette meets Richard Wayne, ward of the town miser, Makepeace Struble. He accompanies her to her home, and is seen by old Struble, who is angry, desiring the girl for himself. Struble sends Wayne out of the village ostensibly to join the Governor's staff, but in reality to get him out of the way that he may marry Suzette. He succeeds in convincing Suzette that the only way she can save her mother from persecution as a witch is to marry him, and horrified though she is by the idea, she consents. Just after the wedding ceremony, Suzette's mother dies. Nokomis gives the girl a talisman telling her it will make her every wish come true.

Upon his return, Captain Wayne is thunderstruck that Struble has married Suzette, and believing the old man's money her only motive, fails to show her proper respect. He is surprised at Suzette's dignified rebuff, realizes his great love for her, and decides to go away forever.

Struble is brutal to his young wife, and the talisman in her hand, she tells him he would be better dead. Shortly afterwards Struble is taken ill. Suzette learns from Nokomis that the Indians are planning a mutiny, and hurries to obtain the assistance of Captain Wayne. In the meantime the old man dies accusing Suzette of having cursed him, and when Suzette returns she is found guilty of witchcraft and sentenced to be hanged. Wayne and his men save the colony, and he succeeds in reaching the Governor, who arrives in time to save the innocent girl, and puts an end once and for all to the folly of witchcraft. Wayne takes Suzanne into his arms and away from the old scenes to a new life full of hope for them both.

LOVE NEVER DIES (Five Parts—Oct. 23). The cast: Cecile, the child (Dorothy Clark); Cecile, the woman (Ruth Stonehouse); Felix, the child (Maurice Kusell); Felix, the man (Franklyn Farnum); M. Lecoq (Kingsley Benedict); M. Jarnier (Arthur Hoyt); Madame Jarnier (Mrs. Witting); Andre Le Notre (Wm. Canfield); M. Lescot (Wadsworth Harris); Henri Moreau (T. D. Crittenden). Scenario written by Harvey Gates. Directed by Wm. Worthington.

In childhood Cecile and Felix were playmates. Felix was gifted as a violinist and Cecile was fond of dancing. When Cecile's mother died her rich uncle, a domineering Frenchman, adopted her. Felix wandered the country over as a vagrant musician, until after ten years he secures employment as violinist in the orchestra at the opera house in the city where Cecile dwells.

Wandering one evening Felix leans over a garden wall to behold a young girl dancing on the green. Having his violin under his arm Felix begins playing a measure, attracts the girl's attention and in the end they recognize each other as childhood sweethearts. The crabbed old uncle comes in search of the girl and, upon discovering the unconventional conduct of the young folks, strikes the girl with his cane and orders Felix from his grounds.

Cecile rebels and leaves the grounds with Felix to begin living with him without the formality of marriage. There are weeks of happiness for Felix and Cecile, until the uncle demands of the police that they arrest Felix for unlawful practices and restore the girl to her guardian. At the opera house Cecile has met the director of the orchestra, who compliments her upon her dancing and flatters her vanity by declaring she should go to Paris as a premier dancer in the opera.

When Felix is thrown into jail the uncle takes Cecile home with him. The girl takes advantage of an opportunity, and goes to Lecoq, the orchestra director, and begs him to take her to Paris. Lecoq has that day had an offer to become director at the Paris Grand Opera, and the girl conceives the idea of helping Felix from his predicament by effacing herself from the situation.

To Paris she goes with Lecoq and the officials liberate Felix. With heavy heart the musician buries his grief in composing an opera. When the score is completed he sends his manager to Paris with the work. Lecoq is interviewed and discredits the value of the composition, but says he will present it to the management. Months pass and Felix hears nothing from his opera. He goes to Paris for the purpose of investigating.

The day Felix arrives at the Paris Opera House, Lecoq is hailed as the author of a new opera. The premier of the ballet is advertised as Mlle. Genze. Felix goes that evening to the opera, discovers that Lecoq has stolen his composition, and also sees in Mlle. Genze the Cecile who deserted him and thereafter left him uninformed. Forcing his way to Mlle. Genze's dressing room, he finds her prostrated from an injury to her ankle that will keep her forever from dancing.

Denouncing the girl Felix forces Lecoq to publicly [illegible]. He then retires to seclusion crowned with the laurels of genius. Cecile languishes with a broken heart. Her physician learns her story, prevails upon her uncle to take her once more into his home, and when the girl still shows no sign of recovery, the uncle goes to Felix and tells him that Cecile lingers at death's door because of a broken heart. Felix forgets everything but his love for Cecile, goes to her and there is a blissful reunion.

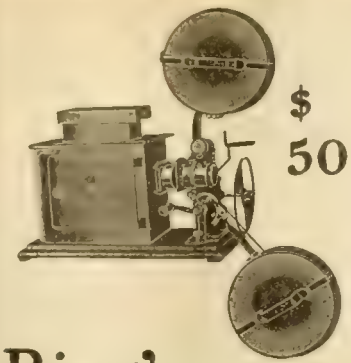
"BEATRICE FAIRFAX"—Episode No. 10—"Play Ball"—(Two parts—Oct. 9)—The cast: Jimmy Barton (Harry Fox); Beatrice Fairfax (Grace Darling); Rita Malone (Olive Thomas); Bert Kerrigan (Nigel Barrie).

Martin O'Day, professional gambler and saloon-keeper, has bet heavily on the New York Yankees winning from the Giants in the deciding game between the two clubs for the championship of New York City. O'Day has been led to believe that Bert Kerrigan, star pitcher of the Giants, will not be in condition to play. At the last moment, however, McGraw, to the consternation of the Yankee backers, announces that Kerrigan will pitch. Realizing that he stands to lose many thousands of dollars, O'Day decides to kidnap Kerrigan. The pitcher is engaged to marry Rita Malone, and has already furnished an apartment for his bride-to-be.

O'Day sends an anonymous letter to Rita, warning her that Kerrigan has another girl friend, and that if she calls at a certain hotel at 9 o'clock the morning of the game, she can get proof of his duplicity. He also sends a letter to Kerrigan, telling him that Rita is untrue and visits the hotel. Kerrigan is told to watch a certain window of the hotel at 9.30 the next morning. Rita, greatly worried, writes to Beatrice Fairfax, who confides in Jimmy Barton, the newspaper reporter. Jimmy is already working on the story of the ball game, and has had several interviews with Donovan, of the Yankees, and McGraw, of the Giants. He knows that O'Day is betting heavily on the Giants and goes to see him.

Meantime Rita and Kerrigan have separately gone to the hotel. Rita is escorted into a room, the window of which Kerrigan is watching. She is seized from behind and her face is covered with kisses. From the street, it seems to Kerrigan that she is returning the caresses. He



Bing's Home Entertainer

Here's a little machine, simple in its construction, and easy of operation, for which there is a place in every home.

It projects motion picture film as perfectly in the home as is possible in the average theater.

Light is provided by a baby arc, supplied with current from the ordinary electric light socket, controlled through a special rheostat.

The baby arc develops 800 candlepower, with about six amperes of current. The rheostat supplied is suitable for 110, 150 or 220 volts.

Pictures projected are about 6 x 8 feet in size, and splendid results are possible with a throw up to twenty-five feet.

Standard size film is used, making every film exchange in the country a constant source of supply for subjects. Reel boxes are of 1,000 feet capacity.

[illegible] bound. One of the gang then sends a note to O'Day, telling him that Kerrigan is trapped and being held. The note arrives, while Jimmy, feigning drunkenness, is talking to O'Day. Jimmy [illegible] and covers O'Day with a revolver. Then he makes the gambler write a note to his subordinates, telling them to obey orders from Jimmy, after which he ties O'Day on a settee.

Jimmy hurries to the hotel, presents the note and secures possession of Kerrigan and Rita. It is then afternoon and the ball game is on. Beatrice has just arrived at the hotel too. The four leap into an automobile and there is a wild race through the city streets to the Polo grounds, in which several policemen take part. The fifth inning is being played when they finally reach the crowded grounds, and the score is 2 to 0 in favor of the Yankees. The Giants bat and score three runs in the sixth, giving them a lead of one. The Yanks come back in their half and the first three men up get on bases.

Kerrigan has hurried to the clubhouse and at this stage of the game appears on the field in uniform. "It's up to you to save us, Bert," says McGraw to Kerrigan; "there's three on and nobody out." Kerrigan goes in, strikes out the next three and holds the Yankees safe for the remaining innings, the Giants winning, 3 to 2.

It is not until after the game that Kerrigan can explain his mysterious absence to Manager McGraw. Then, too, Rita and Kerrigan explain their presence at the hotel and Jimmy tells of O'Day's attempt to wreck their lives to accomplish his end. While the great crowd is surging from the grounds, Beatrice and Jimmy hurry to their offices to write the story.

KLEINE-EDISON-SELIG-ESSANAY.

THE RETURN OF EVE (Essanay—Five parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Eve (Edna Mayo); Adam (Eugene O'Brien); David Winters (Edward Mawson); Seymour Purchwell (Edward Arnold); Mrs. Tupper-Bellamy (Emily Fitzroy); Clarice Bellamy (Leona Ball); John Raymond (John Cossar); Trixie Shevlin (Renee Clemons). Written by Lee Wilson Dodd. Directed by Arthur Berthelot.

Believing that over-civilization was destroying the race, Eli Tupper, an eccentric millionaire, took two unrelated orphan children, a boy and a girl, and placed them in a wilderness—there in the care of an old tutor, David Winters, to grow up as a new Adam and Eve, and become path-breakers of a better race. In delightful simplicity and educated as much as they could be without contact with the world, the children attain the age of nineteen years.

Mrs. Tupper-Bellamy, society leader, lives in costly splendor against the day when she hopes to inherit her brother's millions. She plans to marry her daughter, Clarice, to Seymour Purchwell, society idler of standing and also an attorney. Purchwell makes it plain that the marriage can occur if Eli Tupper's fortune goes to the girl and her mother. When Tupper dies the sister and her set learn for the first time of his old experiment. His will provides that the sister must take Adam and Eve into civilization in order to win an annuity of $50,000 a year. The orphans are heirs to the rest. Purchwell sets out to find them.

He locates the Eden of the boy and girl and old Winters, and is literally the serpent in the garden. Winters resents leaving, but a clash between Adam and Purchwell decides him. Plunged amidst the whirl of social affairs, Eve is delighted, Adam is disgusted with the sham and deceit of society, and pleads with her to return to Eden. She refuses. Winters takes him to Paris to study.

Purchwell, seeking the Tupper fortune, turns his attention to Eve. Clarice is in a frenzy of affection spurned, and after finding the two alone she accuses them before the whole house party. Eve, in her innocence, does not readily grasp the meaning of the charge. When it dawns on her she faces the guests, and in her bitterness denounces them as tools of passion and greed, and announces that she will give up all and return to Eden. With old Winters, she returns. Adam is recalled from Paris, and the girl and the boy, now awake to their love, together with their beloved guardian give up the world.

THE HEART OF THE HILLS (Ed[illegible]—Five Parts—Oct. 30).—The cast: [illegible] (Pigelow Cooper); Sant (George Wright); Ali (Hughes Price); Edith (Edith [illegible]); Eric (Eric McKay); Bedrell (Conway [illegible]); [illegible]; Dr. Pettigrew (Charles Sutton); McInnes (Crawford Kent); Darton (Henry Leone); Karaji (Robert [illegible]). In her struggles to retain possession of the infant she clutched the slender chain from which the sacred ruby was suspended around the neck of Sani, and when Madgwick came home to find her [illegible] he picked up the ruby by her side and kept it as a momento. Sani, in reparation for the crime he committed in stealing the ruby, consecrated the child he had about her neck to the temple from which the stone had come and then vanished.

After making a wide search for his child, Madgwick, wearied of India, returned to England and married. He had two children, and gradually his memories of India faded away. He was happy until his wife died, but, after that, his sorrows were many, because his daughter, Edith, was vain and selfish, and his son, Eric, was wasteful. While the years were passing by in England, time was also running its course in India. Irma, the stolen daughter of Madgwick, reached an age when she had to face the ordeal of consecration into the ranks of the vestal virgins. Sani loved the girl because she was a daughter of a woman he had loved, and, although he was old and weak, he was present to see her pass through the flames at her time of consecration. When he saw that she came safely through the cleansing fires, his emotion got beyond his control, and he was recognized by the priest that he had slain many years before. The priest rapidly formed a plan to secure the return of the lost ruby, and before the aged Sani died he agreed to the plan, and wrote a letter which would introduce Irma into the home of Madgwick in London.

Irma, knowing her mission and sworn to secrecy, goes to England to the Sedationists for the express purpose of regaining possession of the jewel lost in London she falls in love with Dannis Redgell, a business associate of Madgwick. She wishes to marry Madgwick and implores Karaji, the London representative of the Seditionists, to release her from her vows, and he consents to do this on the stipulation that she will contribute a large sum of money to the treasury of the organization. Shortly after this Madgwick dies, and, in a will made shortly before his death, leaves the bulk of his estate to Irma, practically disinheriting his children by his second wife. Irma leaves the house and cannot be located, and, when Eric, desirous of obtaining possession of the sacred stone that was to be buried with his father's body, enters the vault and opens the casket and finds evidence that his father died from poisoning, suspicion is directed against the girl. An investigation is started by Scotland Yard, and Irma is informed, and the police are searching for her. One night, disheveled and nervous, she appears before Redgell in his apartment, and tells him that for many days she has been held a prisoner by Karaji, who wished to make sure of obtaining the money that he demanded for her release.

She informs Redgell that there was a meeting of the Seditionists in progress when she escaped from the house of Karaji. Scotland Yard is notified and a raid which results in the arrest of the mutinous Indians is made immediately. Among those who are caught in the raid is Ali, an Indian who was trusted servant of Madgwick. He is accused of the murder of his employer, but he denies his guilt, at the same time clearing absolutely the name of Irma. He tells how Madgwick, years before was afflicted with a disease that made him susceptible to attacks that would suspend the function of his body for several days at a time, leaving him dead to all appearances. Fearful of being buried alive at some time, he prepared a small vial of virulent poison, which Ali was sworn to place on his breast when he was buried. Ali did this and Madgwick, waking from his trance and finding himself buried, took the poison and ended his life.

With the Sedionists broken up and Eric and Edith having gone to Australia, this story comes to an end with Redgell and Irma happy in each others arms.

THE SHIELDING SHADOW—Episode No. 4. "The Earthquake" (Two Parts—Astra—Oct. 22). Sebastian Navarro reads in a newspaper that One Lamp Louie has struck gold out West and has become a millionaire. Sebastian, a nervous wreck from the increasing visitations of the mysterious "Shielding Shadow," decides to flee from it and with Leontine, he journeys to the remote mining town where Louie has found his fortune. Arriving, the first person they see is the Mysterious Stranger—Ravengar.

The Shielding Shadow appears to Louie in his shack and hypnotizes him into writing a confession of his part in the forgery for Sebastian which sent Jerry Carson to prison and later to his death. Sebastian, who has made his way to the shack, enters as Louie is signing his name to it, and during a struggle to secure it, the paper disappears as if picked up by an unseen hand. Later one of a band of crooks overhears Sebastian offer Ravengar $10,000 for it. He refuses and Sebastian leaps at him, but the fight is interrupted by an earthquake which wrecks the town. Ravengar, while rescuing Leontine, loses the paper, which is secured by the crook leader. After a wild pursuit he eludes Ravengar by jumping from a high bridge.

PRUDENCE THE PIRATE—(5 Parts—Gold Rooster—Oct. 22).—The cast: Prudence (Gladys Hulette); Aunty (Flora Finch); Meeks (Riley Chamberlin); Tommy (Wm. Parke, Jr.); John Astorbilt (Barnett Parker).

Prudence arrives from boarding school at the home of the aunt who intends to usher her into society. Prue balks at "debutting" and the only warmth she extends to Astorbilt, the season's "catch," and one of the houseparty guests, is in the form of some hot bouillon which she mischievously spills down his neck.

The results convince Prue that the only one in the house with a sense of humor is Meeks, the butler, and a close friendship springs up between the two. He hints to her that he has been to sea and "seen things" and when pressed further confides that he was once a Pirate! All Meeks ever saw of the sea was as a cabin boy on a missionary ship, but he spins wild yarns of adventure and Prue, her romantic young nature fired, decides to become a bonny buccaneer. With much secrecy and aided by her entire summer's spending money a schooner is rented and chistened the "Bucket of Blood." A crew of tramps is recruited and all is complete save for a chaperon and a deck scrubber. Hoisting her black flag her aunt's house-boat is attacked and the old lady and Astorbilt captured to fill those capacities. Astorbilt bribes the crew to mutiny and Prue finds herself a prisoner on her own ship.

The rough and tumble life and the crisp salt air cracks Astorbilt's effeminate pink tea veneer and from beneath it the true manhood emerges. Gradually Prue finds her heart also becoming a captive to the changed individual. A fire breaks out and he rescues her at danger to himself. Plunging into the sea with his fair burden he swims to a bell buoy to wait the coming boat. There Prue, with her customary disregard for conventions, promises to lower the black flag and surrender her heart forever.

IN THE MESH OF HER HAIR (Pathe—Two Parts—Oct. 22).—A novelist spending his vacation by the sea is attracted by the wonderful wealth of long, black hair that crowns the beauty of a humble fisherman's daughter. He plays with her heart and after a time returns to the city. But he finds he cannot forget and conscience-stricken at his philandering he follows an impulse and sails back.

In the meanwhile the despondent girl seeks a watery grave. What appears to be an apparition, but what is really flesh and blood, is the means of saving them both and bringing them happiness.

HEINE AND THE MAGIC MAN (Rolin—Oct. 22).—Heine finds a ticket to the big show and to prove "you can't fool Heine," declares that the magic man is not a real "magicer" at all, but a bush league faker. He starts something he can't finish, and gives the audience a highly amusing number not on the bill.

ATHLETIC MOVEMENTS ANALYZED (Pathe—Oct. 22).—A wonderful series of pictures taken with the Pathe Ultra-Rapid camera of movements in athletic games which the normal eye misses. A companion to "Animal Movements Analyzed," "Movements the Eye Misses," etc.

BLOSSOM TIME IN JAPAN (On same reel as foregoing).—A beautiful split reel showing Japan in full blossom, heralding the coming of Spring. A panorama of bewitching loveliness spreads as far as the eye can see.

Triangle Film Corporation

THE VAGABOND PRINCE (Kay Bee—Five Parts—Oct. 22).—The cast: Prince Tonio (H. B. Warner); Fluffy (Dorothy Dalton); Burton Randall (Roy Laidlaw); Princess Althalia (Katherine Kirkwood); "Spud" Murphy (Charles K. French); "Red" Kelly (J. W. McLaughlin); Count Sergis Metropolski (J. Frank Burke); Mrs. Finnegan (Agnes Herring). Directed by Charles Giblyn.

The young prince, Tonio of Bothalia, is tired of the pomps and pettiness of the little Balkan principality, which his father rules. He longs to venture out in the world and to seek adventures. On the day of his betrothal for dynastic purposes, to the Princess Athalia, an elderly daughter of a neighboring protectorate, this feeling of exasperation becomes acute and he wanders a distance from the castle. While in this mood he chances upon a wandering artist, Burton Randall, of San Francisco, who sympathizes with him, and who urges him to grasp the first opportunity of leaving the court.

The prince follows the advice of his artist friend, slips away from the castle and sometime later arrives in San Francisco on a sailing ship as an ordinary seaman. With his sailor friends, he spends his first night ashore in one of the music halls on the Barbary Coast. Fluffy, a young and fascinating dancer, is insulted by "Spud" Murphy, the political boss of the district. Tonio comes to her rescue and after a free-for-all fight, lands in a prison cell. Fluffy, who sticks by her rescuer, finds that the only man he knows in San Francisco is the artist, Burton Randall. She enlists Randall's sympathies. He comes to the rescue of the prince. Randall takes him and Fluffy to the Bohemian quarters he occupies, where he installs them with a coterie of artists who work, play and starve in a set of dingy studios. Tonio is fitted out with foils and paraphernalia, and gives fencing lessons to those who have the courage to mount the steep streets which lead to the studio. These are happy days for the emancipated prince, who falls in love with Fluffy.

While the prince is pursuing his romance, there are great happenings in Bothalia. The King and Crown Prince have been assassinated, and the missing Tonio is heir to the throne. The Bothalian Embassy manages to trace Tonio to his Bohemian lair and bring all diplomatic pressure to force him to break his romance with Fluffy and return to Bothalia. But love is stronger than diplomacy and after a struggle with his ministers, Prince Tonio decides to renounce his allegiance to Bothalia and take to the open road with Fluffy.

FIFTY-FIFTY (Fine Arts—Five Parts—Oct. 22).—The cast: Naomi (Norma Talmadge); Frederic Harmon (J. W. Johnston); Helen Carew (Marie Chambers); Louise O'Mally (Ruth Darling); The Man from Sing Sing (H. S. Northrup); The Judge (Frank Currier); The Detective (Dodson Mitchell); The Man About Town (W. P. Richmond). Directed by Allan Dwan.

Naomi, a girl of the studios in New York's artist quarter, is possessed of a superabundance of vitality and a desire for continuous frolic and adventure. One night, at a gay party, one of the men is deceived by Naomi's effervescent spirits into thinking than she is a much more unconventional girl than she herself has any idea of being. He is told by his companions that Naomi is not the sort of girl he thinks her to be, but insists that he can prove that she is, and even makes a wager to that effect. Naomi, really quite unsophisticated, is tricked by the man into accompanying him into a hotel of questionable repute, where the two, innocent of any wrong doing, are captured in a police raid, and Naomi has an unpleasant experience in the night court. Friends come to her aid and she is released.

Not long after this, Frederic Harmon, a broker, comes into the girl's life. The two fall in love and are married. The birth of a baby completes the transformation of the girl's character and she cares only for her home, her husband and her child. The husband, however, does not settle down to home life. He is still much inclined to the gayeties of the set in which he had become acquainted with Naomi, and when she refuses to take further part in the revels of the Bohemian crowd, he fares forth by himself. It is not long before he meets Helen Carew, a woman with a past and without a conscience, who fascinates him partly for her amusement and partly for mercenary reasons.

Eventually Harmon's infatuation for the other woman becomes known to Naomi. She is heartbroken, particularly when Harmon goes so far as to ask her to divorce him in order that he may marry Helen. This she refuses to do. Helen, anxious to get the man entirely into her clutches, enters into a plot with a crooked detective whereby Naomi is to be caught in a compromising situation, thus giving her husband grounds for divorce from her. The detective picks up a convict just out of Sing Sing and by means of a decoy message Naomi is induced to go to a hotel room where the man from Sing Sing is waiting for her. Once the two are in the room together it is raided by newspaper reporters and a photographer, and a flashlight of Naomi in the arms of the convict is obtained.

The husband brings suit for divorce, offering as evidence the stories of the witnesses at the raid and the flashlight photograph. He also asks custody of the child. Naomi startles the judge and spectators when she declares that she should be allowed to keep the child, because Harmon is not its father. The judge, however, suspects that Naomi is sacrificing her reputation in order to keep her baby, and, calling the girl into his private office, he gets the truth from her.

Meantime there has been an unexpected development in the affairs of Helen. The man from Sing Sing had been her lover before he went to prison, and she is unpleasantly surprised when the detective's use of him brings him again into her life. The ex-convict is in Helen's rooms, trying to renew their old association when Harmon comes to see her. Helen hastily hides the jail-bird, but while she is talking to Harmon the convict comes out and tells Harmon of the woman's past and his connection with it.

Horrified at the revelation of Helen's true character, Harmon goes out of her life at once and forever, but in the course of time succeeds in winning his way back into his home.

In Buying a Motion Picture Machine

make sure it is equipped with the new projection objective, which combines the highest perfection of optical corrections with a mechanically correct focusing construction.

Marlux

There is no rotation of the lens in focusing and consequently no possibility of a displacement of the image on the screen.

The Marlux gives a steady, brilliant light that sharply illuminates every part of the picture, and yet it requires but a minimum of attention from the operator.

Equip Your Projection Machines NOW with the

TransVerteR
TRADE MARK

It's the surest and quickest way to show better pictures; build a bigger business and make larger profits.

Don't be criticised by your patrons because of blurred pictures, slip-ups and delays. Don't put up with the inconvenience, annoyance and expense of interior projection equipment. Take a lesson from hundreds of the largest and most prominent picture houses who have been through it all—and now won't have any generator but the Transverter in their booths.

Economy of Cost and Operation

The Transverter is compact, simple and easily installed in any booth; operates on A.C. power circuit and meets every requirement for a steady, brilliant, easily controlled light for artistic projection of any pictures.

Considering its capacity, efficiency, and economy of power and maintenance, it is lower in price than any other make.

Order now before the Fall rush begins. Delivery can be made in two or three weeks' time. Send for September Bulletin giving complete description and net prices uniform to all.

Projection Current at power rates In New York

This is of immense importance to every theatre owner and manager. A further incentive to the use of direct current from a converter for projection.

If you use alternating current now, you can produce eight times the amount of light you are getting with the same amount of direct current from a

Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converter

Let us prove this. Send for Booklet "Ghosts."

Light Furnished Through Rotary Converters Must Be Charged at Power Rate in New York City.

A decision of considerable moment to the industry was recently handed down in a case before the Public Service Commission of the First New York District.

There does not seem to be any standard practice as regards the use of rotary converters and motor-generators. In some states the commissions have said that the lighting rate must be charged, but in a number of other cases the rate is that for power.

The latest opinion states that "no electric lighting concern may charge a customer for current at the rate for illuminating purposes even if the current is used to operate a motor intended to produce illumination." The question came up on the complaint of the Vaudeau Amusement Company of 4,705 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, which complained of the rate charged by the Edison Electric Illuminating Company.

The hearing was held by Commissioner Hayward, who decided that the current furnished by the company was for power because it was only needed to run a motor. The fact that the motor was used for lighting purposes made no difference. Under the decision the company will have to reduce its rate to that charged for current for power purposes.

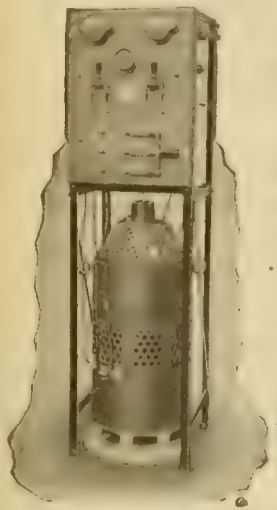
Hill Motor Generator

For Moving Picture Arc Lamps

DELIVERS true direct current from alternating current, producing

STEADY WHITE LIGHT PROJECTION OF TRUE COLOR VALUE, NO FLICKER OR FLARE



And three times the illumination is obtained on a standard screen up to 120 ft. throw as compared to the alternating current arc for the same current.

It is most economical for voltage reduction of direct-current service lines to the 60 volt, required at the arc. It eliminates current wasting resistances, and gives the greatest flexibility for accurate voltage control. The capacity is sufficient for two lamps burning simultaneously and the dissolve is accomplished without a break.

Vertical in form, with base covering 15"x15", it takes up the minimum of space in the booth; and running in ball bearings, it operates noiselessly and without vibration. It is a special machine, designed especially for motion picture work.

L-KO KOMEDY News

JULIUS STERN, Pres. 6140 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood, Cal. Nov. 4, 1916

JULIUS STERN,
President and General Manager L-Ko Comedy Co.

THE old adage, "A new broom sweeps clean," seems to have unusual realization in the recent reorganization of the L-Ko Komedy Co.'s forces at Hollywood, California. Since the advent of Julius Stern at the L-KO studios things have been happening thick and fast. Now that Mr. Stern has been elected to the office of President and General Manager he has swept aside all the old time methods of comedy productions, surrounded himself with the most capable comedy people in the business and is headed on the straight road to a huge success. Associated with Mr. Stern at the L-KO studios in Hollywood are his brother, Abe Stern, as Secretary and Treasurer, and J. G. Blystone as Director General, plus a combination of other clever minds not found in the comedy film field in this or any other country. The old regime has been entirely discarded. Entirely new and cleverer methods have been instituted throughout the entire plant. The vulgar slap stick has been "canned." The old time thread bare "love in the park—brick throwing picture has also been sent to the scrap heap. L-KO'S from Mr. Stern's advent have taken on a new dress. Newer in idea—newer in props, newer in every detail of production and no expense being spared now to make L-KO the topnotchers in the entire comedy producing field. Mr. Stern can feel complimented by the associates who have surrounded him and thru whose loyalty and brains, plus Mr. Stern's own initiative, augur a huge success for L-KO films and for all Exhibitors who are now showing them or who will show them.

"ALICE IN SOCIETY"

Latest L-KO Makes Tremendous Hit in New York City

Manager of Mt. Morris Theatre Says It Tops Any Thing in Comedies Ever Shown At His House

WHEN all of us in the film trades get right down to brass tacks and talk plain without the fancy advertising phrases that anyone can use, we all know in our hearts that the acid test for any picture whether drama or comedy is the public. When the public respond so strong as to stand out a block long in line to see a comedy, you can beture-sweetlife its got to be a good comedy. Alice Howell in "Alice in Society," one of the latest L-KO releases, stood the crowds out in line for hours, and you can take the theatre manager's word for it as being a good comedy or not just as you wish. Anyhow read what M. Edelstein of the Mount Morris Theatre (one of the largest theatres in Harlem) said about "Alice in Society:" "All that you have heard about comedies not being well done in three reels is all a mistake. I write you of my experience, not of my own opinion. My audience, the other night saw your 'Alice in Society' and they screamed and screamed and screamed from the first flicker of the picture till the very last. I have been an Exhibitor many years and played all sorts of comedies and I must admit that I never heard any audience go into such convulsions of laughter as they did on your 'Alice in Society.' I watched it myself and laughed till the tears ran down my face. First time I've done that in many months." Signed M. Edelstein, Mt. Morris Theatre, 116th St. and 5th Ave., New York City. Even the critical reviewers on the trade papers stated that "Alice in Society" was a side splitter.

ALICE IN SOCIETY

List of Winning L-KO Releases growing bigger all the time

You simply can't hold 'em back. Every release adds up to a larger total of comedy successes. L-KO growing by leaps and bounds. Reason? Quality—punch—action—superiority in every detail. Book these and watch for the others coming constantly.

All these L-Ko's made exclusively under the direct supervision of J. G. Blystone, since the advent of Mr. Stern as President of L-Ko:

"Crooked from the Start," "Cold Hearts and Hot Flames," "A Surgeon's Revenge," "Tillie's Terrible Tumble," "A Rural Romance," "Terrors of a Turkish Bath," "Alice in Society," "Murdered by Mistake," "A Mid-Air Mixup," "Unhand Me, Villain," "Lizzie's Lingering Love," "Where Is My Husband," "Temper-mental Mother-in-Law," "The Right Car but the Wrong Berth," "Where Is My Wife," "Pirates of the Air."

Book "ALICE IN SOCIETY" Advertise your head off. Describe it as the funniest picture ever projected on any screen. The picture will make good ten times over. It's a whale. It's a riot. Get it NOW.

COMING

Sensational L-KO with Alice Howell and great cast

Sh-h-h-h-h Whisper it softly. Keep it dark temporarily. Careful, so on hearing the news that your competitor don't get it away from you. It's coming. A sensational L-KO Comedy Release that is going to set the world upside down with laughter. Yes, and Alice Howell plays the lead with a supporting cast that will make all other comedy producers envious. It's going to be a genuine 4 base smash with the bases full and no mistake. Sh-h-h-h-h-h, don't let it out temporarily but keep your eye on the L-KO ads in the trade papers.

make PARAMOUNT paramount.

FANNIE WARD LASKY STAR

ONE SUMMER afternoon, Caesar Augustus, Emperor of Rome, said "Rome is great enough" —and from that very moment, Rome made a dive for the second division, where she has remained unto this day.

Paramount producers see the moral very plainly: That which is good enough is likely to be good for nothing.

PRESENT
"GLORIANA"
A DRAMA of HAPPINESS
WITH A REMARKABLE CAST,

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, (INC.)

NO star is big enough to be "the whole show." In subordinating the star to the play BLUEBIRDS set two new and higher standards. The policy of "The Play's the Thing" makes for better plays—while the adequate filling of all parts greatly improves the acting and the production as a whole.

Thus all BLUEBIRDS are smooth, even performances; made so by choosing perfect types for every part, no matter how small, or seemingly unimportant. If a star fits a part a star fills that part, but the play, the basis of all dramatic entertainment, must come first and the actor or actress must be chosen to fit.

It is easy to find stars to fit plays, but it is not easy always to find plays to suit stars. You can offer BLUEBIRDS in your theatre with the confident assurance that you are presenting perfect moving picture entertainment which will not only please, but which will draw the patrons back to your house to see other BLUEBIRDS.

These facts told to over ten million people every week in the Saturday Evening Post, are packing theatres showing BLUEBIRDS with the very best class of audiences. You can come in for your share of this constantly increasing business by showing BLUEBIRDS in your theatre.

Dear Sir:-

In placing our booking for "Lonesome Luke Comedies" for November, we would like to mention the fact that in our humble estimation we have never played as satisfactory comedies as the above.

The producers seem to have hit the happy combination of novel plots - with a mighty clever comedy cast. We find that "Luke" does as much business, and gives better satisfaction than any comedy we have played here, and as you know we play them all.

Yours very truly,

G. D. Stanchfield

FINE ARTS

There's a "something" indefinable about this dainty, demure little star that's irresistible. Her sweet, winsome manner reaches right down to the heart of every moving picture patron and "gets" it. Somehow they can't help loving Bessie Love.

And when you show "Sister of Six," the latest picture in which this star appears, you will understand why this is true. You'll enjoy it—and so will your patrons. They'll go away loving Bessie Love more than ever.

Louise Glaum and Howard Hickman

in "Somewhere in France"—Kay Bee

A picture that holds you in suspense until the very end—a tale so full of mystery that you cannot guess the outcome—a story so gripping that hours pass like minutes. Such a picture is "Somewhere in France," the new TRIANGLE PLAY co-starring Louise Glaum and Howard Hickman, written by the late Richard Harding Davis.

There's no question about the way this picture will be received.

Countless Thrills Abound in "A Lass of the Lumberlands"

DARING deeds, reckless risk of life and limb, and countless other thrills abound in "A Lass of the Lumberlands," the new chapter-play in which Helen Holmes is appearing. Many exhibitors thought the acme of daring had been reached in "The Girl and the Game." The public held its breath and believed that nothing more daring or toolhardy could be accomplished than some of the feats they witnessed in that series of railroad tales. But now "A Lass of the Lumberlands" is proving that the limit has not yet been reached. Helen Holmes and the company supporting her have staged sensations that outdo anything that happened in "The Girl and the Game."

Auto Plunges Off Bridge.

Chapter one is largely introductory of what is to follow. It is the foundation stone upon which the rest of the structure is erected. It closes with the scene depicting the breaking of a log-jam with dynamite just as a mother and baby are crossing the river on the logs. With chapter two big thrills begin. First of all, you see a five-passenger automobile driven at reckless speed through road obstructions, set up to bar all traffic across a certain bridge. Arrived at the center of the bridge, the driver loses control of his car. It swerves to one side. It dashes against the frail barrier at the side of the bridge. It turns end over end and plunges 75 feet into the river beneath. Its occupants are hurled far out into space.

Daring Helen Holmes.

Following close upon the first thrill comes another. Helen Holmes and Leo Maloney drive a locomotive out on a lofty railroad trestle. Stopping the engine at the middle of the structure, they fasten ropes to either end of a canoe. Helen seats herself in the birch-bark fabric. You will fairly hold your breath as she is slowly lowered down, and down and down into a chasm of immense depth. It seems she will never reach the bottom. Just as the last inch of rope seems payed out, the frail canoe sinks to rest on the bosom of the river. Another second and the ropes are loosened. Helen seizes a paddle. A moment more and she is off again on her race to save the timber claim. And these are only two of the sensations in "A Lass of the Lumberlands." Those exhibitors who have not yet arranged to show this powerful chapter-play can make bookings now at any of the 68 Mutual exchanges.

"Behind the Screen" Is Newest Mutual-Chaplin

A perfect hurricane of mirth will sweep across the country with the release of "Behind the Screen," the newest of Chaplin-Mutual features. Never before was Charlie in a funnier mood. Never before did he depict for the screen so many absurd and ridiculous adventures. In times gone by various comedians have attempted to enact a comedy of studio life. The public has been given a peep behind the scenes and shown how certain types of production are staged by motion-picture directors. But never before has anybody played horse with the serious business of film-making in the fashion that Charlie Chaplin does. The mere thought of Charlie, turned loose in a big motion-picture plant to do as he wills, brings smiles to the lips. "Behind the Screen" is the seventh of the Mutual-Chaplin Specials. The previous releases are "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "The Vagabond," "One A M," "The Count" and "The Pawnshop."

The Saturday Evening Post, the world's greatest weekly magazine, pays homage to Charlie Chaplin, the world's greatest comedian, by alloting to him space on its front cover in the issue of October 14.

Mary Miles Minter & Margarita Fischer This Week's Stars

DAINTY MARY MILES MINTER and beautiful Margarita Fischer are the stars of this week's Mutual Star Productions. Both are famous wherever films are shown. Both are known box-office magnets of real worth. The features in which they appear are widely varied in character. The Minter Star Production is a convincing little human-interest tale entitled "Faith." The first of the series of Fischer Star Productions is a thrilling tale of the South Sea islands, and bears the title "The Pearl of Paradise."

"Faith."

"Faith" is the third of the Mary Miles Minter Features—the two previous ones being "Youth's Endearing Charm" and "Dulcie's Adventure." Miss Minter finds herself a servant in the house of John Thorpe, her grandfather, though both are ignorant of their relationship. Faith, the character impersonated by Miss Minter, becomes a friend and loyal comrade to Laura, her grandfather's daughter by a second wife, even going so far as to assume the guilt of a theft by the other girl. Eventually Faith's real position in the household is determined, and she finds happiness and a real mother's love. The production was made under the direction of James Kirkwood, Mary Pickford's former director, at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, Cal.

"The Pearl of Paradise."

Beautiful Margarita Fischer, star of many Mutual productions in the past, is once more back in the fold, and this week will be presented in one of the most lavish offerings ever released by the Mutual Film Corporation. The title of the first of the Fischer Mutual Star Productions is "The Pearl of Paradise." Its scenes are laid on a South Sea island, and Miss Fischer appears as Yulita, a true daughter of nature, who disports herself about the wild caves and along the silvery sands of the seacoast in nature's own garb. She is completely innocent, and has never beheld a man other than her father. Suddenly John Dellow, a wealthy young American, shipwrecked on the coast, comes into Yulita's life, and the remainder of the story is concerned with her struggles to win his love and make him content on the island. It was made at the studios of the Pollard Picture Play Company. Bookings on both these productions are now being taken at all 68 of the Mutual exchanges.

Facts and Comments

CONSIDERABLE dissatisfaction exists among exhibitors in The District of Columbia, Delaware and Virginia over the action of an exchange manager who wants to force the exhibitors of the states just mentioned to run the Maryland Board of Censorship trailer. His excuse is that if these censorship strips are removed and put back on their return to Maryland he is subject to a heavy fine. One of the indignant exhibitors writes to us: "In your opinion would it not be proper for him to have these strips removed in his own exchange by his own competent help and again put back on the return to Maryland?" Well, you can just bet that such IS our opinion. An exchangeman who cannot see further than this man is shortsighted indeed. Our correspondent expresses a fear that by reason of his refusal to acceed to the manager's request he will lose his service. We find it most difficult to believe that such a state of affairs exists anywhere in the United States when we are all agreed that the exhibitor is coming into his own and is learning to use his power. There seems to be an epidemic just now of shortsighted over-zealous branch managers who cannot get it through their brains that the decent treatment of the exhibitor is the one thing they are getting paid for. They neither understand nor serve their employer's interests if they work on any other theory.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is doing all it can to keep the screen free from bad pictures. We feel sure we have done more good along these lines than all the censors combined because we have carried conviction. To convince a man is so much better than calling him names or hounding or bulldozing him. We want to say at this time that we have no patience with people who are hypercritical and censorious. Recently we received complaints about pictures that may be inartistic but are certainly not immoral. There is a boundary between taste and ethics, but it is hard to define. Charity and tolerance of other people's tastes and opinions is most fitting in a democracy like ours. We have seen pictures that made us yawn and grieve while they made others hilariously happy. On the other hand we have admired pictures which our neighbors found tiresome and soporific. Let's not be too quick to "knock" and condemn.

OUT in Kansas where they have state censorship some one connected with the Screen Inquisition delivered a lecture "before hundreds of women in the first M. E. Church." The ladies wanted to know about the personal morals of some scintillating screen stars of their own sex. The inquisitor professed ignorance on the question, no doubt bitterly disappointing the assembled ladies. We know of some old gossips in the industry—some wearing skirts and others wearing pants—who might be induced to spin a little scandal out there if that is what the dear ladies want. The censorial activity always drifts back to the sewing circle whence it often originates. Censors just feed on scandal and gossip. The lecturer in the course of his remarks says that he has in the course of the past year "gone over about sixty issues of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, one of the leading magazines of its kind." We have much hope for the lecturer. If he keeps reading the MOVING PICTURE WORLD he is bound to be converted.

THE motion picture men of New York City and State will have an exceptional opportunity on the morning of Tuesday, October 31, to show by a large attendance at the Rialto theater meeting the solidarity of the trade on the censorship issue. It is an occasion out of the ordinary. Governor Charles H. Whitman and Congressman Calder will be introduced by President Ochs of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. The candidate for governor and the candidate for United States Senator will talk to the assembled film men about censorship. Governor Whitman is especially known to the trade throughout the country for his action in vetoing the Christman-Wheeler censorship bill at the last legislative session. This fact alone will lend exceptional interest to anything he may say on the topic that is among the first in any formal gathering of the film industry. The views of Congressman Calder, a possible representative of the Empire State in the United States Senate, likewise will be well worth learning. The expressions of opinion of these two men, uttered on the eve of a great election, will come at the psychological time. It is to be hoped that every exhibitor, every manufacturer, every exchange man within reaching distance of New York City will be in attendance at the Rialto theater at 10:30 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, October 31. It is an exceptional opportunity to show cohesion and strength.

Who Makes the Winner?

By Louis Reeves Harrison

ASHTON is a discriminating student of horses, especially of those possessing natal qualities to win in a race. He traces various strains and closely examines successful combinations until he reaches a final decision which he believes to be a forecast of success, though he is aware that failure is always staring him in the face. He breeds a colt that shows spirit and strength in every line, one that has the heart and soul of a winner, but it is quite another matter to prove this to others. He does not find an immediate opening for his colt Zampa.

Barclay has a stable full of running horses, good, bad and indifferent and he has won some mediocre races, losing quite as often. He has a large number of colts offered to him, but it is such a matter of chance from his viewpoint that he will not pay a high price for any of them. His expert trainer, Calhoun, approves of Zampa and negotiations are opened with Ashton. Barclay has fixed his price, and he is not handing out any gambling chances. Ashton reasons that he can breed another fine colt and finally parts with Zampa at Barclay's established price.

Calhoun not only knows his business, but he has a thoughtful man by the name of Darcey in the stable to give Zampa the exact nourishment required to establish a powerful background of vigor. With Darcey satisfying the moods of the spirited animal and Calhoun treating him with intelligent care, Zampa begins to show his quality before he is entered in any race. Barclay now decides to enter his new possession for the Grand Prize, worth twenty times the cost of the colt, and expends money with that combination of daring and prudence which has enabled him to keep a big stable as a source of yearly profit rather than of loss.

An effervescent jockey by the name of Epsom is engaged to ride the horse and made acquainted with his mount. Epsom has a way of getting there when others fail. He gets all there is out of an animal, making the most of his opportunities, and he is fairly boiling with enthusiasm over Zampa. The jockey is boyish in ordinary life, but he has a knack all his own of winning with poor material. He is a youth of peculiar wisdom—he knows all the little tricks of his own profession, but his personality is so intense at times that it is far from easy to give him instructions.

Calhoun now takes full supervision, and his troubles are many. He is often annoyed by the nervous anxiety of Barclay; he must carefully harmonize Darcey's background with the action of Zampa, Epsom has his own ideas of how the horse should be run, which have to be modified to suit the nature of the beast. He has never bred a successful colt himself, but he imagines that he could do so and cherishes secret plans to that end. He feels that he is making a mere breeder famous and a mere owner rich, but he does his duty, and Zampa is finely groomed for the great contest.

As was expected from the beginning by the man who took the initiative, whose very first steps were on the right lines and directed by intelligence, Zampa, all other conditions being favorable, could not do other than win the race. There are some fine competitors in the field, naturally superior, or trained to perfection, but they lack here or there in the absolute essentials and they are distanced. Zampa romps home. Ashton is encouraged to try again; Epsom wears a circlet of flowers around his neck and a wad besides; Darcey receives a salary advance; the wages of Calhoun are doubled, and the Grand Prize, twenty times the cost of the colt, is buttoned up safely in Barclay's coat pocket.

Success, resulting from a harmony of intelligent effort, has the effect of making each individual concerned dwell on his own particular importance. Each one fully appreciates the essential part he has played and is so blinded by the egotism it fosters that he fails to see how his distinctive contribution gained heavily in being combined with others of equal merit, each in its own way. Each may safely say that he was essential, but that fact is apt to be misleading. There is not the slightest doubt that intelligence is essential to success, but it is that of combination.

Barclay gets the big money and the big self-confidence that goes with it. There are other colts and other breeders of them in the world. If Ashton feels sore, let him market his creation somewhere else—it was a mere piece of luck anyway so far as he was concerned. "I paid the highest market price for that colt," says the owner, "I hired the best trainer I could find and I doubled his wages; I advanced the stable boy, and I gave the jockey a wad. I took all the risk, and I spent my own money to get a big slice back—what more do you want?"

The motion-picture producer is more or less in the same position. He not only provides the capital, but a lot of time and patience besides, together with whatever amount of business sagacity he may happen to possess. One of the varied elements of composite production himself he reasons along fairly safe lines that he has paid for services rendered to create a finished product and thus becomes the sole owner. One little item is overlooked. The first man was an owner. Between author and producer there are no owners, only valuable men whose services are paid for as they do their work. No one of them risks a dollar nor a moment of time. Only the first owner and the last do that.

Of all men between the first owner and the final one the most valuable has been the director of multifold duties. He has been called upon to do more than supervise production—he has been asked to give professional value to the work of amateurs, most of them mere tyros. It has also been expected of him to transform material for two or three reels into a five-reel story. He may do this once or twice, with the assistance of high-priced stars, and get away with it, but the sun is setting on that day. Even a star performer, with directorial assistance, may exhaust all his tricks in two or three releases, but trainers and jockeys can not keep this up—they must be given some blooded colts to run.

Here is where the hitch occurs. The creator of blooded colts realizes that their value can not be determined by an arbitrary price, especially when that arbitrary price involves allowing the purchaser to take his pick. The author does not always breed to his best form. He may work for months on a story which only goes to cold storage. The only way in which he can be compensated for time and energy expended in honest effort not paid for is to share in the success of what has been formulated in the womb of his mind, the child of his creative imagination.

The stage producer, like the publisher, recognizes the necessity of giving an author some incentive to release the best that is in him. "I will give you so much down to clinch the sale and a gambling chance on profits over and above certain returns." An author is only at his best when he feels that he is bound to succeed and share in the results of success. Without that stimulus to effort, with only a fixed compensation before him to compensate for exhaustive effort, would any sound business man start out to make winners?

A Chapter on the Foreign Film

By W. Stephen Bush

OUR admiration of Italy as the home of art and beauty is well known; to Italy we owe some of the greatest of film creations. Italy gave us "The Fall of Troy," "Quo Vadis" and "Cabiria," all of them important milestones on the road of kinematographic progress. Of late Italy has played a deplorably minor part in the higher realms of film art. Less than three years ago several great Italian firms had their permanent agencies here. Quite aside from the commercial aspect of the thing we felt that these houses helped to increase the reputation of the motion picture as an entertainment with high ambitions and noble achievements. Such pictures as "Grandmother's Lamp," "The Promised Bride" (a filmed version of Alessandro Manzone's immortal "Il Promessi Sposi"), "The Last Days of Pompeii" are still held in vivid and pleasant remembrance by the exhibitors and the public of America.

We have in the past hesitated to concur in the prevailing opinion that the foreign-made film of just ordinary quality has no more chance in the American market. Today we feel convinced that the prevailing opinion is right.

We believe that two simple causes have been operating to bring about this result. The first cause we think is the steady improvement of the American made film; the second is the deterioration of the European film.

We may be challenged as witnesses because of a supposed natural bias in favor of our own country. We might reply to this that we have in the past unsparingly and some times perhaps harshly denounced the poor pictures here and that we never paused for a moment in awarding ample praise to the foreign made film. We hope that the screen has internationalized our judgment and that we can see quality on either side of the water.

Happily we are now in a position to call a witness whose competency is thoroughly established and to whom no flight of the imagination is able to impute a pro-American bias. In La Vita Cinematografica, one of Italy's foremost motion picture journals, a distinguished film critic of many years' standing, who may fitly be described as an expert speaks in a most illuminating way of American and of Italian motion pictures. One of his friends had introduced the products of a famous American group into Italy and called upon Umberto Paradisi, the distinguished film critic for an opinion on these American films. Now before we go any further we wish to compliment our Italian contemporary and the writer of the article we are about to quote upon their splendid courage. Such independence, such devotion to the truth, such absolute frankness as we find in our Italian contemporary are rare and we congratulate the Italian film men on the possession of such a journal.

In judging of the merits of the American films the Italian film critic wonders at the strength and logic of the plots, at the fresh and happy originality which reminds him of a "fountain playing in the midst of a flowery garden." He pays a tribute to the detail work and to the perfection of the mechanical end. He comments upon the absence of artificiality and exaggeration of any kind. The study of psychology both clever and profound displayed in the American films appeals to him.

Mr. Paradisi does not hesitate to contrast the "most recent Italian productions" with the American pictures he has reviewed. He says that too often an Italian film is just composed of the name of a great artist, of a rapid display of pretty exteriors, of an enormous ball room, of a few "tableaux" and a long chain of explanatory titles. He speaks of the vast labor on the part of Italian producers in constructing bridges and airships and artificial lakes and similar contrivances, all of them built to be quickly destroyed for the benefit of the camera. There is a tone of gentle irony in his admonition not to waste time in educating acrobats to be screen artists and teaching screen tricks to dramatic monkeys and histrionic serpents. "Why," he asks, "do we in Italy put forth all this effort when the same effort might be devoted to attaining greater simplicity, to giving the spectator sane sensations in closer and truer touch with the human heart. Why not strive after originality which is not void of good sense and which comes nearer to our art."

The distinguished Italian critic is quite frank in his conclusions: "The Americans have beaten us." He does not by any means, however, despair of Italy regaining her place in the film world. While freely declaring that in many respects the Italian producer may learn from his American rival he holds—and we think most justly—that the present aberration of taste in Italian studios is a passing phenomenon. We most emphatically agree with him when he says that art in films as in other fields is Italy's patrimony by temperament and by tradition. Our able friend says: Let America be welcome in Italy, but let Italy try to find welcome in America." He says that the features he saw—not less than ten in number—might have been made in Italy when Italy was true to her best traditions and her best inheritance.

To be perfectly fair we must point out that the films he saw represent a rather high average of our domestic workmanship. There is no doubt much on our side of the water which is inferior, but very little if any of that inferior stuff is sent to Europe. We, too, have pictures that are open to the objections urged by our Italian contemporary, but they are on the decrease. No market in the world is today more critical than the American market; the American public will infallibly and invariably reject the cheap production.

We hope that nobody will infer from what our colleague or we ourselves have said that Italy at present does not produce many good films. In fact we know of a dozen which fully sustain the old Italian film prestige. What our colleague means and refers to is the recent average. We have every hope that Italy will in quick order regain the reputation it enjoyed in this country, but a very short while ago. Several Italian producers have lately visited this country in their desire to study and to cater to the American market. There has been much talk of making American stories in Italy with consulting American directors. While nothing practical and definite has resulted so far, we believe that Italy will not long endure a poor average whether for home consumption or for export. Not the least hope for a return to better things is the fearless criticism we have just mentioned.

No one appreciates and admires such courage more sincerely than we do ourselves. To stand up and to tell your own friends and countrymen where they are wrong and where they may learn from the foreigner shows two things: First—an independent journalism which rises to its highest functions and which has never been touched by the taint of "house-organism," and second—a class of directors and producers intelligent and liberal enough to recognize the need of fearless criticism.

We thank our Italian friends for their splendid words of welcome to the American films. We cannot think of a higher tribute than praise from such a source. Italy is justly jealous of her renown as the historic mother of arts; no country in the world's history with one great exception has shown such love for art and such aptitude and genius for works of art as Italy. Americans may well be proud and thankful for this recognition of their films; a recognition doubly valuable because of its spontaneous and unsolicited character.

We wish to assure our Italian friends that the American public has no prejudice against foreign films because they are foreign-made; they welcome quality from any quarter. We are glad to add that from no part of the globe have we had more quality than from Italy.

We are very much of the opinion of our able colleague who in the course of his article says: "Art is not bound by rules and regulations, wherever exists the spell of beauty there you will find an artist; from whatever quarter the beautiful may hail we are bound to revere it. What America has accomplished may be accomplished in Torino, in Rome, in Naples or in Milano."

British Censorship

Details of the New Harassing Official Proposals to Hamper the Picture Industry Which Have Engendered a Formidable Trade Opposition

(From Our Own Representative.)

London, Sept. 22.

THE censorship situation in Great Britain is now more than ever in the melting pot. Since my last letter outlining the Home Secretary's first announcement the trade has had opportunities of analysing his proposals and although usually, in such a divided industry as ours, a general opinion is impossible to gauge, not one faction of the trade endorses the proposals as they now stand. The common interpretation is a united indictment of their harsh futility; against the imposition of a more drastic code of censorship than even America has known, and that is certainty saying something. Mr. Samuels' scheme can best be comprehended in three sections—new licensing conditions for exhibitors, the censorship administrative, and the censorship legislative.

Licensing Conditions.

The first of these concerns the licensing of halls or theaters for the exhibition of films. What the Home Secretary proposes to do in this respect, via. the local licensing authorities in every district, I give in extenso:

(1) No film shall be shown which is likely to be injurious to morality or to encourage or incite to crime or to lead to disorder or to be in any way offensive in the circumstances to public feeling or which contain offensive representations of living persons. If the licensing authority serve a notice on the licensee (exhibitor) that they object to any film on any of the grounds aforesaid, that film shall not be shown.

(2) No film which has not been passed by the Official Board of Censors for exhibition shall be shown unless three clear days' notice stating the name and subject of the film, together with a copy of any synopsis or description used or issued in connection with the film, have been given to the licensing authority, and the licensee shall within that period, if the licensing authority so require, exhibit the film to such persons as they may direct.

(3) Films which have been passed by the Official Board of Film Censors and films which have been examined by persons on behalf of the licensing authority shall be exhibited exactly in the form in which they were passed for exhibition without any alteration or addition unless the consent of the licensing authority to such alteration or addition has previously been obtained.

(4) No poster, advertisement, sketch, synopsis, or program of a film shall be displayed, sold, or supplied inside or outside the premises which is likely to be injurious to morality or to encourage or incite crime, or to lead to disorder or be in any way offensive in the circumstances to public feeling or which contains any offensive representations of living persons.

(5) Every part of the premises to which the public are admitted shall be so lighted during the whole of the time they are open to the public as to make it possible to see clearly over the whole area.

Before proceeding further it must be stated that the above conditions are just about the reverse of those expected by the trade from the Home Secretary. The main argument in the industry, even by those not opposed to the basic principles of censorship, has been for the establishment of a central official censor only at the sacrifice of the local censors, which the foregoing scheme clearly does not. The first clause reserves the right of the local authorities to object to a film even when it has passed with the approval of the official censor while the second clause establishes the censoring as official but not compulsory and makes possible many grotesque anomalies. A film, for instance, could be sanctioned by the official censor and then vetoed by the parish censors. The same picture under another title might conceivably be banned by the official censor yet sanctioned by special application in the local area. So much for the licensing conditions.

The Official Censorship.

The official censorship proper, according to Mr. Samuels' proposal promises to be an administrative body only. Its constitution would be:

A Chief Censor.
An adequate number of assistant censors.
At least one woman assistant censor.

All of whom would be appointed by the Home Secretary, yet remunerated at the expense of the trade by the collection of a fee from the manufacturer of each film examined. What the fee will be is discreetly left unstated. None of censors would be connected with the trade.

The Advisory Committee.

The great bone of contention with the industry is, however, the legislative side of the official censorship—the Advisord Committee—which will establish standards to be observed by the censoring body. Its constitution would be:

Representatives of the Local Authorities.
Representatives of Educational Authorities.
Well known members of the General Public.
At least one female member.
Authors of standing .
One representative of Film Manufacturers.
One representative of Film Exhibitors.

With the exception of the two last named no member of the Advisory Committee would, in any way, be connected with the trade and the whole of the committee would be appointed by the Home Secretary. To comment upon the constitution of the proposed Advisory Committee would be entirely superfluous, but one can hardly pass unnoticed the grossly inadequate trade representation whose property, after all, is at stake, or such a ludicrity as "well known members of the general public." The latitude of this proviso is unparalleled. A well known member of the general public may mean a Luden or a Crippen!

Joint Trade Action.

The above scheme—which, by the way, is stated by the Home Office, to be set forth merely as a basis for negotiations—has been debated at length by the three factions of the industry, the Manufacturers' Association, the Renters' Society and the Exhibitors' Association, and as an outcome of these meetings a joint conference of the trade was held in London a few days ago. The Author's Society was also represented. A joint resolution condemning the Home Secretary's scheme was passed unanimously, with an additional clause indicating the opposition of the trade to any form of censorship that does not include finality. A deputation of two members of each association, Manufacturers, Authors, Renters, and Exhibitors, was formed to draft out a reply to the Home Secretary and to submit, if necessary, alternative proposals. The whole question now stands at the juncture and needless to add, the Home Secretary's reply to the report of the trade deputation is being awaited anxiously.

THOMAS MEIGHAN COMES EAST.

Mae Murray was the first Lasky star to be transferred across the continent as a result of the merger of Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and the Famous Players. She has since returned to the Hollywood studio and now Thomas Meighan is to be sent east at the completion of "The Silent Partner," in which he is appearing as leading man with Blanche Sweet under the direction of Marshall Neilan.

Mr. Meighan has won such great success in the Lasky productions that now he is to appear in support of Marguerite Clark and Pauline Frederick. The transfer of Meighan from the west coast to the east is another instance of the mobility of the combined resources of the Famous Players and Lasky companies, now to be extended to the operation of the Pallas and Morosco concerns, which permits of this interchanging of players in order to obtain just the required type for any given role of production.

"A Daughter of the Gods"

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush

A Marvelous Film Spectacle Which Exalts the Eternal Feminine Framed by the Glories of the Tropic Sea

THE great and growing gallery of American screen classics has been enriched by a new production, which ranks with the very best. Enthusiastic as this may sound, it is still far from anything like a full appreciation of "A Daughter of the Gods." The play with this singularly happy and strikingly appropriate title was presented to an invited audience at the Lyric Theater on the night of October 17.

Of all the great film spectacles now appealing to popular favor few will enjoy greater and, I think, longer popularity than "A Daughter of the Gods." To begin with, the subject is the most cheerful and the most charming of any of the big features. Every man, woman and child that goes to the theater wants to be delighted and entertained first of all. Now, here is a spectacle which fills us with genuine wonder. No nursery was ever hushed into more attentive silence than the audience which followed the marvelous succession of scenes of supreme beauty unfolding themselves on the screen. I would as soon think of testing Grimm's fairy tales for syllogisms or dramatic sequence as applying ordinary standards to this clever and most delightful flattery of the human eye. No need for the title-builder to urge a return to the days of our childhood. The spirit of this happiest time in our lives grips us before the film is fairly under way. We are beguiled, we are bewitched, we lose the perception of time and we get back to the naked realities of life like one who is waking from a lovely dream.

Beauty is the keynote of the film. Beauty and symmetry of the female form, grace, suppleness, strength, glowing health, modesty are but single items in this catalogue of human beauty. Added to this are natural beauties which overpower the most blasé of critics and knock his best epithets and adjectives into smithereens. Even the colorful word-painting of such a master as Lafcadio Hearn could not translate into language the ineffable majesty of this sea and must fail to portray its moods which are in turn calm and alluring, tempestuous and terrifying, now wooing with gentle waves the favor of the sweet and elusive mermaids, now tossing its angriest billows against "the daughter of the Gods." And the glowing beauties of the shore. The one scene where Miss Kellermann, in obedience to the Good Fairy's command, begins to arm her troops of gnomes and elves, is one of ravishing beauty. Not that this scene is in any way more glorious than any other; there are no blanks anywhere in this production as far as art and beauty go. The dive from the high tower, the race with the expert swimmers, the battle with the treacherous surf and the jagged rocks, the dance of the mermaids on the shore, the play of the mermaids, their sweet sleep in the water, the marvelous performance of Miss Kellermann in the rapids and in the falls of unexcelled beauty, the crystal clearness of the ocean, whose waters for a depth of many feet allow free access to the camera, the splendors of the Oriental City, the glories of the Sultan's palace, the great and agitated masses, the exquisite charm of the children, the ingenious uses of the animal creation, the miracles of sunrise and sunset on the waters on whose brow "time writes no wrinkles," the dashing movement of mounted troops in full gallop, the burning of a city, the tragedy of the slave market, the clash of arms, the hosts of gnomes and elves and their strange homes and habits—all these are but a few leaves from this animated album of beauty. In all my experience as a film critic I have never seen such a fascinating and gripping prologue. It must have taxed the patience and the ingenuity of the director to carry out his very subtle and very appealing conception. To make the illusion of these early scenes perfect and win the spectator's heart without a moment's delay he not only had to have a real "picture mind," but he must have given infinite pains to all the details. His success here was complete. The spell works from the very rising of the curtain and it is most cunningly sustained to the last. I, for one, kept no track of the reels, nor cared to keep track; all I know is that I was sorry when it was over.

A Fairy Tale—this much I have concluded—is the screen's own favorite expression; the master of the screen most revels in his task when he can tell all his story in pictures.

Miss Kellermann, aside from her daring feats, acted with great skill and gave a most creditable impersonation. Little fault can be found with the acting of the old Sultan (Hal de Forest). The rest of the cast was good enough with the exception of the Prince (William E. Shay), and Zarrah (Violet Horner). Outside of the principal these two were the only persons who had a chance to show histrionic talent, but neither succeeded in showing it. I cannot say that the title builder is entitled to congratulations. He had a puzzling task, for there is no sense or sequence to the story, no more than there is logic in Arabian Nights, but he might have smoothed the path by not obtruding himself and avoiding verbiage.

Much must be said in praise of the music, which fitted the picture and every part thereof like a glove. Here and there I recognized a Wagnerian motif handled with uncommon skill and well adapted to the tale on the screen.

Summing up I might say that there was a touch of Scene from "A Daughter of the Gods" (Fox).

"Cabiria," a touch of "The Last Days of Pompeii," a touch of "The Birth of a Nation," but that not one of these touches was at all plagiaristic. Then I will say that this magnificent production has one great merit of its own, not to be found in any part of our screen literature: the magic and dazzling spell of the Southern Sea and greater than even this—the irresistible "eternal feminine."

It is a feature which seems destined to add to the prestige of the screen by exciting new wonder and admiration for the art of the camera—it is a feature which will particularly delight the children.

Candidates to Address Film Men

Governor Whitman and Congressman Calder to Express Views on Censorship at Rialto Theater Meeting

A MEETING of vital importance to the film industry of New York State is scheduled for 10:30 in the morning of Tuesday, October 31, at the Rialto theater, New York City. Governor Charles H. Whitman, a candidate for re-election, and Congressman William M. Calder, Republican candidate for United States Senator from New York, will address the gathering. Governor Whitman in vetoing the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill at the last legislative session brought himself prominently before the motion picture men of the country. That he had positive views on one of the big questions before the industry was evidenced by his communication to the Legislature on that occasion. Congressman Calder, it is said, also has views on censorship, and it is confidently believed he will on this occasion give utterance to them.

The meeting at the Rialto is the direct result of a conversation between George Kleine, president of the General Film Company, and Congressman Calder. The two men are old friends. President Kleine, while he has refrained heretofore from actively participating in the controversies over the censorship question, nevertheless has strong views on the subject. Congressman Calder agreed to talk to the motion picture men if a meeting could be arranged. It was decided also to ask the Governor to attend. It was not until the evening of Sunday, October 21, that Mr. Kleine was able to secure Governor Whitman's assurance that he would be present.

In the meantime the president of the General Film had been in touch with Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and Samuel L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto, who readily agreed to give his theater for the gathering. Mr. Rothapfel also stated he would have musicians in attendance. As at present outlined Mr. Rothapfel will call the meeting to order and introduce as chairman Mr. Ochs, who will present the two distinguished speakers.

Mr. Kleine said at his office in the General Film headquarters this week that he had every reason to believe the meeting would be one that would be truly representative of all divisions of the industry. "I feel every exhibitor who can possibly attend should be present at this reception to Governor Whitman and to Mr. Calder," Mr. Kleine added "In his vetoing of the oppressive censorship bill that passed the Legislature last winter, the Governor did the industry a distinct service. The influence of that action was not confined to New York State, but was felt in every part of the country where censorship was actually in force or was being agitated. That bill would have imposed a tax of 10 per cent. on all first prints and 5 per cent. on every succeeding print put into use in the state. I am speaking, of course, of what is considered the standard price of film, average film, which sells to the exchange at approximately 10 cents a foot.

"I happen to know that Congressman Calder has decided opinions on censorship and that he will state them. We know what the Governor has done. I hope the gathering will be representative of the industry, that it will reflect the great importance to all of us of the issues involved in the general question of censorship. Primarily it is an exhibitors' meeting, because to the theater men the subject is of the most direct and vital importance."

Mr. Kleine said he intended to send out letters to as many of his friends in the trade as he could reach and was anxious that the word should be passed along to all in any way connected with the motion picture industry.

"While I have been careful in the past not to express publicly what I think of censorship I feel this is a good time for saying that I do object to the many manifestations of censorship that are prevalent. I am as firmly opposed as any other man to pictures that are, to say the least, unwholesome—or, calling them by their right name, bad pictures. But I haven't heard a single argument in favor of censorship which to me seems practical or fair. My chief objection is the enormous power that is given to persons of little intellect and less sense of responsibility. Many of those who are acting as censors are too limited in experience, in education, in knowledge of the world to be fit for their jobs.

"Above all, I feel it is far too much power to place in the hands of comparatively irresponsible people, whose decisions too often leave the manufacturer without further recourse. He must abide by them even if they be outrageous."

Plans of the N. A. of M. P. I.

It Is Proposed to Extend the Corporate Activities Through Formation of Advisory Committee.

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry announces its plan to campaign for constructive motion picture legislation and to combat oppressive legislation in every state of the Union. Mrs. Millie R. Trumbull, of Portland, secretary of the Oregon Child Labor Commission and member of the National Advisory Committee of the National Board of Review, has written a letter to the association expressing her admiration for the wonderful civic and educational possibilities of the motion picture.

The chairman of the Committee on Legislation is William M. Seabury. Lawyers who have consented to act in an advisory capacity are Gabriel Hess, Albert H. T. Banzhaf, Nathan Vidaver, Samuel Field, James Cowdin Meyer, Walter N. Seligsberg, Bainbridge Colby, J. Robert Rubin, Arthur S. Friend, Siegfried Hartman and Arthur Butler Graham. Mr. Seabury, speaking of the functions of the Legislative Committee, says that all questions of legislation will be approached not only from the standpoint of the industry itself, but from the standpoint of public welfare as well. Among the objects to be striven for are matters relating to municipal ordinances, fire regulations, building regulations and other matters of this kind.

Another plan of the National Association is the extension of its corporate activities through the establishment of separate advisory committees in the various states or centers of film activity. Plans to form such committees in California and Illinois are already under way. Judge A. P. Tugwell and Walter J. Reynolds, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers' Association of Los Angeles and San Francisco, will work for the formation of such a committee. In Illinois the presidency of the Advisory Committee has been offered to John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual. Mr. Freuler has not accepted, but may accept later. Other names mentioned in the association's literature for membership in the Illinois Advisory Committee are those of George K. Spoor, W. N. Selig, Frederick J. Ireland, Donald J. Bell and Alfred Hamburger. The Advisory Committees are to be representative of each of the five classes composing the directorate of the association. No specification of the number from each class was made and these matters are to be settled wholly by the locals. There are more than fifty membership classifications, even including railroad and insurance companies, and in fact every interest and individual doing business with the industry.

STRONG PART FOR CLAIRE McDOWELL.

Claire McDowell, Universal star, has the strongest part in several months in a forthcoming five-reel feature on which work has just been begun. Miss McDowell has "taken on" immensely at Universal since she went there from Biograph, and the part assigned to her is a measure of the high esteem in which she is held. The picture, which is to be directed by Charles Swickard, is to be called "Mixed Blood."

NEW MAN IN PARAMOUNT'S PITTSBURGH OFFICE.

J. W. Loranger was recently appointed special traveling representative for the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., of Pittsburgh, distributors of Paramount pictures in that territory. He is spreading the gospel of Paramount throughout Ohio, at the present time showing exhibitors the aids that are being put forth by this organization in their endeavor to present better pictures in better theaters for a better public.

LYONS, MORAN AND DEAN FEATURED IN "THE GREEN-EYED MONSTER."

The Universal Nestor Company, working under the direction of Louis Chaudet, is filming a one-reel comedy, "The Green-Eyed Monster," featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran with Priscilla Dean. The story was written by Bess Meredyth, of the Universal staff.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

STRONGER ORGANIZATION NEEDED.

Minnesota Exhibitors Have Many Battles to Fight and Reinforcements Are Necessary.

By John L. Johnston.

ALTHOUGH the membership of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest has increased rapidly within the last few months the need for a much stronger organization is apparent. The association has begun a big campaign to get new members but those behind the move find it very tedious work trying to convince the exhibitor that by joining the association they are doing the best possible thing—they are helping themselves. As slow as the exhibitors of the territory seem to be in realizing the great good that the association is doing for them the fact remains that if the membership is not increased more rapidly in the future than it has been in the past some of the small exhibitors will soon have to fight against some big obstacles individually with little or no chance to win out.

Minnesota exhibitors will undoubtedly have an uphill fight the coming year and unless their organization is much stronger than at the present time they may possibly find their "meal ticket" missing. According to President James G. Gilosky of the Northwest Association bills providing for a $500 license fee for theaters with seating capacities of 500 or under, $1,000 for theaters seating between 500 and 1,000 and $1,500 for theaters seating from 1,000 to 1,500, will be brought before the legislature at its next session as well as censorship, tax and other measures. These license measures, unless vigorously battled by an organized body, will be passed and as a result will bring about the closing of about 15 per cent. of Minnesota's show houses. The smaller exhibitors now find it difficult to pay city licenses and if these state measures should be put into effect the small theater owners will find themselves out in the cold.

The exhibitors' association headed by Mr. Gilosky is willing to battle unjust legislation to the last ditch, but the association must have more power than just a name. The dues of the association are ridiculously low, the rules of the association just and its purpose to help the small exhibitor as well as the big one.

The association holds weekly meetings at the Bijou-Jitney theater building, Minneapolis, every Monday when applications for membership, grievances and other matters of interest to exhibitors of the territory discussed. Secretary William Koenig has a reputation for being "on the job" early each morning and he welcomes inquiries and visitors to Minneapolis will find Mr. Koenig always ready to receive them with an outstretched palm and some good advice.

At the last meeting of the association Lowell V. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick theater, Minneapolis, was appointed to succeed W. A. Scott, Red Wing, on the executive board.

DR. HESPE DEFINES HIS ATTITUDE.

President of New Jersey Exhibitors Urges Firmness In Stand Against Exactions of Exchanges in Film Service.

THE Moving Picture World takes pleasure in giving space to the subjoined letter from Dr. H. Charles Hespe, a well-known exhibitor, who is specially prominent in organization work and who holds the office of president of the New Jersey State League and the Hudson County, N. J., organization. The text of Mr. Hespe's letter is as follows:

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir: An answer to a [illegible] question. It has not been the custom of the film companies to charge express on return of film, and according to our best information it is not generally done throughout the country. We have no quarrel with those film companies who in defending the new movement claim a return charge from the exhibitor when the charge is on one reel of pictures. That has been advanced as a fact of

The condition as the exhibitor sees it, doesn't involve the express charge incident as much as it does the resistance by the exhibitor of an organized effort to increase the exhibitor's burden by the concentrated purpose of the film agencies who [illegible] under form of a social club, secretly and against all the spirit of fair play expressed in the recent effort made by the various branches of the industry for a get-together policy. Deliberately attempting to disorganize and break up the Exhibitors Associations by the short-sighted policy of offering lower prices, stirring up distrust of one exhibitor by the other in the same organization, an open boasting that the exhibitor as an organized body did not amount to anything and would never stick together.

The interests behind the obstinate continuance of this rule have, to my mind, caused the situation that might arise between the customers and themselves, possibly more fully than I suspect, and therefore I openly question their honesty in their expressed opinions on their desire for organizations, especially exhibitors' organizations, to exist. It is apparent to anyone of moderate intelligence that a line has been defined. The separation of the interests of the film industry as between renter and exhibitor will widen or narrow to just that extent, that each interest by their fairness or their lack of consideration may determine. So this question, actually so trivial, is but a rock in the stream on which we are traveling, that may be the beginning or the end of a serious situation.

The Mutual Film Corporation, under the branch management of Mr. A. F. Beck, has been the openly-advertised leader of this movement. The unfortunate situation that has been developed by the wholesale cancellation of contracts by the exhibitor of the Mutual Film Company's service, is due largely because the action of Mr. Beck in his attitude to the exhibitor was offensively irritating. While holding no personal feeling against this particular concern, and believing that there is none in existence as far as the exhibitor is concerned, it is absolutely necessary as far as the exhibitors interests are affected, to stamp out forever this form of procedure, and to punish in some way any one man, agency or corporation, who by their method or methods create a situation similar to this.

If the exhibitors will realize that by their support of this movement will depend their own immunity from future annoyance, the evils that they now complain of, and which seem so distressingly unfair, can be remedied instantly and effectively by the united understanding that the firm or corporation that practices these methods will have such a volume of business withdrawn, that the disaster to them will be greater than their stockholders and money interests will stand.

I submit this expression of opinion to you, sincerely believing that we merit the support of all trade papers and all exhibitors' organizations. The public, I know, are with us. It is lamentable that there are some trade journals, subsidized of course, who will not present our side of this question fairly. They will come into their own reward. I earnestly desire and hope that the great intelligence in the minds of the men behind the film companies will enable them to quickly grasp the situation and by their co-operation assist in its settlement.

Very sincerely yours,

H. CHARLES HESPE, D.D.S.,

President New Jersey State Exhibitors' League, Hudson County Exhibitors' League.

SPLENDID WORK IN KANSAS.

President of the State Branch M. P. E. L. A. Writes Interestingly to the Moving Picture World.

THE exhibitors of the country with one egregious exception has always been opposed to censorship. Nowhere has this opposition among exhibitors been more unanimous or more vigorous and militant than in the censor-ridden state of Kansas. The president of the Kansas State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, C. E. Glamann, has written a letter to the Moving Picture World touching on this subject. We think the letter, both in its contents and its spirit, of far more than passing interest and are herewith printing it in full:

Gentlemen: I was very much interested in the debate which took place in New York in regard to censorship, which you covered in your last edition of the Motion Picture World. It seems very strange to us Kansas exhibitors that there are still manufacturers who seem to think that National censorship would be a step forward in helping us combat the present State censorship. We are at the present time doing all in our power in paving the way to eliminating this awful nightmare which the last Legislature was so kind to wish upon us.

Censorship in this state has proven a big joke, and if nothing unforseen happens I believe I am safe in saying that it will be repealed at the next meeting of the Legislature in January. The Motion Picture Exhibitors League, through its members, is doing personal work with the representatives and senators of this state, we are finding out how each stands in regard to censorship, and are making a list of those who are in favor of its repeal, and those who are against its repeal, in this way we will be in a position to know our friends, for to be our friends they must stand with us for the repeal of the censorship law, and we do not hesitate in telling them that this is what we expect from them.

Another way I am using to eliminate the wrong impressions which some people seem to have in regard to pictures is to work with the schools and put on an Educational program once every week. I am inclosing a clipping from our paper which will explain just what I am doing. On each Thursday immediately after my regular matinee I run an Educational program assisted by the teachers from the schools, the pictures we get from the Kansas University, and are furnished to us free. Last Thursday we showed to 1,000 school children, the teachers showed their appreciation by attending the show in a body the following night. It is my intention to educate the students of my city in educational [illegible] pictures, and to then set aside a certain day in each week when I will show nothing but educational pictures. It will give me a clientele which at the present time I do not get, and at the same time it will deal a death blow to censorship.

The clippings of which Mr. Glamann speaks in his letter prove the interest and support of the daily press of Wellington. The papers in Wellington devote no little space to the commendation and the advertising of Mr. Glamann's plan which has proven a great success. A prominent highschool teacher lectured in connection with the program, while the music was provided by the best orchestra in the city.

PATERSON EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

Local League of Picturemen Formed and Officers Elected at Meeting Held Tuesday, October 17.

AT a meeting of the exhibitors of Paterson and Passaic, N. J., on Tuesday evening, October 17, an organization was completed and officers were elected. State President Hespe was there and assisted in the details of organization. These exhibitors were present:

Max Gold, Lyric; William Anderson, Grand; Peter Adams, U. S. Playhouse; Henry Fleigh, Royal; David Marks, Garden; Peter Johnson, Washington, and M. Greenman, Colonial, Paterson. Alfred Murry, Montauk and Playhouse; Frank Zimmerman, Pleasant Hour; Heclet & Gold, City; Harry Hecht, Garden, Passaic.

The following officers were elected: President, T. L. Dooley; vice-president, Frank Zimmerman; secretary, David Marks; treasurer, Max Gold.

Membership committee, Fleigh, Johnson, Hecht and Murray. Committee on by-laws, Anderson, Zimmerman and Marks. Committee on campaign, Marks, Greenman and Anderson.

After the meeting a banquet was served at the United States Hotel, at which time Mr. Hespe explained the workings of the state league. All members present voted to join that body.

BOOSTING THE MARITIME LEAGUE.

In order to include as many as possible of the exhibitors in the Maritime Provinces in the new exhibitors' league that has recently been organized, President Walter H. Golding of the Imperial Theater, St. John, has had the minutes of the last meeting printed and put up in pamphlet form and sent to every moving picture theater in this section of Canada. With the minutes he is inclosing a copy of the new rules and by-laws. This will enable both members and non-members to become thoroughly familiar with the issue.

One of the leading law firms in this section has been engaged to represent the league, and any member of the Association may have his differences adjusted by the league's attorneys, without any extra cost over his initial fee and dues.

The shield of the Moving Picture League of America, has been adopted by the Eastern League with the substitution of the Maple Leaf for the American Eagle. In the center of the Maple Leaf is a roll of film.

DISTRIBUTING POLITICAL FILM.

Mortimer D. Metcalfe, in charge of the moving picture bureau connected with the Republican National Campaign Committee, expresses great satisfaction with the success which is being achieved in the distribution of "A Reunited Party," the two-reel picture which has been made for the purpose of helping to elect the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes the next President of the United States. Mr. Metcalfe has been handling the picture as a regular release, offering it to exhibitors throughout the country through the advertising columns of the various trade papers; each print shipped from the various subsidiary agencies of the bureau in New York is accompanied by special one and three-sheet posters.

"A Reunited Party" is a series of views of the big men of the Republican faith taken during the progress of the present campaign. Candidate Hughes is the central figure, but other notables, including Col. Theodore Roosevelt and the Hon. William Howard Taft, have prominent parts in the action. Introductory titles and a number of political cartoons have been added with good effect.

METRO-ROLFE STUDIO PROPERTY MEN TO HAVE BALL.

Property men of the Metro-Rolfe studio will have an old-fashioned minstrel show and ball at Palm Garden, 57th street and Lexington avenue, on Dec. 18. Technical Director Edward Shulter is president of their organization; Patrick Carey is vice-president; Ray Evans, treasurer; Charles Shaffer, sergeant-at-arms; William Bradley, assistant sergeant-at-arms, and Frank Namsey, secretary.

Daniel B. Hogan, once famous in the boxing world as "Kid" Hogan, will act as floor manager of the ball. Hogan is floor manager of the studio. He manages very well. No one ever talks back at him.

Screeners Settled in New House

Five-Floor Structure at 117 West Forty-fifth Street Is a Credit to Club and Industry.

THE five hundred members of the Screen Club are now comfortably settled in their new home, at 117 West Forty-fifth street. It is declared by some who think they are in a position to speak with authority that there is not in the city a finer clubhouse of its size. That is saying much, but there would seem to be justification for the statement. It is not so long ago a previous tenant expended $35,000 in the decoration of the building. These fittings are apparently in as perfect condition as the day on which the big job was finished. The result is that the Screeners have a sumptuous home—and that they are proud of it goes without saying.

The building is of five floors. Not only is this one floor more than was contained in the old house at 165 West Forty-seventh street, but the structure is seven feet wider and twenty feet deeper. The club has made extensive alterations to the ground floor, where a grill has been installed. The floor is of tile. The furnishings are in mission, with a high wainscoting. On this floor also is a cafe in a room by itself at the rear and also a kitchen, with a chef in regular attendance.

The second floor is divided into two rooms, furnished with easy chairs and comfortable lounges. The front room is in pale blue with satin wall decorations. The rear room has a high mahogany wainscoting and a decidedly novel ceiling decoration in the same wood. Here a piano, a large mahogany table and a giant grizzly bear skin add to the attractiveness. The third floor is the billiard room. Two tables already are in position and a third is coming. On this floor, too, is a buffet.

The fourth floor is devoted to the library and the writing room. The library, in front, is finished in mahogany and furnished with leather upholstered chairs and lounge. The rear room is fitted with double writing tables, vis-a-vis. The upper floor is divided into a half dozen rooms, devoted to official purposes—committee rooms, treasurer's office and board of governors' rooms.

The date for the housewarming has not yet been set. The house will be thrown open to the women friends of the members, however, on the day of the Screen Club ball, which will be held at the Hotel Astor on Saturday, November 18.

METRO'S "ROMEO" AT BROOKLYN CUMBERLAND.

The Metro Production of "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, will receive its initial Brooklyn presentation at the Cumberland theater, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, October 26, 27, and 28. An orchestra of sixteen soloists with the combined effects of the pipe organ will properly render the specially arranged musical score. Manager Francis A. Mangan has tastefully transformed the interior of the theater to harmonize with the period of the action.

EARLE FOX JOINS METRO FORCES.

Earle Fox, who has won fame in the "legitimate" as well as in motion pictures, has joined the Metro forces and is supporting Mme. Petrova in her new production at the Popular Plays and Players Studio. In the play now being produced Fox is seen as weakling who fails in everything he attempts because he is unable to control a craving for drugs.

JAY BELASCO IN "THE RIVALS."

Jay Belasco, whose work in "The Caravan," the highly successful short photoplay produced by the Universal recently, won him many compliments, is supporting Phillips Smalley in another two-reel picture—"The Rivals." Another picture soon to add to Jay's credit is a Bluebird recently produced by Director De Grasse in which Belasco had the juvenile lead. It is to be called "The Price of Silence."

SELIG'S BASEBALL SERIES POPULAR.

The Selig Company's special release, "The World's Baseball Series, 1916," in four reels, is proving very popular, according to reports from the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay branch exchanges. The pictures are strictly exclusive, the Selig Company being given exclusive rights to film the series at Brooklyn and Boston.

THE TREND OF THE POPULAR MIND.

As AN index to the trend of the popular mind in this country, perhaps the moving picture serves the purpose best, is the opinion of the "Oakland Enquirer"—Cal. Taking it for granted that the theater managers offer the mental aliment most desired by their patrons, it is significant that the trend of the times is away from fiction and frivolity, toward fact, scientific study and all educational subjects in general. The evidence of the moving pictures in this respect, coincides with that of publishers of books and magazines, both sustaining the conclusion that Americans are essentially a scientific people. Time was in the early days of the pictures when mere creations of the minds of film producers sufficed. The pictures often shown were somewhat buffoonery, coarse comics, and sob stuff of most ordinary mentality. At first the novelty of the moving picture sufficed to draw audiences, merely because the scenes were novel; as the pictures offered lightening like action, lurid pictures of wild life with excitement they were a tremendous success.

Now, however, all this is changed, in ten years the change has been marked, although the last year has seen the greatest and most rapid advances, pictures of ten years ago will not attract today, while the pictures of today would not have been acceptable ten years ago; such is the educational value of present day kinematography. Not only have the class of pictures changed but the audiences have also changed with them, the careless and uncultured have become critical and hard to please with anything short of that which can only be classed as good. The cultured classes also, which at the first despised the picture shows, often treating them with contempt, are now the largest supporters of the higher priced picture houses.

The Educated Trend.

There was a time when the supply and demand were in conflict, the standards of each being at variance, in those days these pages were constant in the call for those conditions which now prevail; today the supply and demand are in agreement. Pictures now must be good, entertaining, enlightening with interest, and withal educational. Pleased with the example set them by some of the leading theaters, audiences now expect a program made up of subjects of sterling value, the drama and the comedy fufill certain conditions which are known but unwritten, the addition of real life, the sciences and the arts must also be included, because it has been proved that these give character to the whole. Classifying these the Oakland Enquirer says: "We have now our 'daily' and 'weekly' news budgets, fresh with pictures of actual happenings. We see conventions in session, noted persons in real life, ships launched, canals operated, great fires, and various scenes from farms and factories. We are shown the marvelous struggle for existence in a drop of water, wherein the microscopic hydra assails with fang and claw his mortal enemy, that he may have life and food with freedom. Tragedies among the insects and flowers are brought home to us. The action of the heart with the rush of the crimson tide within our arteries and veins is pictured as plainly as marching armies. In the preparation of the pictures everything is sought and nothing is neglected, you may find anything from a railway smashup to a gnats hind foot in the course of a day's work, such are the pictures of today."

The Trend Toward the Future.

What will be the standing of the moving pictures twenty-five years hence, imagination fails to grasp? With the possibilities of "Intolerance" now, what great picture will be in the front then? With the educational actualities now, what the possibilities then? Schools and churches will rely upon them as a means of education and the spread of knowledge, the world's fifth industry will be the world's first educator and entertainer. Europe has taken the moving picture more seriously than America, the war has been a great present hindrance, but afterward its impetus may be considerably augmented, for the war itself will have furnished cause to use the pictures more largely, indeed, it may be that their very speed as a teacher will be required to recompense for the lost time, if so, they will prove equal to the task. There are times in the history of a great movement when it needs encouragement and support, later the time seems to come when it seems to grow and advance by its own inward power or outward momentum; so also with a popular movement, until it enters into the trend of the life of the people its progress is hard, but, once in that trend nothing can hinder its progress and advancement; this is the place of the moving picture today, it is in and with the very life of the people, bound up with them in their interests, together they are living, growing and developing in one common education and power, like the boat riding upon the ocean billows, so is that which rides upon the wave of public opinions and tastes becomes popular, and if it fills all expectations and demands it endures. Such is the relation which exists between the public and the moving picture, the trend of the one is the direction of the other, together they will develop and prosper; the pictures belong to the people who will keep and use them and benefit by them; the education resulting being mutual.

Recently the editor of the Pathe News received a request from a large wrecking firm for enlargements from the film showing the sinking of the U. S. collier Hector. They said that with these pictures they could estimate the raising of the ship without going to the spot. The photos were sent them, and by studying them, they were able to get all the information they required in a new and most economical manner; another tribute to the commercial value of the moving picture.

NEW PICTURES.

The leading New York theaters are just now running an unusual number of educational films, doubtless this means that the public is better pleased with a well assorted program and one that appeals to the intellect as the pleasures.

In the Rialto theater some very good Scandinavian pictures are seen which are particularly helpful to any program and give breadth thereto; they are also a valuable asset to distinctly educational work. "Bits of the Yosemite" are good travelogue pictures, the fact that many are of winter scenes lends additional value to those that already exist in their well known summer loveliness; in such a charming region winter has its own beauties often more entrancing than other seasons. In the Strand theater, "Behind the Scenes in Japan," as viewed by Dr. Dorsey, a new and closer view of Japanese life and refinement as found among the better classes is shown with much interest, the pictures being entertaining and interesting in an unusual degree. "The Living Book of Nature," also shown in this theater, is a splendid series of least known animal and nature pictures, with descriptive lecture by Mr. Raymond L. Ditmars, Curator of New York Zoological Park. This very fine, interesting and educational series is given in many parts and will evidently cover a period, the name of Mr. Ditmars is a sufficient guarantee of its value and, no doubt, when this series goes out it will readily and rapidly be seized by the educational authorities. The Topical Reviews are of ever increasing interest, the monotonous stage into which they had fallen a few weeks ago and of which we complained has passed away and the pictures have assumed more than their old interest; from all parts of the world notable events are chronicled, and an alive up-to-date service rewards those who see them, they should be shown everywhere.

PROF. LUCAS NO LONGER WITH M. P. WORLD.

The Moving Picture World wishes its readers to know that Professor Hardin Lucas is no longer connected with this paper, either as a contributor or in any other capacity.

Warde In "King Lear"

Pretentious Shakespearean Production Announced by Thanhouser for Release on Pathe Program.

EDWIN THANHOUSER announces that his mammoth production of Shakespeare's "King Lear," starring Frederick Warde, the eminent Shakespearian actor, will be released through the Pathe Exchanges on December 17. Mr. Warde has played "King Lear" and other Shakespearian productions throughout the United States and is noted as an authority upon the works of the immortal bard.

Scene from "King Lear" (Thanhouser).

The Thanhouser "King Lear" is Shakespeare in every detail, except that, of course, it is produced upon a vastly larger scale than ever was possible on the speaking stage. Mr. Thanhouser believes that Shakespeare knew how to write and made no attempt to improve upon the story. He did improve, however, upon the production itself and never before has "King Lear" had such a mounting as is given Mr. Warde's characterization.

Castles were built and thousands of persons were employed in the making of the play. "King Lear," with its pathetic story of the old father who banishes the daughter who loves him and gives his all to the daughters who despise him, lends itself readily to the screen. The battle between the forces led by Cordelia against the warriors headed by Goneril and Regan, the faithless sisters, is splendidly done with heart wrenching scenes as swords and spears bite into the bodies of the fighters.

Mr. Warde is majestic as the king and portrays with fine feeling his transformation, as his mind weakens, into a doddering, persecuted old man.

The cast supporting Mr. Warde is especially fine. Ernest Warde, son of Frederick Warde, directed the picture and plays the Fool, the same part he played on the speaking stage with his father. J. H. Gilmour, famous for his work with Edmund Booth, is the faithful Earl of Kent. Lorraine Huling is Cordelia and Ina Hammer and Edith Diestel are the faithless daughters. Wayne Arey, as the Duke of Albany, Boyd Marshall as the King of France, Hector Dion as Edmund and Edwin Stanley as Edgar are among the other prominent players in the cast.

Thanhouser Releases for November.

Valkyrien (Baroness Dewitz) in "Hidden Valley" and Jeanne Eagels in "The World and the Women," are the two five reel features that Thanhouser will release through the Pathe exchange in November. "Hidden Valley," a South African drama, was made by Ernest Warde from a story by Emmett Mix. Valkyrien appears as an explorer's daughter who is captured by savages and hailed as their white goddess. The tribe is on the point of sacrificing her to the god of water when a young divinity student, played by Boyd Marshall, appears and by adroit tactics rescues her. Ernest Warde, the director, himself plays the part of the villainous high priest of the African tribe. Arthur Bauer is the feather importer who sends the young man to Africa. "Hidden Valley" is to be released on November 5.

"The World and the Woman" was directed by Eugene Moore from a story by Philip Lonergan. Miss Eagels, famous for her work on the legitimate stage in "Outcast" and "The Great Pursuit," plays the part of a girl of the streets who, through the influence of a child, is spiritually regenerated and becomes a faith healer. It is to be released on November 19. Miss Eagels is supported by Boyd Marshall, Thomas A. Curran, Wayne Arey, Grace De Carlton, Carey Hastings and Ethelmary Oakland.

Bluebirds for November

Four Subjects Scheduled That Are Better Than Usually Offered.

FOUR subjects of unusual interest to Bluebird exhibitors and their patrons will be released in November productions of a widely varying nature and of unusual appeal to all classes of moving picture devotees. The announcement is made by Bluebird that there has not been in the eleven months the program will have been by that time in operation a similar period when four such evenly strong features have been released in the series.

The atraction for election week will be "Gloriana," a feature based upon the theory that charity should begin at home. In demonstrating the contention, little Zoe Rae will be the principal player with a strong supporting company of adults, and a numerous assemblage of children. This feature is presented as an unusually potent matinee attraction because of its especial appeal to women and children.

"A Stranger from Somewhere," to be released November 13, will have Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon as features of a company otherwise including Arthur Hoyt, Barney Furey, Helen Wright and Claire MacDowell. Franklyn Farnum plays a dual role. The plot starts off as a gripping drama, but when everything is set for business complications arise and a riotous comedy is the outcome with a "surprise finish" to cap the climax.

J. Warren Kerrigan and Louise Lovely, formerly lone stars in the Bluebird series, will make their second appearance as co-stars in "The Measure of a Man," on November 20. They lately appeared, jointly, as stars of "The Social Buccaneer," but in the November feature they have entirely different opportunities. "The Measure of a Man" is a rugged drama of Western caste, with scenes laid in the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

Bluebird expects that "The Bugler of Algiers," to be offered November 27, will create more comment than any picture they have released, regardless of the vogue of "Undine and Shoes." Of an entirely different nature than those widely discussed features, "The Bugler of Algiers," is a play based on patriotism and loyalty. It is a military drama unusual among its kind. The scenario was written by E. J. Clawson and based on "We Are French," a book by Robert H. Davis, editor of Munsey's Magazine, and Perley Poore Sheehan collaborated in writing. Ella Hall will, after three months, return to Bluebird as the star with Rupert Julian and Kingsley Benedict featured. Mr. Julian made the production.

GAUMONT PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF OCTOBER 29.

The week of October 29 sees three single-reels issued by the Gaumont Company through Mutual. The first one to reach the screen is "Reel Life" No. 26. On it are these magazine articles: "Operating a Submarine Mine-Layer," an animated exposition of the work aboard an undersea boat; "Training a Hunting Dog," "Developing Truant Boys" and "Making Potash from Seaweed." The last article was crowded out of "Reel Life" No. 25.

The second release of the week is "See America First," No. 60, released November 1. It gives beautiful views of the Battlefield of Gettysburg. On the same reel is an animated Gaumont Kartoon Komic by Harry Palmer.

The third single-reel is The Mutual Weekly. As this is made of the latest news to reach the screen, no program can be announced for it even two days in advance of issue.

Gaumont's newest single-reel, "Mutual Tours Around the World," is to be a weekly release also, but it will not have its first issue until November 7. Bookings are coming in very satisfactorily for it, and the Mutual is highly gratified with the manner in which the mere announcement of it has met with a response from exhibitors.

PICTURES INFLUENCE STYLES.

One of the leading trade journals in the field of women's wear contains a long article in its November issue on the influence of the motion pictures on styles. It points out that whereas a short time ago a new style of women's clothing in New York would only be the current "style" in cities and towns of 10,000 and less two years thereafter, today all this has been changed. The change it alleges is due entirely to motion pictures. Much of the article is based on George Kleine's motion picture novel Gloria's Romance which stars Billie Burke and which is running at theaters the country over in cities of large population and in towns scarcely large enough to support a single theater.

Greene Outlines Artcraft's Scope

President of New Distributing Organization Declares Company Is Prepared to Handle All Headliners.

WALTER L. GREENE, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, said this week there seemed to be a misunderstanding in some divisions of the trade as to the scope of his company's activities. He said the idea that Artcraft was formed solely for the exploitation of Pickford pictures was erroneous, that his company was prepared to distribute any of the larger subjects possessing unusual merit —"headliners" was the exact expression Mr. Greene used.

"Artcraft was formed with the idea of distributing the headliners of motion pictures, as I would describe them," said Mr. Greene, "pictures that have the right quality to go into big theaters for long runs. We claim, too, that the smaller exhibitor can use these subjects as a stimulus, as a tonic, as an extra attraction for his house. Very often a manufacturer will produce a picture that is too costly to go into a regular program—through ordinary channels he would be unable to get back the money he had invested in the subject. We believe there is an increasing number of theaters which will put on these larger productions for long runs. On the Pacific coast and in the Middle West the movement is in full swing. We believe that for these big pictures there is sooner or later going to be a steady demand, and we are preparing to meet it."

Mr. Greene called attention to the fact that at present there are practically only a half dozen cities where pictures can run for a full week. He cited offhand New York, St. Louis, Detroit, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Boston.

"As an indication of how this movement actually is extending I may call your attention to the fact that we have booked Miss Pickford's 'Less Than the Dust' for a full week's run in no fewer than eighty theaters," went on the president of Artcraft. "In eleven of these houses the runs will be for two weeks and in two of them for three weeks. This shows what we have acomplished for a beginning. At the present time we are negotiating with several manufacturers for extra large productions. We now have fifteen exchanges in the United States for handling this business and one in Canada. We will have three more across the line, too. We intend eventually to furnish at least the larger theaters with all their requirements in the way of big attractions.

"Some exhibitors feel we are trying to get too much money for our pictures. Actually we want from the exhibitor only what the star and the production is worth, based upon the conditions surrounding his house—such as, for instance, seating capacity, population of the city or town and the general exhibiting conditions of the community.

"Artcraft, then, is prepared to give this producer his real incentive, obtain adequate presentation for his work and pay him sufficiently for it. At the same time the motion picture theater is protected. The new big feature houses are able to obtain the kind of pictures that their policy requires and the smaller theater may share in the profits by engagements of big productions that have been successful in the long run houses. Together we can keep our masterpieces out of the opera houses and combination theaters. This is the opportunity Artcraft gives to the exhibitor: To have and to hold the best in motion pictures."

MUTUAL SETTLES WITH BARRY.

The case of Richard Barry against the Mutual Film Corporation has been settled out of court and the suit for damages brought by Mr. Barry has been discontinued by stipulation. The action was brought on account of the production of the serial, "The Secret of the Submarine," which was made by the American Film Manufacturing Company. Mr. Barry claimed authorship and protection of the copyright. The Mutual claimed to have bought the rights to the book from Russell Smith, but Smith afterward admitted that he did not own such rights. When the case came to trial in the New York Supreme Court the defendants offered to settle and an agreement was reached whereby a very considerable sum was paid Mr. Barry, together with an agreement to give him proper credit on the screen and in the advertising as author of the story from which the picture was taken.

BEAUDINE DIRECTING "THE TRAMP CHEF."

Director W. W. Beaudine, of Universal City, is filming a one-reel comedy, "The Tramp Chef," written by himself and C. J. Wilson, Jr. Gale Henry and William Franey take the featured leads with Lillian Peacock, Milburn Moranti and C. Conklin in their support.

Seeing San Francisco's Chinatown

Captain Lewis Holds Forth at Daly's Theater with a Pictured Trip to Famous Golden Gate Resorts.

CAPTAIN H. J. LEWIS, pioneer guide of San Francisco's Chinatown and Barbary Coast, has filmed these famous districts in five reels, and is at present showing the production at Daly's Theater, Broadway near Thirtieth street. As the reels are run Captain Lewis delivers an entertaining and instructive lecture, interjecting many anecdotes of his experiences during the many years that he was official guide of Chinatown and the Barbary Coast.

The production is really a personally conducted tour of San Francisco's Chinatown. The pictures show everything of interest in the Chinatown of today. Captain Lewis has endeavored to film the district so that the spectator of his picture sees just about what he would see if brought through the Oriental quarter of the coast city.

Many of the scenes are instructive as well as interesting. The guide has screened several places of interest in Chinatown that he claims have never before been filmed. These include the interior of the famous Chinese Six Companies building and the Chinese court of arbitration. Capt. Lewis has also secured scenes showing an aged Chinaman smoking opium—showing just how the drug is prepared for smoking, etc. There is nothing sensational or offensive in the film. The production makes an entertaining and instructive travelogue, whose interest is greatly added to by the captain's talk

William Welsh

NEARLY six years with one motion picture company is an unusual record for a player. William Welsh, who has figured in the casts of the three greatest Universal subjects, has just signed a contract with Herbert Brenon to work for him in the making of the pretentious photoplays to be released on the Selznick program. Mr. Welsh was one of the old-time members of the Imp stock company. It was while at the Eleventh avenue studio he portrayed Father Neptune in "Neptune's Daughter," under the direction of Mr. Brenon. It was there, too, under George L. Tucker he played one of the prominent parts in "Traffic in Souls," one of the screen's strongest melodramas. Mr. Welsh also participated in the making of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," the marine spectacle now "cleaning up" in Chicago.

William Welsh

Mr. Welsh was born in Philadelphia. Possessing a fine baritone voice, in his youth he did much singing in churches. This led to his engagement by H. W. Savage to sing at the Grand Opera House. He remained with the Castle Square company for several years, acquiring a repertoire of fifty-two operas. His first venture in New York was with the original "Way Down East" company. Later he played in Augustin Daly's "The Runaway Girl," "Geisha" and other productions. With Blanche Bates he was a member of Belasco's "Under Two Flags" company; he toured the country in "Quo Vadis," and for two years was with the American Theater stock company in New York. He managed on tour Joseph Santley in "From Rags to Riches" and also managed Laurette Taylor, Richard Byhler and others. He also managed the Manhattan and Circle theaters in their pioneer picture days.

Six years ago Mr. Welsh joined Mr. Laemmle's Imp company. During this connection the player established himself as one of the best character players on the screen. Besides the subjects already mentioned some of his more notable appearances were in "Conscience," "Court-martialed," "His Hour of Triumph," "Peg of the Wilds," "Robespierre" and "Price of Sacrilege."

Scenics by New Process

Pathe Acquires Rights to Series of Subjects by the Combitone Pictures Corporation.

PATHE has acquired the exclusive rights to a series of pictures treated by a new process of combination toning, invented by F. W. Hochstetter and known as the Hochstetter process of combination toning, which, it is confidently expected, will revolutionize present methods.

The pictures to be made under this process will consist of a carefully thought out exposition of the most beautiful scenery in the United States, and will probably be released under the title of "Know America, the Land We Love." Every place of national interest in the country will be visited and photographed. Two touring cars with a crew of six persons under the direction of A. L. Westgard, president of the National Highways Association, has already started from Trinidad, Colorado. The first place visited will be "The Garden of the Gods." The Grand Canyon and other scenic wonders of the Southwest will then be filmed and the winter will be spent in visiting the most scenically beautiful sections of the south. Beginning with the spring the various national parks will be included in the itinerary, as will also be the most interesting sections of every state.

The pictures will be made under the auspices of the National Highway Association with the co-operation of Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Westgard, who will supervise the taking of all of the pictures will be remembered as the Director of Transcontinental Highways. In connection with those duties he accumulated much map data and an experience which will be of great value to him in this new work. L. E. Taylor is the head cameraman. The National Highways Association, of which Charles H. Davis is the president, and T. Coleman Dupont the chairman of the Board of Governors, is taking great interest in the expedition. C. H. Claudy, publicity director of the association, is now in New York perfecting plans whereby his organization can obtain the benefits of the great amount of publicity which will naturally result from the expedition.

The name of the company making these pictures will be the Combitone Picture Corporation. F. W. Hochstetter and A. L. Westgard are the moving spirits of this organization which has a paid in capital of $200,000.

The new process of toning achieves really marvelous results. An ordinary black and white negative is so treated that from five to ten different tones are given to each inch of film, and yet only one toning bath is necessary. This bath causes the various tones to automatically register in proportion to the varying density of the film. While not color photography the results approximate it and pictures treated by the process show wonderful color effects. It may be described as a "super color process" and permits of all gradations of tone in browns, greens, blues and reds. The finished pictures have wonderful depth, so much that the effect is almost stereoscopic.

Pathe is paying more for these pictures than has ever been paid for pictures of the class. But no one who has seen the results of the new process will deny that the pictures are worth the greater price.

Indian Notes

J. F. MADAN is opening a Bioscope theater at Delhi, under the name of "The Empire Picture Palace," very shortly. A short time ago, a picture theater there was closed, as it did not pay. Mr. Madan now owns three Bioscope theaters in Calcutta, one at Madras, one at Rangoon, one at Darjeeling, and one at Mussaorie. Mr. Madan knows his business from A to Z, and, therefore, his Delhi venture will, I make no doubt, prove a success.

* * *

"The exploits of Elaine," has completed its run in the Elphinstone. We shall shortly see "At Bay," and "Neal of the Navy," and also "Who Pays?" Mr. Madan has the advantage of the choice of Pathe's best productions. It may therefore, be taken for granted that these two films will be seen by thousands.

* * *

At the Cornwallis theater (Calcutta), Mr. Madan is now showing "Bootle's Baby," and "In the Jaws of Death," which are drawing big audiences. At the Ripon, we have seen "The Wages of Crime"—a really sensational drama, which holds the spectators' attention from first to last. As for the comics, one misses Wiffles and Max Linder. We get a Charlie Chaplin or a Keystone comic frequently, but many long for their old favorites.

Mr. Ducasse continues to maintain his own in spite of hard competition. He has lately shown "Goodness Gracious," "The Romany Rye," and "The Girl From His Town." "The Earl of Pawtucket" was screened some days ago, and was seen by hundreds. The comics were uniformly good, and were highly appreciated.

The Imperial Cinema of Bombay was the first theater to screen "Neal of the Navy." It is now being shown at Shmedabad. The Imperial has just screened Pathe's "Love's Frailty," in which Mme. Robinne of the Comedie Francaise, plays the leading role.

* * *

The Royal Opera House of Bombay has just screened the first Anglo-Indian drama ever produced, called "The Faith of a Child." It is a splendid thing and I hope it will be shown in Calcutta. I may state, in passing, that the Royal Opera House authorities have given a part of the proceeds to the Lord Roberts Indian Soldiers' Fund.

* * *

Another Bombay theater, which never lacks patronage, is the New Alexandria Cinema. It has shown "Somewhere in France," "The Queen of Diamonds," "Modern Mephisto," and "The Last Ghost Dance"—all very powerful plays.

* * *

Mention should also be made of the Excelsior where we will see very shortly two big Pathe Productions:—"New York," and "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." I have hopes that the Calcuttaites will have an opportunity of seeing these two films at an early date. Messrs. Pathe Freres are very energetic in India. Sometimes they offer us pictures before they are seen in England. They advertised "The Exploits of Elaine" on a huge scale and helped to make it one of the greatest successes of the season. "Something New," iis their motto, and they do not belie it. Whoever thought Kipling could be filmed? But Messrs. Pathe have filmed his "Light That Failed" with the greatest success. I trust they will arrange for its exhibition in Calcutta.

* * *

Detective stories attract very large audiences. Why do not some of our film producing companies arrange to treat their Indian patrons to a series of Indian detective stories? Messrs. Gay and Hancock of Henrietta street, London, have published a remarkable volume entitled "Indian Detective Stories." Some of the stories in this series may be filmed with advantage. Here is a tip worth considering perhaps.

* * *

I note from a home paper that, at many places, people have begun to grumble at films of an objectionable character. I was witness to a remarkable scene in Calcutta recently. An exhibition was being held in a well-known club, which is frequented by students mostly. As soon as any objectionable film was being screened, the authorities of the club were taking immediate steps for its removal. The show was not successful, but, for once, the public exercised their right to object—and successfully too. I for one hope that the moral of the action taken in the case referred to above will not be lost on Bioscope proprietors, who, I trust, will exercise greater vigliance in the selection of films, whether for exhibition in their own theaters, or for renting or selling them.

KATZENJAMMER KIDS KOMING.

Among the comic screen novelties for November will be "The Katzies," founded on Rudolph Dirks' drawings of the original "Katzenjammer Kids." The announcement by K-Film Corporation promises a big popular series, to be seen in an unusually wide distribution throughout the United States and Canada. G. Gregory La Cava and other animators of the first rank are putting their best work into this new feature.

"KATE O' THE KITCHEN" SOON TO COMMENCE.

As soon as "Her New York" is finished, Gladys Hulette, the Thanhouser star, will begin work on "Kate o' the Kitchen," by Agnes C. Johnston, who also wrote for Miss Hulette "Her New York," "Prudence, the Pirate," and "The Shine Girl." Miss Hulette will be supported by a notable cast, including Doris Grey, Wayne Arey, George Marlo and Arthur Bauer.

JUANITA HANSEN JOINS TRIANGLE.

Juanita Hansen, who was starred in "The Secret of the Submarine," has joined Triangle. She is to head a Mack Sennett Keystone company directed by Harry Williams.

DIVIDING THE PROFITS.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer Share Stock With Employes in New Venture—Recognition of Faithful Service.

THE firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, well known Chicago exhibitors, at present operating several downtown playhouses, has divided a large part of the capital stock in the new Rialto Theater project with its employes. A certain amount of shares were given gratis to each employe with the understanding that like amounts would be bought from the company by each individual. As this stock is not on the market, and the venture promises to outdo all previous successes of the firm, it will be readily seen that this is simply an act of sincere generosity.

Speaking in behalf of his firm, Aaron J. Jones said: "I am only repaying, in part, the faithful continued services of my staff, for I consider each and every department head is eager to see the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer succeed to its highest ambitions, and I feel that in making them my partners, I have created a spirit of comradeship and trust among our executives."

The new shareholders are Samuel J. Levin, Ralph T. Kettering, John G. Burch, Louis J. Jones, Norman E. Field, Emil Mayer, George H. Moore and Harry E. Earl, all well known in moving picture circles.

The Rialto Theater, which is at present in process of construction, is situated on State street near Van Buren, a few feet away from one of Chicago's busiest corners. The structure is being built along the most modern lines, and when completed will represent an expenditure of about $600,000. It will open with vaudeville about November 1.

Amalgamated Theaters Corporation Buys Cook County Rights to Ince's "Civilization."

The Cook County rights to Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" were purchased last week by the Amalgamated Theaters Corporation for a reported consideration of $25,000. The deal was closed on Thursday, October 19, Mr. Ince being represented by James Grainer.

It will be recalled that this spectacular production had a lengthy run at Cohan's Grand Opera House last summer at $1.00 prices, and the buyers are greatly elated over the possibilities of the picture this coming winter.

The Amalgamated Theaters Corporation operates a string of twenty-four theaters in the outlying districts of Chicago, among them being the Gold, Shakespeare, Circle, Germania, Crown and California, all with seating capacities of about 1000.

The booking policy for "Civilization" will be announced by the owners shortly.

Chicago Film Brevities.

James S. McQuade, our own colleague, good friend and boss of this column, is at present away on his vacation. He left this city on October 14 to be gone about three weeks.

Exhibitors are warned to beware of a fellow representing himself as Zack Miller, of the 101 Ranch, Bliss, Okla. He may want to "borrow" your theater for a while, or request a loan of five or ten dollars. He has been operating recently in the vicinity of Galveston, Tex., where it is reported he has swindled several exhibitors out of amounts ranging from $5 to $50. Representing himself as one of the Miller Brothers, owners of the 101 Ranch moving pictures, it appears that he is always just waiting for a check from home. His dimensions are: Six feet one inch tall; weight, 170 to 180 pounds; dark complexion; about 35 years old.

Since the opening presentation, on October 9, of the Universal production, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," the Studebaker Theater has been packed nightly. This remarkable under-sea photodrama has been cordially received by the Chicago public, and present indications point to a long and successful run. Eight hundred school children attended a special showing of the picture on Saturday morning, October 14. The interest and enthusiasm expressed by the children has prompted the management to announce that the special Saturday morning exhibitions will continue throughout the engagement.

Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, left this city for a trip to the Pacific Coast, on Sunday, October 15. He will visit most of the principal cities, attending to matters concerning "The Yellow Menace" serial, and will return to Chicago on or about October 28. It was announced this week that Mr. Cobe and Frank Zambrino, one of the directors of the Eagle Film Company, this city, have formed a new company to be known as the Unity Photoplay Exchange, occupying offices at 207 South Wabash avenue. The Tweedledum comedies made by the Eagle Company will be released weekly through the Unity Exchange. "The Unlucky Tramp," the latest of the Tweedledum comedies, is now being shown at the Ziegfeld Theater.

A private showing of "The Garden of Allah," the latest of the Selig super films, was held in the projection rooms of the Selig Polyscope Company's offices last week. Although the production has not yet been completely trimmed and assembled, it is said that there are a number of fine scenic effects, and the pictured story follows very closely to the famous novel by Robert Hichens. A court gown worn by Miss Eugenie Besserer, in the character of Lady Rens, in the production, is an heirloom that has been handed down through Miss Besserer's family for more than a hundred years, and is one of her most valued possessions. Over a thousand people have parts in "The Garden of Allah," the leads being taken by Helen Ware and Thomas Santschi. The date of release has not yet been decided on, but plans are being formulated and will be made public in due time.

Director Al Green, of the Selig Company, assistant to Colin Campbell, arrived in Chicago from Los Angeles to discuss with Mr. Selig the making of some of the forthcoming Selig releases. Mr. Green is one of the youngest directors in the profession, and it is stated that he will begin work soon on a new Selig Red Seal play, a part of which will be filmed in the Chicago studio of the company.

W. A. Baier, of the Jacobs Film Booking Offices, of Milwaukee, was a Chicago visitor last week. Mr. Baier is negotiating for the purchase of several large features for the state of Wisconsin. In talking to a representative of the World, he stated that business conditions in Milwaukee are exceptionally good just now.

The Burton Holmes travelogue course, which recently succeeded the regular weekly moving picture programs at Orchestra Hall, is showing to good houses this season. The program consists of five travelogues in colored slides and moving pictures. One travelogue will be presented each week until the close of the engagement November 11. The moving pictures used in the course were produced under the supervision of Oscar B. Depue, director of the Paramount-Burton Holmes laboratory, this city.

The eighth episode of "The Yellow Menace" serial, which is now running in nearly 200 theaters in and around Chicago, will be released on Monday, October 30. Manager Simeon Greiver, of the General Feature Film Company, which controls this production in the states of Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin, reports that keener interest is being shown in this subject with the release of every episode. The General Feature Film Company also controls the bookings of all Ivan film productions and juvenile comedies in the aforementioned territory. The initial release of the juvenile "Katzenjammer Kids" series will be made next week, and will continue one a week thereafter.

The latest acquisitions to the Alfred Hamburger circuit of theaters is the Gayety, located at Ninety-second street and Commercial avenue, South Chicago. The Gayety was purchased by Mr. Hamburger from the Allardt Circuit. It is a 1,200-seat house, and has always been devoted to vaudeville and the spoken drama. Under the present management the house will be given over to moving pictures exclusively, with a daily change of program. After being thoroughly renovated and overhauled, the Gayety had its formal opening under the new management on October 21.

In the future all Greater Vitagraph features will be shown in the Hamburger Circuit of theaters first, two weeks prior to their general release in this territory. Mr. Hamburger has also aranged for the revival of several old Mary Pickford subjects produced by the Famous Players Company, to be booked over his entire circuit. The Clune production, "Ramona," has also been booked over this circuit.

D. Leo Dennison, formerly manager of the Chicago office of Paramount, and who now holds the position of personal representative for James Steele, general manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., recently left New York for a tour of the Paramount offices under his jurisdiction. After visiting Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit, he arrived in Chicago on Tuesday, October 17. Mr. Dennison is very enthusiastic over the prospects this winter for Paramount, and advises us that a new Paramount office has just been opened in the Sinecure Building, Cleveland, O.

The following exhibitors were callers at Paramount's Chicago office last week: H. J. Clauer, manager Dreamland Theater, Galena, Ill.; Mr. Wilson, Kai Gee Theater, Rochester, Ind.; C. E. Irvin, manager Irvin Theater, Bloomington, Ill.; J. A. Terman, manager Ideal Theater, Sheridan, Ind., and E. J. Brewer, manager Brewer Opera House, Shabbona, Ill., all of whom are doing good business with the Paramount service. Manager H. J. Clauer, Galena, Ill., was the first exhibitor to book Paramount service out of the Chicago office. He began with the first release, over two years ago, and has been running the service continually ever since. Previous to using the Paramount program he booked nearly all of the old Famous Player subjects.

Earl J. Ferney, city salesman for the Enterprise Optical Company, reports exceptionally good business for his company within the last month. Some of his most recent sales and installations of Motiograph machines have been two each in the Hub, Ideal, Morris, Vilas, Esthena and Melrose, and one each in the Hermosa, Warsaw and Grand Theaters. The Strand Theater, of Maywood, Ill., has also recently purchased two machines. Mr. Ferney has been given the use of an automobile by his company to help facilitate his transportation in and around Chicago and he is highly enthusiastic over future prospects for the Motiograph.

Nell Shipman Returns East

NELL SHIPMAN has returned to New York after two years of activities upon the Pacific Coast. She will be here to see the first metropolitan presentation of "The Black Wolf," the Lasky photoplay starring Lou-Tellegen, in which she played the leading feminine role. This production will be released shortly on the Paramount Program. Miss Shipman's connection with the Lasky Company was the crowning success in a series of important engagements among the western studios, she having reached this eminence after playing opposite William Farnum and being featured in the Vitagraph releases, "God's Country and the Woman," and "Through the Wall."

Nell Shipman.

Miss Shipman, although a star in her own right, accepted the assignment of the Lasky Co. in support of Lou-Tellegen because she realized, she said, the artistic promotion that a connection with the Lasky Company contained. Prominent connections mean more to Nell Shipman than the size of the weekly check, as her income from photoplays, books, etc., annually, is a considerable one. On two different occasions, she had an opportunity to star at the head of her own company. The first was to be featured as "The Mermaid," in the photoplay of the same name by Captain Peacock, author of "Neptune's Daughter," but she declined on account of the fact that "The Daughter of the Gods" was under way, and the market was then being surfeited with other water pictures. Later, she obtained a release from the Palo Alto Co., which had given her a contract to star in plays from her own pen, in order to play "the woman" in "God's County and the Woman."

FRED J. BALSHOFER FILMING "PIDGIN ISLAND."

Picturesque and Elaborate Photoplay Is Now Being Produced at Yorke Studios.

PRODUCTION has been started this week at the Yorke Metro studios of a five-reel photo drama, "Pidgin Island," an elaborate motion picture play from Harold MacGrath's novel. General Manager Fred J. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer colaborated in preparing the scenario. The popular Metro stars, Harold Lockwood and May Allison are playing the leading parts supported by a carefully selected cast. Part of the action is laid in San Francisco's

Chinatown and in order to secure a real Oriental atmosphere, Mr. Balshofer and his stars will journey this week to San Francisco to film some of the scenes with this picturesque background. In the meantime a complete street set and exact replica of the San Francisco Chinatown is being reproduced at the Metro studios by technical director Irving Martin. Phillip Gastrock, who created the part of Tomasso Benda, the heroic Italian in Thomas Dixon's "Fall of a Nation," and who was a prominent member of David Wark Griffith's forces and is well remembered in "The Birth of a Nation" has been engaged by producer Fred J. Balshofer to play an important part with Harold Lockwood and May Allison. In "Pidgin Island," Gastrock figures in the underworld scenes and plays a slum type. Lester Cuneo and Lillian Hayward are also included in the cast, and so is Elisa Zerr, who played with Ida Schnarr in the Universal production, "Undine."

The last scenes of "Big Tremaine," were filmed last week and Director Henry Otto is now busily engaged in the process of assembling and titling the production. "Big Tremaine," is booked for early release on the Metro programme. It follows Harold Lockwood's and May Allison's recent Yorke production "Mister 44."

KEYSTONE ACTIVITIES.

Mack Sennett is Back on the Job and Proceeds to Make Things Hum.

Mack Sennett's arrival to Los Angeles during the past week and the renewal of his personal supervision of productions was a cue for the return of the usual dynamic activities at the Keystone studios.

Since his return, Mr. Sennett has been in constant consultation with his assistant directors.

Director William Campbell and Harry Williams have completed the final scenes and a few "retakes," on Chester Conlin's farce, "A Tugboat Romeo." This was the first production to occupy Mr. Sennett's attention. He spent several hours in the cutting room with the directors putting the finishing touches upon this new picture.

Considerable attention is being given by the Keystone chief to a new Mace comedy now being filmed. The picture is entitled, "His Last Scent," and contains no end of funny situations for Fred Mace.

Roscoe Arbuckle has not yet "found himself," since his return to the Keystone "lot," from Fort Lee, New Jersey. Though he is not actively engaged in manufacturing laughs he is at the Keystone mirth center each day in consultation with the scenario department. It is expected that Sennett's scribes will have a new comedy ready for "Fatty" some time during the forthcoming week.

Frank Griffith, has commenced work on a new production featuring Charley Murray and Louise Fazenda. The title will be announced later. Supporting Murray and Miss Fazenda are Wayland Trask, Harry Booker, Ed Kennedy, Mary Thurman and others.

The star cast selected by Mr. Sennett for "The Police Chief," now being directed by Victor Heerman, justifies the prediction that this new picture will prove one of the greatest comedies ever turned out by the Keystone fun factory. Ford Sterling, Harry Gribbon, Hugh Fay, Gene Rogers, May Emory and other notables constitute the cast.

Variety and eccentricity have always been predominant factors in the Sennett comedies. This is strongly evidenced in Walter Wright's new production dealing with circus life. In this picture, "The Circus Girl," the real atmosphere of the sawdust ring and the big white top forms the basis of the story. Several of the scenes in this comedy show an aeroplane in flight. In order to put realism in these scenes the Kyestone company secured the right to make a picture of Joe Boquel, the aviator who holds the world's record for looping the loop. Boquel has been the center of interest for several weeks at Seal Beach, California, where he has been making exhibition flights. It was at Seal Beach that Boquel made a thrilling fight to supply real sensation for this new Keystone. Ora Carew, "Baldy" Belmont, Joseph Callahan and Blanche Payson are favorite Keystone players, who will appear in the circus comedy.

DRIVES AUTOMOBILE INTO BAY.

Thursday noon the people of Seal Beach had an opportunity to witness the leap of a man in an auto off the bank west of the city into Altamitos Bay. The trick was performed by a daredevil actor for a moving picture corporation.

The scene was supposed to represent an accident, the auto leaving the road, falls over the cliff, killing the occupants. A frail fence was set up a few feet back from the bank and the big car came thundering along, smashing the fence and running right into the bay.

A trial run was made first and then the daring driver went back about three blocks and with a full head of gas went through the fence at the rate of 40 miles an hour. A small incline was built at the edge of the cliff in the plank road that had been constructed for the purpose, hurling the machine about fifty feet from the shore.

It was a great sight and the driver stayed right with the car until after it went under the water. A dummy was placed in the back seat, which in the picture will make it appear that there were two persons in the machine. The auto was an old machine and is being taken out of the bay today. The engine and running gear will be overhauled and used again. Morosco made this picture, with Bill Taylor directing.

The Pollard Picture Players in San Diego, have recently completed "The Pearl of Paradise," a muliple reel feature production soon to be released on the Mutual program. The company is now working on "Miss Jackie of the Navy," and when in San Diego, a while back, we were invited to attend a fancy dress costume ball to be held at the Hotel del Coronado, which many of the Pollard players were going to attend

The main attraction of the evening was the staging of a scene at the masquerade ball in which the Pollard Players were supported by the guests of the big hotel. Many of the prominent society people asked to meet the star of the feature, Miss Marguerita Fischer, very charming and cute in her sailor boy costume. The ball was the most brilliant affair of the season, and the society people enjoyed the staging of the moving picture scenes immensely.

Lasky's general director, Cecil B. De Mille has started for New York, with the first print of the Farrar production, the story of which is based on the life of Joan of Arc. Mr. De Mille will be accompanied by the author, Jeanie MacPherson, and her mother, Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography, and Howard Ewing, director of lighting will also go. These three people toiled with the Lasky chief on an average of eighteen hours a day during the entire time required in the making of the gigantic production, and Mr. De Mille is taking them east with him for a brief vacation, while he is superintending the presentation of the picture in New York.

E. D. and I. L. Yost, of Santa Anna, have bought the Myrtle theater, are remodeling it and expect to re-open it with some of the higher grade pictures. The interior of the theater is being re-arranged so that the screen will be at the back of house, and a stage on which vaudeville acts may be presented or on which local entertainments may be given will be built.

"It will change to the name "Colonial," said E. D. Yost, "the name of the theater I. L. Yost operated in Kansas City. It is our intention to show the higher class pictures believing there is an opening here for such a theater. Within ten days or two weeks we expect to get going."

The M. P. soldiers of Lasky Company of Coast Artillery Federal Reserve, held their first drill recently under the command of Captain T. E. Duncan and Second Lieutenant Walter Long. The entire drill was practiced with a big dummy gun under the direction of a Federal army officer. The company is composed of members of the Lasky organization and other picture companies. The army officers gave them a talk on big gun firing, explaining the low visibility, range firing, calling of the directions of aiming, plotting the harbor, and firing the gun and then left them for a few moment. The army school of instructions was promptly dismissed as being too technical, and the officer returned, he heard the observer who was watching the army's vessel come into the harbor, giving the following directions: "Raise your foreground two turns—pan right two turns—props." A mythical shell was placed in the breech—"Smoke pot." A powder bag was shoved to them—"Action."—The breech block was locked—the Company stepped aside—"Camera"—the lanyard was pulled and the mythical shell sped seaward.

He ransacked every nook and corner of Southern California in search of wild animals, but did not see anything worthy of his gun, and discarding his collection of fine rifles, he rigged up a fishing pole and gathered in a bunch of fish. Before he could bring them to the studio for an alibi, he was snowed in and had to throw them away.

An all-day Board meeting of the Y. W. C. A., took place at the Hollywood Studio Club, when the members of the Los Angeles Board and the Hollywood committees were in attendance and partook of a delectable luncheon.

Marcus P. McClure, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, opened the meeting with a short, inspiring talk, after which special reports on each department were given. Each department presented a new idea or plan.

The two most important pieces of branch work now being carried on by the Y. W. C. A. International Institute is the Hollywood Studio Club and the Club for the foreign girls in the city.

"Romeo and Juliet"

Metro's Eight-Part Adaptation of the Shakespearean Classic, Featuring Bushman and Bayne and Directed by John W. Noble, Is a Great Production.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell

METRO Pictures Corporation has produced for the screen Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet." It [illegible] production one that easily will rank with [illegible] graphic efforts that have gone before. It [illegible] that should appeal alike to the Shakespearean student and the man to whom the linked names of Romeo and Juliet have only the remotest significance. Plainly, it has been the aim of the producers to visualize the story of the world's greatest love tragedy just as it was penned by the hand of the master. They have neither subtracted from it in any essential detail nor have they added to it.

Best of all, the textual accompaniment to the photographed action is the language of Shakespeare. Right here is a good place to say that the leaders constitute of this picture a thing apart. We have all heard it said that the works of the Bard of Avon are not for the screen—that the "upright stage" robs them of their matchless dialogue. The Metro production measurably disproves the assertion. Elaborate use has been made of the text. Artistically and clearly presented are these gems of the world's best literature; there is no possibility that their majesty will be marred by those who are "capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb-shows and noise."

To the making of the picture Director John W. Noble has contributed his best work for the screen. The scenario was prepared by John Arthur, Rudolph De Cordova and Mr. Noble. The director was assisted in the staging by Edward Elsner and Mr. De Cordova. There is no need to tell us these men were given carte blanche. The result speaks for itself.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne head the cast. It is an ideal combination. Mr. Bushman, above all else, possesses the physique of a "well-governed youth," of "a man to encounter Tybalt"; he appears to unusual advantage in the scanted garb of the period—in the language of Juliet's Nurse, "his leg excels all men's." He fits the part, and he plays it. Miss Bayne is a rare Juliet. Kindly endowed by nature in figure and feature, she has entered into the interpretation of the role of the heroine with marked sympathy and feeling.

Supporting these two is a splendid cast—and also perhaps the longest in the history of motion pictures. There are exactly one hundred names in the list furnished by the company. Space forbids mention of more than a few. Robert Cummings is Friar Laurence, a fine performance. Adella Barker is the portly Nurse to Juliet. Joseph Dailey is Peter, the Nurse's servant. These two contribute to the somber story the sole touches of lighter color. W. Lawson Butt is Tybalt, a heroic figure; Edmund Elton and Helen Dunbar are the Capulets, Eric Hudson and Genevieve Reynolds the Montagues; Horace Vinton is the Prince.

"Romeo and Juliet" will appeal to [illegible] as [illegible] productions. It will possess a distinct double appeal to the eye and to the mind—that of the action and that of the text. At the Broadway theater on the initial presentation, October 19, nearly two hours and a quarter were devoted to the running of the eight thousand feet of film; yet the movement at this normal speed is sharp, the best of evidence the scenes have been trimmed to a hair. Approximately a full reel is devoted to the single scene of the balcony—that where Romeo climbs the Capulet wall following the "accustomed feast" of the Capulets and from the ground underneath Juliet's window converses with his new-found love. Of the twelve thousand inches of film devoted to the portrayal of this great epic of the stage not a single one is superfluous. It is the dramatic height of the play as we see it on the screen. The remainder of the story holds, but this particular scene markedly moves.

As has been said, the story runs with fidelity to the text. It is told so clearly that lack of knowledge of the book is no bar to full enjoyment of the production. Pictorially the subject is notable. The studio interiors and exteriors—especially those of the streets of Verona—are unusually elaborate. For the home of the Capulets Director Noble has employed a great castle which he discovered in the neighborhood of the metropolis, a setting which most happily fits the requirements of the story.

Metro has done the screen a distinct service. Not only has it lavished its best on the adaptation of a great tragedy; not only has it brought it out in all its strength and beauty, its glamor and romance, for the education as well as entertainment of countless thousands who heretofore may have had slight acquaintance with it or concern about it. It has demonstrated that Shakespeare dead three hundred years penned in his youth lines that stamp him the greatest title builder in the world of to-day.

"The Isle of Life"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production, Based on Novel by Stephen F. Whitman, Proves Exceptionally Pleasing.

IN ADDITION to having an original and [illegible] this production has a strong pictorial lure. The director, Burton George, has apparently gone out of his way to procure attractive settings, and is to be congratulated on his success in obtaining them. There are occasional scenic flashes which bring exclamations of pleasure to the lips of observers and do much to maintain the enjoyment of the number.

The plot, however, needs no particular bracing in a scenic way. It is of itself a splendid example of the semi-adventurous type of story, and is enacted by a good cast. Frank Whitson makes the character of Sebastian stand out notably. He gets strong feeling into this role of the man whose love for a girl led him to wrongdoing in order to win her. The gradual change in his character is nicely worked out, and there is quite an emotional appeal about the closing scenes especially. Roberta Wilson is attractive as the girl and makes the most of her opportunities. Hayward Mack is also appealing in the role of next importance.

The story in brief. Sebastian Moore, a resident of Rome, is famous for his elaborate entertainments. At one of his affairs he discovers a newly-engaged couple, the girl being exceptionally attractive. He holds the theory, which he has openly expressed, that no human virtue is incorruptible. Desiring the girl for himself, he boards a steamer on which she is sailing with her aunt, and in mid-ocean throws her overboard. He plunges after her and they are picked up by some nearby fishermen and taken to the "Isle of Life," described as the last resting place of the gods on earth. What follows is in no wise as obvious as the observer anticipates. Sebastian's regeneration and the girl's final acceptance of his love are led up to in an eventful, entertaining manner.

There is perhaps a little slowness in the opening scenes of this production, but once under way it well repays watching.

"A Lass of the Lumberlands"

Helen Holmes the Star of a Spectacular Chapter-Play Produced by the Signal Film Corporation.

"The Lumber Pirate."

THE opening chapter of the Signal Film Corporation's new serial, "A Lass of the Lumberlands," gives the story an excellent start. The two reels that compose the chapter are entitled "The Lumber Pirate," and E. Alexander Powell, the author of the screen play, has selected an interesting theme. The big timber country of the Northwest is the scene of action, an authentic picture of the vast lumber industry being shown. The method by which the logs are carried to the mill is given in detail, and real logrunners have been employed in the making of the films. The human interest of the drama is compelling and consistent with its surroundings. In "The Lumber Pirate" Helen Holmes takes only a small part. When first introduced, she has just opened her eyes on life, and most of the events in the chapter take place before her birth. "Dollar" Holmes, Helen's father, has two ambitions: First, to become a lumber baron; second, to have a son to inherit his wealth. He manages to trick a tribe of Indians out of a huge tract of standing timber, but is bitterly disappointed when he learns that his wife has given birth to a girl. He bitterly reproaches the poor woman and leaves her at the camp, while he hastens to meet the men that will help him to develop his lands. Broken-hearted, Mrs. Holmes determines to quit her husband. She is injured while crossing a log jam with her baby, is taken home by a stranger and dies without revealing her name. The baby is brought up by her foster parents; in the meantime, Helen's father marries again. The new wife is the daughter of a man of wealth and position, and Holmes feels that he has had every wish gratified when she presents him with a son. This introductory chapter contains no superfluous matter, and is competently acted and directed. J. P. McGowan is in charge of the production, and Thomas C. Lingham has been intrusted with the character of "Dollar" Holmes. Aside from a tendency to overact, his impersonation is meritorious. Katherine Goodrich, William Behren, Will M. Chapman and Paul C. Hurst have other important roles.

Scene from "The Lass of the Lumberlands" (Signal).

"The Wreck in the Fog."

Chapter second moves the action forward about eighteen years. Helen is now known as Helen Dawson. Her half-brother, Stephen Holmes, is the pride of his parents. The young man, after finishing at school, starts for home on a coast steamship. The boat is wrecked and Helen saves Stephens life. The two young people become greatly interested in each other, and the elder Holmes gives the girl a position on his railroad, in gratitude for saving Stephen. One or two minor defects detract slightly from the shipwreck scenes, but, in the main, it is impressive, an actual shipwreck having been utilized. The chapter closes with Helen using one of her beloved engines to beat her father in having a claim filed on some lumber land.

Miss Holmes' likable personality and knowledge of the art of acting serve her in good stead in this new serial. Leo D. Maloney has a congenial role as Tom Dawson, Helen's foster-brother. A number of the scenes in this chapter are of great pictorial beauty.

"The End of the Rainbow"

Story Laid Among the Redwoods of California Features Myrtle Gonzales and Val Paul for Bluebird Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story on which this five-part production is based is of a pleasing and more or less red-blooded type, working up to a fitting climax which possibly loses some of its snap by the prolonging of the tale into the usual reconciliations, explanations, etc. However, there is much to be enjoyed about "The End of the Rainbow." The title as applied to the story has little significance. The perpetration of a blue and white rainbow on the innocent spectator is made palatable only by the wonderful glimpses of the redwood country, and San Francisco Bay with which it appears.

Myrtle Gonzalez and Val Paul as the leads of the play are pleasing; and the fighting propensities of the latter as displayed in the last reel are exceedingly admirable. George Hernandez as Elihu Bennett, father of the heroine and viciously opposed to paying the owners of the lumber land a fair price for their property, acquits himself in a natural and delightful manner. A bit of comedy, however far fetched it may be, creeps into the otherwise melodramatic atmosphere of the production, with Sheriff Connelly's difficulties of transportation.

The plot of the story concerns itself with an effort of the lumber monopoly headed by Elihu Bennett to obtain possession of the standing timber in the redwood forests of California and the villainy of Bennett's representative at the lumber land, and his foreman, in trying to make away with the company's money, and also to under-estimate the offer of Bennett to the owners of the land. Bennett's daughter impersonating a stenographer who is being sent from San Francisco, goes to the lumber woods and is the means of discovering the plot by which her father is to be robbed.

The story of the production was written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

"The Man Who Stood Still"

Paragon Five-Reel Screen Version of the Jules Eckart Goodman Play, in Which Louis Mann Is Starred—Released by the World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

LOUIS MANN'S pleasantly remembered stage vehicle, "The Man Who Stood Still," a five-reel screen version of which has been produced by the Paragon, is as far removed from the realistic school of playmaking as it is possible to go in this day and age. Simplicity is the keynote of plot and characterization, and the story has been built with an eye to giving the star the best of the situation. The characters are all from the humbler walks of life, and the main motive is the conventional one of the betrayed maiden who returns to the shelter of her father's house, with a nameless child in her arms. The author has handled his theme with real feeling and sound judgment, however, and the human quality of his work insures it a wide appeal.

The part played by Mr. Fields is that of a gentle old German, the owner of a small jewelry store. He is satisfied to plod along at his usual rate of speed and accumulate more friends than dollars. His one pride is his daughter. Marie is loved by the son of his best friend, Otto Spiegel, but the girl listens to the promises of young MacPherson, whose father is the business rival of the old jeweler, and becomes a mother without becoming a wife. Deserted by the man in whom she trusted, Marie is taken in by the Spiegels, a reconciliation with her father follows, and young Spiegel makes her his wife.

Something of the simplicity of the theme seems to have found its way into Frank Crane's direction of the photoplay—Marie's escape from the picnic is an example in point; the way in which she eludes observation could not possible be more artless. Obvious but kindly humor lightens the atmosphere all through, and the general effect of the production is pleasing.

Lew Fields plays Krauss with his customary understanding and liking for character work. To an actor of his methods, the loss of his amusing struggle with the English language deprives him of a large portion of his stock in trade. Nevertheless, Mr. Fields is able to put over his points clearly, without undue effort. Doris Kenyon lends her charm of person and skill as an actress to the character of Marie and George Trimble is seen in his capital impersonation of Otto Spiegel. Other well considered bits of acting are contributed by Edward O'Connor, Dave Ferguson, Viola Trent, Harry Fraser, John Powers and Auguste Bermester.

"The Figure in Black."

CHARACTERIZED by the rapid and old time spirit of melodrama that marked the first two episodes of "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the fifth episode, "The Figure in Black," is distinctly absorbing. The effort to discover the murderer of Truxton Lambert forms the main pivot of the action of this number, and the kidnapping of Florence Montrose with the incidents leading up to it along with the cleverly staged rescue provide plenty of suspense and moments of real thrill. Interspersed with these incidents are weird glimpses of what transpires in the laboratory of Dr. Montrose. Again we see the victims of Pierre La Rue, master criminal, begging for application of the dread discovery of Dr. Montrose, which in place of developing genius stimulates criminality. The close of this episode shows the thrilling escape from justice of the murderer of Lambert. Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin both continue to interpret their respective roles satisfactorily.

"The Phantom Image."

The sixth episode concerns itself with Stanley's determination to gain from Vanya Tosca, a victim of Pierre's, the truth about the Crimson Stain Mystery. face by Stanley reveals the picture of her tormentor in her eyes. Parrish, a supposed detective acting in Florence's interests, shows his colors by accidentally dropping and breaking the photographic plate, forming thereby another link in the mystery.

"The Devil's Symphony."

Episode six gives an account of a thrilling circumstance which occurs at a masked ball at which the Crimson Stain gang are instructed by their master to steal the Clayton fifty thousand dollar necklace. At eleven o'clock one masked figure finds its way to the basement of the house and turns off the electric light, while another possesses itself of the necklace. Florence faints and is carried to an upper room where from a box evidently containing flowers creeps a snake which is almost upon the young woman when Stanley in the guise of a Pierre steps from a closet and flings the snake from the window.

every minute. It is literally a Chaplin riot. Supporting the comedian are Ben Turpin, Leo White and Edna Purviance. Turpin cuts some figure himself in the way of funmaking; ably he supplements the efforts of his chief to make the millions laugh.

The three subjects chosen by the Essanay company are "The Tramp," "His New Job" and "A Night Out." By the insertion of a few sub-titles the action of the three is welded into a running farce. We see the tramp-farmhand "fired" and seek a new job. After a strenuous day as a motion picture actor Charlie and Ben go out to celebrate. Perfectly simple, as you may see.

The five parts are filled with characteristic Chaplin stuff, the stuff which solidified a reputation already world wide It is of the sort of material perhaps best described by Heywood Broun, who declared in effect that it caused him to blush for shame for his fellow-Americans and—to laugh his head off. And so it is with the Revue. We sympathize with those who find in it abundant matter for laughter; and we express that sympathy by laughing with them. We can't help it.

Undoubtedly the Revue will have a wide vogue. It ought to be well worth the while of any exhibitor to take a look at it, to see what the Essanay company has accomplished with "water that is past."

"The Kiss"

Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot Featured in Famous Players Dramatic Comedy of Society.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

AN INTERESTING dramatic comedy of polite society is "The Kiss," released by the Famous Players on October 19. Featured are Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot, Mr. Moore as an American aviator on furlough from foreign service, Miss Courtot as Louise, the companion of the hero's grandmother and along with a dozen other girls very much in love with the lion of the hour. Dell Henderson produces the story from the pen of Elizabeth Frazer. The result will be especially liked by the feminine division of a house.

As the title indicates, a kiss figures largely in the working out of the story—not one, indeed, but several of them. This is due to the efforts of the hero to identify the young woman who in the dark had favored him with a definite token of her regard and promptly disappeared from the landscape. The situation resolves itself into a study of the psychology of the kiss; it affords opportunity for speculation on the part of the observer whether there was in the brief contact sufficient of the tangible, recognizable or definable to set apart the particular young woman from her fellows. The evidence seemed to favor the affirmative.

There is a sterner side to the story, however—wherein the daughter of the employer of the heroine loves unwisely if well a man who seeks to profit financially through her affection for him; who hesitates not to "trim" her at cards and to insist upon prompt payment of the obligation, even being so insistent as to cause the weak-willed woman to rifle her mother's safe. There was hardly justification for the accusation that Luise was the thief, but the denunciation led to a train of exciting incidents.

Virginia Hammond was Mrs. Van Vechton and Adolph Men-

IF ITS story was the chief reliance of this picture by the Fox players it might hold an audience; but I am not sure of it. There is little or no real plot construction in it; but it plays up other things. In the early scenes, which are laid in an orphan asylum, it has besides June Caprice, who leads all through and is here as a slavey, the often perfect acting of the kiddies—they please the audience as did the leading woman from the start.

a boy's suit. She is taken on by a farmer with whom Harry Hilliard works. Here the not very dramatic love story begins after Harry has seen her with her hat off and "knows"; we catch a glimpse of June taking a morning dip in the swimming pool; but it is in the distance. The other hired man has glanced across the fields and Harry has to fight him. The girl escapes, hides in an automobile and is taken to the city where she falls into the hands of a not at all melodramatic bad club man.

Harry comes to the city, too, and finds June and rescues her "in time." It is a likable picture, has many pretty scenes, some humor and a good deal of capricious youthfulness. The audience at the Academy of Music seemed to enjoy it.

Six-Reel Adaptation of Stage Drama of Same Title Presented by Monarch Photo Play Company, Inc.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

"COMMON Sense Brackett," a six reel motion picture version of the rural stage drama of the same title and the first release offered on a state right basis by the Monarch Photo Play Co., Inc., is hardly an average production. Much of the strength of the story has been lost in its visualization, and at intervals the action is allowed to drag considerably. Often during the unreeling of the celluloid spools, however, a human note is struck, and a few touches of wholesome humor are found. The leading character in the picture is Bruce Brackett (William Frederick) who, through his common-sense philosophy, smoothes out the rough spots in the lives of various residents of a small New Hampshire village.

Scene from "Common Sense Brackett" (Monarch).

The story proper is preceded by a prologue in which Brackett, the proprietor of the village hotel, marries a girl member of a stranded theatrical troupe. A child is born, and the mother, tired of drudgery, goes to the city with the child. The mother dies, and the child is put in an orphan asylum. Sixteen years later the daughter gives up her stage work to become a teacher in the village in which she was born. Brackett does not know the girl is his daughter. Through all the following episodes we see Brackett, grown older, dispense his philosophy in a manner that unites broken ties. His is a lovable character, and is done justice to by Mr. Frederick.

The interior settings in the picture are not all that could be asked. The cast includes William J. Sorelle, John E. Mackin, Barbara Gilroy, Mildred Gregory, Bradley Barker, Dallas M. Fitzgerald, Adele George, Mrs. Fitzgerald, Walter Hiers and baby Joan.

"The Last Man"

Five-Reel Photoplay of Military Life, Written by James Oliver Curwood and Released on the V-L-S-E Program.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE opening scenes of "The Last Man," the five-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, released October 30, have the merit of giving the spectator an insight into the plot without loss of time. Major Harvy, a regimental surgeon of the Sixth Cavalry, U. S. Army, is shown leaving his post in the Philippine Islands for a station in Montana. The next episode shows the Major's wife, in New York, consoling herself for the absence of her husband by permitting two men of her acquaintance to make love to her. The Major, who believes his wife is everything she should be, has her join him at his new post. She has been there but a short time when she starts a flirtation with Lieutenant Horne, one of Harvey's brother officers. The next move in the drama brings into view a highwayman named Sandy MacDonald, and his daughter Jeanne. The girl is young, beautiful and unsophisticated. She discovers the love affair between Mrs. Harvey and Horne. She also attracted the attention of the [illegible] during a struggle with him, learns the truth about her father. Sandy promises never to commit another robbery, [illegible] his promise, however, and is killed during a hold-up. Before this, Jeanne, who has made friends with Major Harvey, becomes a nurse in the post hospital. The surgeon discovers the true state of affairs between Horne and his wife and tells Lorna he will help her get a divorce. He returns to the Philippines, and Jeanne goes with her as a nurse. Horne and Lorna are married, and events again bring them across Harvey's path. The three find themselves at Fort Gordo in the Philippines. The fort is attacked by a superior number of Moros, and Harvey, as the commanding officer, directs Horne to take his wife and escape, while he covers the retreat. He is the last man to leave the fort and [illegible] conduct awakens Lorna's old love for him. She estranges Horne in trying to bring Harvey back to her side, only to learn that the Major and Jeanne are soon to be married.

The telling of the story makes this somewhat familiar plot take on a new lease of life. The incidents are well knit together, and events move forward at a brisk pace. The variety and color of the scenes, the glimpses of military life, and the able direction of William Wolbert all contribute to the deserved success of the photoplay. The fight on the rope footbridge is a novel and exciting feature of the production.

Scene from "The Last Man" (Vitagraph).

It goes without saying that it is impossible to make good pictures and not have the assistance of good actors. "The Last Man" is acted by a cast that maintains its artistic level at a gratifying height. Mary Anderson is the Jeanne, William Duncan the Major, and Corrinne Griffith plays the unfaithful wife. Jack Mower is the Lieutenant Horne, and Otto Lederer the highwayman.

"The Rainbow Princess"

Ann Pennington Scores in Famous Players Story of a Circus Dancer.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players released on October 23 "The Rainbow Princess," a five-part subject featuring Ann Pennington, the little dancer of the Follies. For Miss Pennington Shannon Fife has written a good story which J. Searle Dawley directs. It carries the atmosphere of the circus. In securing this Mr. Dawley has employed a sure-enough show, with all its paraphernalia and its people, freaks and all. The picture has its thrills due to the putting over of stunts, and it has its dramatic suspense, too.

Scene from "The Rainbow Princess" (Famous Players).

Miss Pennington is seen as a girl who has known no other home but the showman's tent and who through a family resemblance is foisted upon a town dignitary as his granddaughter. As a departure from the usual rule it turns out she is of no relation to the judge. Hope is not returned to the circus, however. The friendships she has established are too strong. She finds a home and a husband in the nephew of the judge. It is a pretty story.

Grant Stewart is Judge Daingerfield, a strong character well portrayed. Charles Sutton is the unscrupulous Pop Blodgett, the manager of the circus and the chief of the swindlers who lead the judge to believe Hope is his granddaughter. William Courtleigh, Jr., is Reynolds, the nephew of the judge, who falls in love with the little performer.

There are some spectacular acts, such, for instance, as the parachute ascension and the unexpected drop of the diminutive dancer into the stream and her rescue by Reynolds. There are dramatic situations, as in the arrest of Hope for pocketpicking and her examination by the judge; the uncovering of the swindlers by the judge's friends; and the burglary frustrated by Hope and the stiff fight that resulted. There is comedy and there is heart interest, too, when the freaks descend on the home of the judge and are entertained by the little dancer. There is also real entertainment in the hula-hula dance put on by the Follies company. It is a many-sided picture.

IN "The Pencil Clue," third episode in the "Grant, Police Reporter" newspaper series by Robert Welles Ritchie, George Larkin, as Grant, unravels a puzzling murder mystery and furnishes a thrill when he jumps from a canopy on a level with the first floor of a building into an automobile that has just started to move. This is a daring feat, and the camera has recorded it faithfully. The jump is followed by a fight in the automobile.

The screened mystery story moves fast in this film, and tells of the unaccountable death of an aged lawyer. Suspicion points toward his partner, however, when the stenographer tells the reporter what she saw. With a heavily penciled line as the clue, Grant proves that the old man died from the effects of poison on the point of a pencil, the pencil-point having been prepared by the junior partner. Ollie Kirkby plays the part of the stenographer. The junior law partner is played by Director Robert Ellis. Others in the cast are Arthur Albertson, William McKey and G. Chira.

"The Merry Motor Menders."

This number of the Ham and Bud comedies is not up to the standard set in preceding releases. The action is rather slow. Ham and Bud become the owners of a garage, and to increase their business use all sorts of methods to cause punctures so that autoists will come to them. Business is slow, nevertheless, and the pair are glad when they get a telephone message. Here Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch enter the action—in a broken auto. Ethel smiles on Ham, and Henry becomes jealous. But his wrath is somewhat cooled when an auto with Helen and Bud is sent to the skies by an explosion.

THE Land Just Over Yonder," a six-reel adaptation of the story by Peter B. Kyne, is a virile motion picture drama of the West—the mining West—and is a picture of considerable merit. It is a visualization of the story that appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, and was produced by the Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company for distribution by Unity Sales Corporation.

Two strong characters dominate the action throughout the six reels, and these characters have been delineated with a fine sense of understanding by George N. Chesebro and Arthur N.

Millett. The latter, as Toyiable Tom Jennings, "desert rat" and later sheriff, is a lovable old man whose devotion to his young comrade and partner (Mr. Chesebro) is touching. The work of Jane Vernon as the quarterbreed wife is also good.

Mr. Kyne's story has lost little interest in the filming, and it is to the credit of the director that none of the Western mining-town scenes are overdone. Continuity throughout is fair, although considerable footage is used before the real story is gotten to. Photography could have been better. The story is rife with dramatic situations. After Toyiable and "Billy Boy" have struck it rich, the youth becomes enamored of a quarterbreed maiden. This leads to a breach between the two. Toyiable goes back to the hills, and "Billy Boy" after his marriage to the quarterbreed, discovers that she married him only for his money, and that she has been carrying on an affair with another man. The husband intercepts his wife and the other man as they are about to run away, and turns the man loose on the desert. The man dies and the husband, through the duplicity of his wife, is held for first degree murder. Toyiable comes back from the hills and becomes sheriff. He is to take his former pal to the county seat to be hanged. They spend several weeks in the hills, and, returning to the prison, the sheriff obtains a pardon for his young comrade.

Besides those mentioned, the cast includes George Best, Elsa Fox, Charles Eichman, Julius Frankenberg and Sidney Lang.

"The Voice of Love"

Five-Part Mutual Masterpicture Presents Unusual Romance With Winnifred Greenwood in the Stellar Role.

last notch with honor. The latter seems to be the case with the production under discussion; the theme while not an altogether pleasant one, under the development given it descends rather to the commonplace toward the close of the picture, in an almost finished-anything-will-do-now sort of manner. Up to a certain point the production is artistic. Winifred Greenwood, George Field, Edward Coxen, Laura Sears and other popular American players do their best to make it so with the help of Rea Berger, who directed it.

The story treats of the career of a wife living under the delusion that she has murdered her husband, who was an army officer, with the real murderer extracting money from her at intervals under a pretense of keeping her secret. Making her living by astrology she supports and educates her daughter in the east, who is kept in ignorance of her mother's mode of earning a livelihood. Mother and daughter, one in the east and one in the west, meet and fall in love with the same man. Here it is that a weakness of development is noticed. A few paltry subtitles do little if anything to help matters along at this juncture. The affair ends by the mother, after having unknowingly plotted against her own daughter, marrying a man of mature age who has been devoted to her for some time; but not before she has mended the breach which she caused between the young people. The characterization, especially as regards the older woman is not always consistent.

Triangle Program

"American Aristocracy," Five-Reel Fine Arts, Featuring Douglas Fairbanks, and "The Criminal," with Clara Williams and William Despond, Five-Reel Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison

"AMERICAN Aristocracy" not only aims to be a real story, but it starts out bravely enough as a satire. The author soon after takes off his hat to the audience and explains that Mr. Fairbanks will do the rest. The reputation of Mr. Fairbanks, and his intense personality added, puts a high selling value on almost any picture in which he appears, so this release will sell and will please many who welcome the star on his own account, but it drivels out into a mere vehicle. The producer of to-day is continually urged on by the necessity of filling a program, and he is practically compelled to give the public a view of stars without plays. It is generally claimed that a poor play with a big star brings in a larger profit for all concerned than a well-told, interesting story, strongly typed, performed with skill, beautifully treated and a gem from the audience point of view inside a theater.

Would it not be possible to give Mr. Fairbanks more opportunity as an actor and less as an acrobat. We all enjoy seeing him jump fences and scale walls for a while, not that these feats are novel or particularly interesting in themselves, but it becomes inane after frequent repetition, unless the vehicle is converted by Keystone ingenuity and intensity into a roaring farce. The intention of "American Aristocracy" is not that of farce, into which it is painfully forced, but of satire, and it would have made a corking good satire if followed out consistently, giving Fairbanks better opportunity and adding to his reputation instead of forcing him to carry a heavy burden.

"The Criminal" is a story of pretty motif, but it is painfully attenuated, drawn out over a long number of scenes which contribute to footage rather than to live interest. The author has taken up a vital situation and built around it as best he could under stress of hurried play making, and the director has done some skilled picturing of what is provided, but not enough material has really been provided to more than fill two or three reels. Those of us who thoroughly appreciate Mr.

Scene from "The Criminal" (Triangle).

Sullivan's fine work in the past, and those of us who highly commend the progressive policy of Mr. Ince, who realize that he has made some beautiful and thoroughly artistic contributions to this growing young art, feel that we must exercise consideration for hard-working authors and directors who have demonstrated their high value. We have a great deal to thank them for, and so has the whole world. But the plain truth is that "The Criminal" is not up to Ince standards.

A young Italian emigrant girl, very ignorant and superstitious, finds an abandoned baby on the stairs of her tenement home and takes care of it. She asks a young writer on whom she has waited at the restaurant to read the note explaining that the baby is illegitimate. The girl is arrested on no evidence whatever for kidnapping. The refuses to tell that the babe is fatherless, because she is so herself, confessing that she stole it in order to save the child's name. The young writer goes to the jail and elicits the truth. He thereupon proposes to marry the girl and adopt the baby. To disregard consistency, plausibility, the necessity for suspense, adequate preparation and the principles involved in creating a strong drama is, as a rule, to create something that is not a drama.

uplift. The story of the play belongs to the order of fiction that is frequently referred to as "a rattling good yarn." No matter if the hero is perfection and the heroine also and everything comes out just as it should! No one expects such a tale to be a reflex of life, and it accomplishes its mission, in its humble way, just as surely as do those immortal classic, "Robinson Crusoe" and "Mother Goose."

The time of the play is the present. Cyril Hamilton, a wealthy young New Yorker, is engaged to marry Marcia West, whose father is a Colonel in the regular army. Hamilton, an officer in a militia regiment, resigns his commission when the National Guard is ordered to the Mexican border, regard for his physical comfort having influenced his act. Marcia denounces him as a coward, returns his ring and goes to Texas with her father. Cyril determines to show the girl that her estimate of himself is not correct. He enlists as a private in another regiment, and gets into trouble with his corporal, a bully named Mallin. The exciting events that follow Hamilton's arrival on the border keep the interest at high pressure. In trying to aid the child of a Mexican Indian, he disobeys orders and is accused of assisting in the theft of a machine gun. Mallin is the guilty person, but attempts to fasten the crime on Cyril. The young fellow is arrested, but escapes and accompanies the Indian across the Rio Grande. Navarete, a Mexican bandit chief, who has met Marcia in New York and is in love with her, takes possession of the stolen machine gun and captures the Colonel's daughter at the same time. The girl is held a prisoner in Navarete's house, and is freed by Cyril, after an encounter with the Mexican in which the bandit is killed. The two Americans escape from the town, but are overtaken the next morning. Cyril puts up a good fight, but the enemy is too strong for him. At the request of Marcia, he saves his last cartridge that he may prevent her from falling into the hands of the Mexicans. As he presses his gun against her breast, a Mexican bullet reaches him. The arrival of Colonel West and a detachment of troops make "the happy ending" easy to accomplishment.

John W. Noble has directed "The Brand of Cowardice" with excellent judgment, and received valuable assistance from the cast. Lionel Barrymore and Grace Valentine as Cyril Hamilton and Marcia West are the featured names. They both merit the distinction. Robert Cummings, Kate Blancke, John Davidson, Frank Montgomery and L. Wolheim are other names that deserve their meed of praise. A special line must be given little Tula Belle for her acting of the Mexican's daughter. The young lady is a credit to her profession.

THE WHITE ROSE OF THE WILDS (Biograph), Oct. 16.—Blanche Sweet is featured in this reissued "Western" reel, which was directed by David W. Griffith. The cast and the production of the film are what make it worth while. In the cast are found Wilfred Lucas, Robert Harron and Joseph Graybell. The story tells of an outlaw who comes into a girl's life as such, and who leaves with the "White Rose of the Wilds" as an indication that he may come back as a suitor. Reviewed in the issue of October 7, page 62.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 83, 1916 (Selig), Oct. 16.—Steamship Kansan, which was held up by U-53, reaches Boston; San Francisco's "Path of Gold" celebration; President and Mrs. Wilson attend Omaha Centennial celebration; Seven hundred children take part in Golden Harvest Festival, San Mateo, Cal.; Fire prevention day in Chicago; Old frigate Franklin is burned at Eastport, Me.; Charles W. Fairbanks attends G. O. P. luncheon in San Francisco; Views of Fort Bliss taken from the basket of war balloon, El Paso. Survivors of torpedoed steamers arrive in Newport, R. I.

A SAUERKRAUT SYMPHONY (Kalem), Oct. 17.—A funny number of the Ham and Bud comedies. In this reel Ham, Bud and Ethel Teare are assisted in the funmaking by Henry Murdoch. He adds a number of laughs to the reel, the background of which is a sauerkraut factory. This comedy was reviewed in the issue of October 21, page 378.

DREAMY DUD IN THE AFRICAN WAR ZONE (Essanay), Oct. 18.—A split-reel sharing animated cartoons and scenic. The novelty cartoons by Carlson are funny, and they embrace some good double exposure work which brings into the action a human character—Harry Dunkinson. Dud, Dunk and the dog put out to sea, and their adventures are numerous and humorous. The scenic is good.

A PERSISTENT WOOING (Vim), Oct. 18.—Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby are featured in this number of the Vim Feature Comedies. The care that the picture has received in its production make it acceptable. Many of the sub-titles are mirthful, as is much of the action. The story hardly gives the two leading characters an opportunity to display their laugh-provoking capabilities. It tells of a young woman's persistent wooing of the man she wants.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 84, 1916 (Selig), Oct. 19.—Fire destroys dome of Main Hall, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.; National Guard of several States in maneuvers, Las Cruces, N. M.; Crowds watch baseball bulletin in Denver; Ambassador Gerard arrives in New York from Germany; Fire destroys large Chicago plant; "Machine Gun Board" meets, Washington, D. C.; Lina Cavalieri and Sarah Bernhardt among arrivals from Europe, New York; Champion goat roper at work, Brownwood, Texas; Mrs. Sharpless celebrates 106th birthday, Los Angeles, Cal.; Miss Nancy Power arrives in New York to go on stage—sold $6,000 worth of Red Cross tags in London; Earthquake makes ruin of town of Pesaro, Italy; President and Mrs. Wilson attend Indianapolis centennial.

A PRECIOUS PARCEL (Vim), Oct. 19.—A quite humorous reel with Plump and Runt as the chief laughmakers. The story burlesques in an entertaining manner the old plot of the shipment of gold to a lonely express office and the conspiracy to steal it. Runt is the bad man and Plump the hero. Plump (Babe Hardy) and Runt (Billy Ruge) are assisted by Edna Reynolds and Florence McLoughlin.

THE CODE LETTER (Kalem), Oct. 20.—This is the first of Kalem's new "Grant, Police Reporter" series, and it is a winner. It is a fast reel and thrills as well as entertains. George Larkin, does several stunts in this number—he travels hand over hand an iron pipe suspended between two skyscrapers; he walks along a narrow ledge from one window to another high above the street, and he crawls down a rope to a scaffold only to have the rope cut by the villainess. George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby play the leads. They are supported by Director Robert Ellis, Arthur Albertson, William McKay and G. Chira. Reviewed at length on page 410 of the issue of October 21.

HERE AND THERE (Vim), Oct. 20.—Pokes and Jabbs do considerable fast knockabout work in this reel. The film is a fair comedy. Pokes lands in a Western town where the sheriff, Jabbs, has advertised for a wife. The ad is answered by a showgirl and Pokes makes a play for her favor. He gets rid of Jabbs for a while, but the latter comes back in the guise of a bad man, and to add to Pokes's worries his wife appears on the scene. Robert Burns and Walter Stull are supported by Ethel Burton.

A DARING CHANCE (Kalem), Oct. 21.—A good number of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series. Billy Boy, a youngster of tender years, takes as much chance on his young life in this film as does Helen Gibson. He is traveling alone on a runaway gasoline handcar and is saved from colliding with a stalled car when Helen reaches down from the cab of a speeding locomotive and pulls him to safety. An exciting reel. Reviewed in the issue of October 21, page 379.

AN EVENTFUL EVENING (Selig), Oct. 21.—This comedy reel cannot compare with some preceding Tom Mix productions. The reel is lacking in cowboy feats and the action drags. The story was written by Victoria Forde, who is a member of the cast with Tom Mix, the producer; Betty Keller and Pat Chrisman. It tells of the happenings when a young man elopes with one of the daughters of a ranchman, believing her to be the other sister. However, the youth learns that the girl he loves—the drudge—is at home, and he goes there and gets her.

FROM THE DEEP (Knickerbocker Star Feature), Oct. 13.—A strong but rather morbid story of the underworld screened in three reels. In the picture have been used almost all of the ingredients that go toward the making of thrilling melodrama. Technical details are good, and the cast able. The story has for its background repellant phases of life, and tells of the happenings to the sister of a girl ruined by a man who becomes a grafting detective, and of the detective who reaps the wages of sin. The cast is composed of Joyce Moore, Phyllis Grey, Thomas A. Rector, Philo McCollough, Daniel Gilfeather, Florence Horkheimer, Jay Herman, Henry Stanley and Bruce Smith.

ONLY A ROSE (Selig), Oct. 26.—A three-reel drama quite evidently made some time ago. It does not rank as high as some of Selig's later productions. The story is absurd, although at intervals appealing. It tells of an aged employer of a broker who saves the latter's life. Another employe, who is in love with the old man's daughter, takes credit for saving the broker's life, and the broker does not learn his real savior's identity until the old man dies, when he gives the daughter a check, which she tears up. On the last reel is a rustic comedy of several hundred feet which is rather good. The cast of "Only a Rose" includes Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley, Leo Pierson, E. J. Brady, Eugenie Forde and Luella Maxam.

THE FABLE OF "THE KITTENISH SUPERANNS AND THE WORLD WEARY SNIPES (Essanay), Oct. 17.—This two-reel number of the George Ade fables is pleasingly mirthful. The film is an adaptation of a fable printed in the Cosmopolitan magazine, and has lost none of its piquancy and delightfulness in the filming. The sub-titles are funny, too, and the slangy philosophy of the author is borne out in the picture. The moral is "Youth is the time for gravity," and the visualized fable certainly makes one believes so.

CLASSMATES (Biograph), Oct. 18.—A virile three-reel drama of West Point and the jungles of South America. The cast is headed by Henry B. Walthall and Blanche Sweet. In their support are Marshall Nielan, Gertrude Robinson and Lionel Barrymore. The picture has a strong dramatic appeal. It tells of a poor storekeeper's son who wins the hand of the girl over a wealthy but unscrupulous youth. Henry Walthall has an especially difficult piece of character delineation to do, and he does it in the manner that has made him famous. An acceptable reissue.

THE YELLOW HAND (Kalem), Oct. 18.—Oriental mystery and melodramatic thrills make this a strong two-reel number of Robert Welles Ritchie's "The Girl from 'Frisco" series. A review printed on page 378, of the issue of October 21, says "plenty of fighting occurs during the action of the plot, and its element of mystery centers attention on the screen throughout." The leads in the cast are Marin Sais and True Boardman. They are assisted by Ronald Bradbury, Frank Jonasson and Edward Clisbee.

TREADING PEARLS (Knickerbocker Star Feature), Oct. 20.—A quite acceptable drama with several bits of good character delineation. The four main roles are well played. The story concerns two sisters and two brothers—the sisters poor and the brothers sons of a wealthy merchant. One of the girls is rather backward, and the dying mother advances the fear that she will never get anywhere. Later, however, it is the backward girl who is responsible for the more flighty sister's salvation. The element of romance helps this picture.

THE END OF THE RAINBOW (Oct. 30).—A five-part production made among the redwoods of California, and featuring Myrtle Gonzalez and Val Paul. The picture is an enjoyable one, takes the form of melodrama and savors delightfully of the great out-of-doors. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

THE LAST MAN (Vitagraph), Oct. 30.—The atmosphere of this five-reel photoplay is colored by military life in Montana and the Philippines. The plot is an absorbing one, and the incidents are varied and skilfully joined together. The picture takes its title from a desperate attack on Fort Gordo by a party of Moros, and the heroic conduct of an American officer, who is the last man to leave the fort. The drama is reviewed at length in the present issue.

THE BRAND OF COWARDICE (Rolfe), Oct. 23.—Lionel Barrymore and Grace Valentine are the stars of this five-reel photo-play which has most of its scenes laid on the Mexican border. It is a well told story of today and shows how a wealthy young chap proves to his sweetheart and his friends that he is not the coward they think him. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THEIR DIVORCE (Drew-Metro), Oct. 30.—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are the married couple in this one-reel comedy who "agree to disagree." After bickering over trifles during the first years of their married life, they come to the conclusion that they cannot get along together. Once the wife is started on her way to Reno, they discover their mistake and settle their differences for good. In the hands of such able comedians as the Drews, the reel is bound to yield fifteen minutes of clean-cut amusement.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 58 (Gaumont), Oct. 18.—"James River Country, Virginia," is the subject of this number. Old historic spots such as the home of Pocahontas, the battlefield of the Seven Pines, the house in which General Lee's mother was born, form an interesting part of the film. It is finished with a clever cartoon by Harry Palmer entitled "Inspiration."

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 94 (Mutual), Oct. 18.—Interesting items of this number are the landing of the Russian troops at Salonica, a million dollars in gold on view at San Francisco, a view of the U-53 at Newport, R. I., Ambassador Gerard arriving from Germany, the "Dodgers" and the Red Sox battling for supremacy at Brooklyn, N. Y., and the fall race meet at the Latonia, N. Y. tracks.

REEL LIFE NO. 25 (Gaumont), Oct. 22.—An interesting number showing "French Women Munition Workers," at work making rifles, bayonets, flying machine motors, shells, etc. Women at work in the Gaumont factories making munitions is also a part of this subject. "Ferrying Trains Across the Sacramento River" is another interesting subject, "Eastern and Western Barbecues" showing a mutton barbecue in the east, and a venison barbecue in the west forms an appetizing subject.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 59 (Gaumont), Oct. 25.—This opens with some entertaining and comprehensive views of Hot Springs, Va. The surroundings are picturesque, showing Fort Dinwiddie, the home of Daniel Boone, an old grist mill, and various cascades.

SPARTAN SPLEEN (Beauty), Oct. 31.—Orral Humphrey is presented in this farce comedy as a soldier of his majesty sent to protect a lone family who are surrounded by natives of the country where they live. These natives are reported to be about to make a raid on the wine-cellar, and the lone soldier is expected to fight them single handed. This he does and finally proves himself a hero by rescuing a pet rat from a fire.

A WOMAN'S DARING (American), Oct. 00.—This five-reel subject, by W. H. Lippert, features Winifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen and George Field. It tells the story of a country girl, raised in poverty by her miserly uncle. She falls prey to a mining promoter, who pretends to marry her and thus wins her love. George Field, who is always interesting as the debonair villain, does splendid work in this number. The girl is seen in the city five years later, with her child, living under an assumed name. She wins the love of an honest man, but the villain again appears. There is good drama in this production, particularly in the closing scenes. The plot material, though not entirely new, is excellently handled.

THE VOICE OF LOVE (Mutual Masterpiece de Luxe), Oct. 19.—A five-part production in which Winnifred Greenwood plays the feminine lead. The story which weakens about the middle of the fourth reel is otherwise interesting, and deals with the career of a woman who lives under the shadow of believing she has murdered her husband. The real murderer uses her delusion as a means of extracting money from her. The conclusion of the [illegible] refused many times, while her daughter marries a young man with whom the mother had believed herself in love.

HER PAINTED PEDIGREE (Vogue), Oct. 22.—A two-reel comedy number, featuring Paddy McGuire, Gypsy Abbott and Arthur Moon. The English lord marries an educated Indian girl. His rival, an Indian, induces the lord to invite the girl's parents and relatives to England for a visit. The lord consents and the atrocious manners of the red skins shock his relatives. This is quite well presented, but the incidents do not develop a very strong humor. Paddy McGuire is pleasing in the role of the English lord. A fair subject.

PROF. JEREMEY'S EXPERIMENT (American), Oct. 23.—An amusing two-part comedy with Orral Humphrey, Vivian Rich and A. Vosburgh in the cast. Prof. Jeremey discovers a powder that when inhaled will cause people to tell the truth. Through a newspaper article concerning the discovery he is so deluged with orders that in desperation he destroys the formula. The remaining box of powder is stolen by a burglar.

HE DIED AND HE DIDN'T (Vogue), Oct. 29.—Quite an entertaining two-part comedy (barring a few vulgar touches) in which the meeting of two sworn enemies after years of separation results in one of them being carried away for dead, while the other barely misses being lynched. The latter is saved from death by a recitation of his grievance against the other.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS (Pathe), Oct. 30.—The title of this chapter is "Betty Entertains an Out-of-Town Guest." The guest is taken around the shops and closely follows the showing off of many bits of feminine finery.

Luke, Chauffeur (Pathe), Oct. 30.—This single reel Rolin comedy contains much speedy action of the ultra-slapstick type.

Pathe Exchange, Inc. Specials

THE SHIELDING SHADOW, NO. 5 (Astra), Oct. 29.—This is a thrilling episode of the serial in which the mystery increases. Some excellent scenes take place in the hidden apartment of Bianca where the Shielding Shadow again protects Leontine. A full review will be found elsewhere.

THE SULTANA (Gold Rooster Play), Oct. 30.—A five-part subject in Pathe-color. The subject is one containing many settings of unusual picturesqueness. On the dramatic side the story increases in interest, the last half containing the situations of strength. The picture is reviewed in another column.

Signal Film Corporation

A LASS OF THE LUMBERLANDS, NO. 1 (Signal), Oct. 23.—"The Lumber Pirate" is the title of the first chapter of this promising serial featuring Helen Holmes. It concerns itself chiefly with outlining the character of "Dollar" Holmes, and showing under what unhappy circumstances his unwelcome little daughter came into the world. The scene of the story is laid in the forests of the Northwest. The story is a pleasing one thus far with a promise of strength and interesting developments. This serial is divided into fifteen two-part episodes, one of which will be released each week.

A LASS OF THE LUMBERLANDS, NO. 2 (Signal), Oct. 30.—"The Wreck in the Fog" is the title of the second chapter of this serial, which introduces the grown-up edition of "Dollar" Holmes' daughter. Herein she rescues her own half brother whom she knows nothing of from drowning, and is rewarded by her father also unknown to her, by being installed as assistant agent at one of the way stations on the railroad in which he is a stock owner. One of the thrills of this chapter shows an automobile falling from a bridge into the water a distance below.

Triangle Film Corporation.

A SOCIAL CUB (Keystone), July 16.—An attempt to depart from the Keystone method which does not register a success, lacking nearly all the elements which make farce bearable.

SKIRTS (Fine Arts), July 30.—A two-reel comedy with Fay Tincher and Tull Marshall in the cast, working hard to be amusing.

SHE LOVED A SAILOR (Keystone), Sept. 10.—One of the most amusing Keystone comedies shown in a long time, replete with old time ingenuity and melodramatic thrill.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE (Ince), Oct. 29.—A spirited story of adventure and struggle between two military secret-service agents in the European War, with Louise Glaum in a fascinating role.

A SISTER OF SIX (Fine Arts), Oct. 29.—A drama of early California life with Bessie Love in the title role. A stirring story of action.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

LUCILLE THE WAITRESS (special Laemmle), Oct. 25.—A [illegible] number featuring Jennie Nelson and Paul Panzer. The waitress substitutes herself for the artist's broken statue. The deception is discovered and a wild chase follows. This will amuse persons who have never seen this before, but the substitution of a live person for a statue is a very familiar comedy situation.

LOVE AND A LIAR (Nestor), Oct. 30.—A farcical number, by Tom Gibson, featuring Eddie Lyons, Priscilla Dean and Lee Moran. It is the familiar situation of the nephew and niece fooling their uncle and aunt in matrimonial affairs. The old folks come and take a liking to each other and all ends happily. While this is familiar in many situations, it is done in a fresh, breezy style which will please many observers.

FELIX ON THE JOB (Special Victor), Oct. 31.—A fair slapstick number in which the story amounts to little and the laughs depend upon the antics of George Felix, who has all sorts of adventures in and around a dilapidated house. Finally the framework gives way and Felix is deposited in a nearby pond.

HER VANISHED YOUTH (Rex), Nov. 5. This story, by Mae Havey, tells of a married woman, who, having passed her youthful years, unjustly charges her husband with unfaithfulness. Later she changes her mind and a reconciliation follows. The husband's affair with La Paloma, a fast woman, is pictured rather broadly. The story has no particular dramatic merit, though quite well constructed.

A SHADOWED SHADOW (Joker), Nov. 4. This is a spook comedy, by Jack Byrne. The Joker company appears in its usual burlesque style and the appearance of two ghosts brings much laughter in certain scenes. This will amuse children without unduly alarming them and adults will also enjoy it.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. Specials

THE ISLE OF LIFE (Red Feather), Oct. 30. An excellent five-reel subject, based on a novel by Stephen F. Whitman and directed by Burton George. The cast is very pleasing and includes Frank Whitson, Roberta Wilson and Hayward Mack. The story is semi-adventurous in type. Sebastian, a resident of Rome, desires a girl who is engaged to another. Holding the theory that no human virtue is incorruptible, he boards the vessel on which she is sailing and casts her overboard in midocean. He follows and they are rowed by fishermen to an island. Here follows his own regeneration, wrought out in a convincing, effective way, and the girl's final acceptance of his love. The story is in every way above the average and some fine pictorial effects are also achieved.

THE MASKED WOMAN (Gold Seal), Oct. 31.—A three-reel number, by Tom Gibson, featuring Gretchen Lederer, Lloyd Whitlock, Wm. Quinn, Jessie Arnold and George C. Pearce. This is a crook story and has a better plot than most of the type, though the close is not very strong. A vampire woman, well portrayed by Gretchen Lederer, has in her toils a wealthy young man. Her home is headquarters of a gang. A doctor, in love with the young man's sister, is brought into the story. The construction and presentation are good and the offering, as a whole, has considerable strength.

THE TERRORS OF A TURKISH BATH (L-KO), Nov. 1.—A two-reel knockabout comedy, featuring Dan Russell as flunkey in a bath house. He manages to extract many laughs from this part. The middle part of the offering slows up a little, but the opening and close are both very funny. Dan smuggles his wife into the bath house and gets her employed as manicurist. The proprietor takes a fancy to her and trouble begins. The action contains nothing offensive, and closes with a general mixup and a chase.

HER WEDDING DAY (Laemmle), Nov. 2.—A two-reel subject, by E. M. Ingleton, featuring Francelia Billington, Douglas Gerrard and Ruth Clifford. The opening scenes pique the interest, being less obvious than frequently happens. One girl marries a man who has just wrecked the life of another. The latter is confined in a sanitarium, but escapes, tells her story to the bride, and then kills the man who wronged her. This is not a powerful subject, but it well handled and contains several dramatic moments.

STUMBLING (Imp), Nov. 3.—A two-reel story of the underworld, by Max Ginaski, featuring Jack Livingston, Malcolm Blevins, Agnes Vernon, Ray Hanford and others. The young man, about to be married, is lured into the underworld on his first expedition by his rival. Here he meets a crook and his girl pal, who gain a hold upon him. The scenes toward the close are dramatic, where Jim's father is shot and the hero blamed. The type of story is melodramatic and not particularly new; at the same time this is well handled and has good action.

FOR LOVE AND GOLD (Bison), Nov. 4.—A two-reel subject, featuring Edith Johnson, L. C. Shumway and Edward Hearn. The story concerns a young mining engineer who becomes engaged to the daughter of a mining king. He takes charge of an important mine for the father and the rival plots to bring about his death. The opening scenes in the city have a good social atmosphere and are attractive. The Western scenes are full of dramatic action. The number, on the whole, is one that carries the interest very well. It is stronger than the average.

World-Pictures.

THE MAN WHO STOOD STILL (Paragon), Oct. 30.—This picture is a five-reel screen version of the stage play in which Louis Mann starred for several seasons. The part played by Mr. Fields is that of a lovable old German, whose daughter is lead astray. The story is a simple one, but contains true feeling. The comedy touches are many and of excellent quality. A longer review will be found in this issue.

Miscellaneous.

COMMON SENSE BRACKETT (Monarch), Oct. 17.—A rural drama in six reels, picturized from the stage play of the same title. The story is laid in a New Hampshire village, and is mostly used as a means of delineating the character of Brackett, who, by his common sense phisosophy, is instrumental in smoothing out the bumps in the lives of various residents. Details of production are not what they could be. A full review is printed in another column of this issue.

TOM MIX DIRECTS "TWISTED TRAILS."

Tom Mix, who has been out of the directorial harness while playing a leading role in the Selig Western feature, "The Light of Western Stars," has again assumed command, beginning work on the three reel Western drama "Twisted Trails," which is being produced at the Los Angeles studios. Bessie Eyton and Tom Mix will once more be seen as co-stars, this winning team being supported by a company that includes Eugenie Besserer, Al W. Filson, Vivian Reed, Will Machin, and others.

Changes in Vogue Comedy

Al Ray and Robin E. Williamson Are New Members—New Casting Arrangements.

TWO additions of unusual interest to the comedy photoplay world have been made to the directing and scenario staff of the Vogue Comedy Company at Los Angeles. Al Ray, the well-known magazine writer, actor and director, has become scenario editor for this company, whose output is released through the Mutual. Robin E. Williamson, formerly director with the Vim Company at Jacksonville, Fla., has just agreed to give his services exclusively to the making of Vogue's "slapstick with a reason."

During the last two weeks there have been several changes in the casting at the Vogue studios. Ben Turpin, who has been playing for the past few months in comedies with Rube Miller, will appear with "Bungling Bill," as Paddy McQuire is known, in a series of world-beaters. Robin Williamson will direct this company.

Rube Miller will head his company alone. He will direct as formerly, with the assistance of Henry Kernan.

In the studio supporting cast, members of which are chosen to play with either Paddy McQuire and Ben Turpin or with Rube Miller, as occasion demands, are Lillian Hamilton, the charming blonde; Gypsy Abbott, the black-haired beauty; Linna Templeton, Arthur Moon, Owen Evans, the company's dare devil, and the two fat men whom everbody loves, Larry Bowes and E. J. Laurie.

Aside from the players a trained dog belonging to Paddy McQuire is gaining many honors for his work as an intelligent actor.

Paddy, with a company consisting of Gypsy Abbott and Arthur Moon, is now at work on Al Ray's first scenario, which finds its setting in a restaurant. Paddy himself is cast as the restaurant keeper.

The Vogue studios are situated in the center of the beautiful grounds that formerly surrounded the mansion of ex-Senator Cole of California. J. R. Cole is the general manager of the company.

Essanay Subjects Popular

"Return of Eve" Made Hit—More Just as Good on K-E-S-E Service.

ESSANAY reports that the reception of its feature, "The Return of Eve," second Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay release, by exhibitors and public has been most gratifying, and that the film is now experiencing strong first runs in practically every large city of the country. The play, unique in plot and setting, has proven a powerful attraction, due, it is believed, to the large amount of advertising and publicity which preceded its release.

This certain hit, followed by another sure winner, "The Prince of Graustark," will get the new distributing agency away to an excellent start. Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service reports to Essanay that its branch offices are deluged with inquiries concerning "The Prince of Graustark," exhibitors believing this an attraction of superior grade if for no other reason than because it is a sequel to "Graustark," one of the most popular photoplays ever produced.

This play will be obtainable November 6. It featured Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton with Ernest Maupain and Sydney Ainsworth. Reviewers pronounce it greater than its original, and President George K. Spoor believes it a high comedy of decidedly unusual merit and attractiveness. It possesses box-office possibilities from more than one angle. The book is a sequel to a great novel and a highly successful photoplay. It has sold upward of ten million copies. The author is a popular one. The stars are extremely well known.

It is such stories as "The Prince of Graustark" that exhibitors and public may expect from Essanay henceforth, according to Mr. Spoor. Only stage plays of superior grade and successful novels will be adapted by that company.

"The Chaperon," from the stage hit by Marion Fairfax, and "The Breaker," from Arthur Stringer's story in the Saturday Evening Post, are examples of this policy. These will follow "The Prince of Graustark" on the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service.

BATTLEFIELD OF GETTYSBURG IN "SEE AMERICA FIRST."

The Battle of Gettysburg was one of the ten decisive battles of the world fought before the great conflict now raging in Europe. Over half a century has elapsed since the battle, and in that time so many monuments have been raised by federal and state authorities that it ranks as the best marked battlefield in the world. Hence, it is of great interest to learn that the field will be pictured in "See America First" No. 60, issued November 1.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

From T. N.

TOM NORTH sends in a big budget of samples that have come to the Seattle V-L-S-E office. The first time he hits Broadways, we are going to fill him so full of firemen he can fight a conflagration single handed.

The top sample is from the Ray, Olympia, a neat four page printed, with a nice clean self respecting make up. One of those places that you know has been done by a printer, only they put the program anywhere they feel like it. Sunday is on column one of page two with Monday and Tuesday over in the corner. Wednesday and Thursday is in the center of page three, hiding behind some advertising, and Friday and Saturday is on the back page. The idea is to get the program on the same page with the write up, but it looks disorderly if not drunken. It would be better to run a complete program all in one place; preferably the front page, though in this issue the front page splurges the fact that they have taken the Big Four service for their town. E. H. Zable is the manager and he runs a "Kick Box," a convenient receptacle in which the patron may suggest changes in house or subjects. This is a good scheme. People might hesitate to mail a letter or to speak to the manager personally who would drop a hint into the box.

The Crystal, Blaine, Wash., uses a fake telegraph blank, but does not hold to the telegraphic form, which is the only excuse for the use of a blank. A glance shows this to be a fake, but the copy is well worded to advertise "The Girl from 'Frisco."

Ralph Ruffner, who used to write his letters, is represented by a lack of uniformity that detracts from the effectiveness of this. A more neat quarter page display advertisement. It would take too much space if reproduced, but the essential is the reproduction of an envelope addressed to "The Suspect, Spokane, Wash., U. S. A.," and in the corner the name of the Liberty Theatre. It is postmarked Petrograd and bears a rough suggestion of the Russian Imperial Coat of Arms. This is set diagonally across the space. Above and below are type sections that do not detract from the effect of the envelope. It is even more effective than a full page would be. A full page might be passed over. This cannot be overlooked while the reader glances at the type matter. For a quarter of the cost you can get a better display than a full page, if you do not try to tell too much. It is not the space you take that counts—it's the use you make of it, and Ruffner knows how even if he is saving of his postage stamps.

Jensen and Von Herberg, of the Coliseum, Seattle, have a cut out that is odd and therefore curiosity rousing. It is a greenish four-page folder on heavy paper stock. The front page shows the numerals 10 with the naught larger than the one. The outline of this cipher is cut out, giving the unfolded page a sort of condensed dumb bell effect. Inside the oval is "Parts. Read about it inside." Inside it tells of "Whispering Smith" and at the bottom of each page is a six-point ("read on"). Another sample is a folder 3 by 9½ inches, rather unwieldy as to length, giving announcement of "The Spell of the Yukon," with the poem from which the story is taken. The back page talks for the house, and talks convincingly.

The Orpheum, Moscow, Idaho, uses a straight four-page program, brown on white, mostly display, with undated days. There is a certain orderly layout would make for better results, perhaps the program all in display on the first three pages and the other announcements on the back. Now they are on page three, which makes a break in the appearance of the sheet.

Another Crystal stunt is the wall paper handbill, but to advertise a new serial they give out free tickets to the first installment; not at the house, but through various merchants, possibly dividing the expense with the latter in return for the advertising received, for in the list of stores where tickets may be had there is a mention of the merchant and his wares, as "the home of finest groceries" for Holtzheimer and "painless fillings" for the Blaine Cafe. Seats are on sale at the regular prices at the box office.

The Tivoli, "somewhere" in that territory, offers three admissions for ten cents at matinees.

The Helig, Portland, offers something new in permitting patrons to dance to the music accompanying the comedy films. The stage is unusually large and you can dance or look at the pictures, as you elect; no uncommon thing at Coney Island, but new to real theatres. Several special nights, charitable and otherwise, have marked these dances.

For Shoes.

Geoffrey Jefferson, of the Royal, Calumet, Mich., writes that when he had "Shoes" he got all the old shoes he could find to decorate the lobby with and one patron wants to know if he had been newly married. The scheme might be enlarged by offering a free admission to the matinees the previous week for a pair of old shoes. The kiddies will tell their parents and spread the word, and help advertise in advance, while many will come just to see how many shoes were brought in. Mr. Jefferson adds "I've cut out changing every day and am glad I did. I've been getting better subjects this way." And he might have added that when he has a good subject, the first day he sends out a crowd of personal press agents to recommend the show to others. Exhibitors were a long time finding this out. Mr. Jefferson has a new trade mark cut, a white letter on a black and white background. It looks unfinished, for there is no definite form to the letters. He will note that with a pencil we have roughly sketched in the outline of the final letters, giving a more definite form. As the original stands, the white of the shading weakens the letter. He should have the artist draw in the letter on the original design, making a decided black line. The cut will but faintly give the idea, but will at least suggest the change.

Most Certainly Not.

W. E. L. Reger, of the Theatorium, Mt. Carmel, Pa., expresses the hope that he does not "annoy" us by his frequent butting in. The way to annoy us is not to send in your good ideas. His letter covers an anniversary program and newspaper advertisement. It is the ninth anniversary, at that, a ripe old age for a picture theater. This birthday they are also celebrating the eating of the canary and the swiping of the cage. In other words, the opposition sold out and quit the town so that they now own all three houses. The newspaper advertisement is four twelves and is very simply planned. The cut shows a little less than half, displaying two of the six boxes and parts of two more. In a program the display should have been uniform, but in a newspaper advertisement, a change in the composition gives the effect of six advertisements held together and is better where so large a space is used. The program is a Hennegan cover with the program on the inside columns of the middle pages and chat outside that with the underline on the back page. There is a brief but friendly greeting and announcement of an improved feature service which reads well in connection with the fact that they now have a monopoly. That is just the time to do one's best and then the monopoly continues. We felicitate the birthday keepers and hope to be around to write up the nuptials with anniversary presently.

Doing Well.

For a new chum John Koetting, of the Lyric, St. Genevieve, Mo., is doing pretty well. He has only lately started his program, but it is a nice little sheet, though a bit too open in its make up, specially on the back page. In one recent issue he gives Dave Udell a run on the fake letters that Dave is most happy in, and in another issue he has this, which might be useful to you if your film service is new stuff:

"KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES."

The Jones family bought a brand new 1917 model Welie automobile, and now everybody looks up to them. The Smiths are tired of seeing them at the head of the procession, so they've decided to sell their old 1912 model Gord and get a new and better car. But nobody wants the old one—the tires are worn almost to shreds, the top is torn, one of the headlights is all bunged up, the gears are stripped very nearly toothless, and what is worst of all, it has an old type of engine—one of those pioneers that run on three cylinders four-fifths of the time. You can't blame anybody for not wanting that old "ice-wagon."

The same way with pictures. Nobody wants to buy "ice-wagon" entertainment, because, besides being a poor investment, it puts them "behind the procession." True enough, old pictures have no shredded tires, but "rain-scratches" are just as bad; their lamps are not bunged up, but the film is dingy with age; their gears are not toothless, but wear and tear have torn out many a scene that is essential; they have not a "three-cylinder" engine, but what is woefully worse, they have an old 1912 model story that is nothing more than a succession of scenes without artistry, and without any engaging sequence. You can't blame any one for not wanting to pay for "three-cylinder" entertainment.

The motion picture industry is the fastest-growing industry in America, and every day achieves new success built upon the experience of yesterday. The pictures of a twelve-month ago are virtually an experiment in the light of the up-to-date photoplays, and beyond that age they are only the A-B-C's of this art of arts. Since those times, each day has brought a higher degree of perfection, has taught new points of artistry, new ways of appealing to popular taste; and the result is found in the latest photoplays.

These latest pictures are to be seen only at the Lyric, as those who are familiar with release dates will attest. We earnestly wish that in every family there were some picture magazine, so that you might keep in touch with the newer and the better things in the motion picture world. We should then have no difficulty in proving our contention.

Steve Improves.

Steve uses the Hunting License, recently reproduced from the George Kleine Denver Exchange, but Steve adds a kink so brand new that we love him for it. The licenses are marked in pairs; in this case numbered in duplicate. If you can find the holder of the mate to your card, you can come in free—both of you. Steve has the whole town of Eldorado (for, of course, "Steve" is Steve Farrar, of the Casino, Eldorado, Ill.) engaged in comparing cards, and now and then a chap breezes in with some other fellow's wife or some other chap's best girl and the entire town is enjoying the joke. It's mighty good stuff for small towns where everyone knows everyone else, and the talk the matching up makes is worth many times the cost of the free admission. Steve never does sleep very soundly, but this idea is an inspiration. He sagely suggests that the better plan is to change the wording to place the name of your house where the copy (in the issue of Sept. 23d) uses the words "United States." That may make trouble somewhere. And, of course, the text must be added to explain the new kink.

Get This Line.

Many states now require the use of individual drinking cups. If you have to invest in the paper article, make capital of it, as shown by the Famous Players Exchange, Philadelphia. They invented the line: "We use sanitary, not cemetery, cups." A bit gruesome, but forceful and to the point. Some other suggestions from the same batch are:

Teach your cashier to say "Thank You."

The winter is coming. Tell your ushers to help patrons on with their coats.

Be the first one to have the snow shoveled off the walk in front of the theater. You have no idea how the townspeople will notice these little things.

Devote your spare time to finding out something to do around your own theater, and not worrying about your competitor. Let him do his own worrying.

Get out a house organ and mail it to your prospective patrons as well as regular patrons. If you don't know how to go about getting one up, ask the Publicity Manager, who will be only too glad to assist you.

Don't stand out in front of your theater on the sidewalk with a cigar stuck in your mouth, and your hat on the back of your head. You can be a better manager.

Some morning have your electrician switch on the house lights, then sit in different parts of the house to see if any of them interfere with the vision to the screen. A light in someone's eyes oftentimes sends them away with a bad impression.

That last item is a borrow from Picture Theater Advertising, and it is a mighty good hint. Every seat in your house should give a good view of the screen. If it does not, you are sending dissatisfied patrons out of your house at every performance and some of them will stay away.

Some Service.

Service to Exhibitors is becoming more and more the slogan, but the Paramount exchange in Seattle has something brand new in its proposition to address lists for its patrons. The theater sends in its list of names with the cost of making the stencils (which is only two cents each). Then all envelopes sent in are addressed on the machine without charge, or the exchange will arrange to have envelopes printed in lots and delivered in addressed sets, charging only cost price for the envelopes and nothing for the service. This exchange is now getting out a house weekly that is well done, though it still lacks the touch of intimacy that it needs. Make part of it a sort of a letter amount "the boys" to the same and they will read the whole sheet. It's a good start, though, and that addressing stunt sets a new pace, and should help to increase the number of theater house organs.

Wrongly Folded.

William A. Lochren, of Minneapolis, is handling the Inferno picture and sends out a little folder. The front page carries his business card and begins with "Speaking of Hell" and goes on to say that Dante divided his Inferno into 25 parts, but that the writer, "Mephistopheles," has brought hell up to date. This is in imitation typewriting. The third page carries a striking device in red and black. It would have been better to have folded the sheet in reverse so that this design formed the front page and the letter the third. But either way gives two runs through the press for each color. A more competent arrangement still would have been to have printed both these two-color impressions on one side of the paper, using the design for the title and the letter for the back. Then the matter appearing upon the enclosure slip could have been run on the inside pages instead of on an insert, saving paper, holding the advertisement together and saving the cost of two impressions. The advertisement is a good one, but economy is lacking.

Two Colors.

We are not particularly strong for the average two color run, for as a rule the cost of the second color is partly wasted because the effect does not repay the cost, but we think that Ed. G. Gidley, of the Strand and Elite theaters, Athens, Ga., supplies his own excuse in a recent program, for his green and black on white paper is good enough to return a profit on the extra printing. It does not show in the reproduction, but on the front and back pages the heading and cuts are in green with the rest in black. Inside the type is all black with the trade mark in green. They hurt the display to some extent, but it makes a striking effect. Where the same brands are used the same day of each week, these programs can be printed up on one side in advance at a saving, unless they are printed two at a time, making only one impression for each color. The pages are 2½ by 4¼ inches. All four are shown.

Bettered.

The Regent, Philadelphia, seems to have changed printers and comes out with the well-done, two-color programs, purple and green on a sort of non-committal green stock. It is a poor combination unless done just about right, but they hit it the first try. And they are trying program chat, too, which is a good sign. This is from a late issue.

A CURE FOR THE BLUES.

Do you enjoy the blues? No. Well, if a case should come on next week, make your way to THE REGENT THEATER at once. Most people regard the blues as something like a cold in the head—or evil that must attack once in so often, and then, when it occurs, must be patiently endured rather than sensibly cured. I think that absurd.

Unless you really like to be in that state of mind in which you are sure everything is wrong again, that nobody loves you, and that life is not worth while living, I think there are plenty of things you can do to help yourself when you feel the spasm coming on.

So if they start to hit you, come at once to THE REGENT THEATER and see a wonderful program of perfect photo plays, hear a selected orchestra of talented musicians—and the organ with the human voice.

You'll be so pleased that you will forget the blues. Try it, you'll win out.

Maybe, after a time, they'll get so they send their programs over themselves.

Resumes.

The Crescent theater, the Bronx, has resumed publication of its house program for the winter. It is in a new form, just envelope size, without text, and is very nicely put together. If it would reproduce you should see it, but blue on cream will not photograph, though it looks well. With the initial winter issue is sent a discount ticket good for a ten cent seat when accompanied by a nickel, and on the reverse is a blank form for addresses. The tickets are good only for the dull day matinees and are unlimited otherwise, [illegible] it is better to make a thirty or sixty day limitation [illegible] tuff, and [illegible], if thought desirable.

More About the M. M.

Charles L. Decker writes that his second Merchants' Matinee was a far greater success than the one for 1915. As explained, they [illegible] gives one each year at the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colo., and they [illegible] to 1,618 people between ten in the morning and [illegible] and eight reel program with a seating capacity of 721 [illegible] merchants' matinee was a scheme for getting the country people to town on Saturday on some other day of the week instead of Saturday, if preferred, but the Decker scheme does not limit the admissions to the merchants' rural patrons. The merchants combine [illegible] at the house, send advertising broadcast and make a quasi holiday of it, with special bargains and free tickets to all who purchase goods to a certain value.

Saves Envelopes.

The Diamond, Oakland, Cal., springs a new one. They use a throwaway program, 5 by 11 inches, and fold it to about envelope size, sealing with a bit of gummed tape, addressing the back and mailing out under the one cent rate. It is simple and serves every purpose. The tape is the same as that used for sealing packages to save string, but passepartout tape will serve, and a ten cent roll will seal a thousand circulars or more. The tiny red legal seals would do as well. The main point is that the cost of envelopes is avoided. The drawback is that the list cannot be addressed in advance.

Use Flat Paint.

H. A. Chenoweth, of the Opera House, Westfield, Mass., in reply to recent comment on his "paint" program, says that a flat color will dry quickly enough to make painting the posters practicable. If you use his idea get the "flat" paint, which dries by the evaporation of the dryer instead of the slower oxidization of the oil. He sends in a card 2¾ by 12½, so out of proportion that it comes into size again. It is folded twice to get it into the envelope and we would suggest that by folding these as the Diamond, in Oakland, does, he can use them for mailing cards without envelopes. The prime use of the extra length is to use the Triangle one column ready-set advertising blocks. He also gets good results with a throwaway 8 by 12, using two of these cuts. More still, he promised a photograph soon of the new house the Goldstein Brothers are building in Westfield.

Neatly Done.

H. E. Jameyson, of the Pathe Exchange, Kansas City, sends in a card put out by F. A. Wesley, at Holyrood, Kan. It is a fabric finished card, 2½ by 4 inches, printed in six point for body with an eight point bold "'tonight" line. It reads:

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

KIND FRIEND:—

I have been fortunate in booking an extra fine photo play entitled "LITTLE MARY SUNSHINE." It is a Masterpiece from every standpoint. Space here is too small to tell you all about it. I want you to see it, not because I want your admission price so much, but because I believe it is one of the finest pictures I have shown in my eight years of show business and I want you to enjoy it. This fine picture will be shown

TO-NIGHT AT THE ELECTRIC GARDEN

Yours, F. A. WESLEY.

Sometimes, for a change, this quiet, assured style will beat the biggest herald ever printed in getting them in. Try it some time when you are specially certain of a subject, but we would suggest that "Kind friend" is a bit too servile. "Dear Patron" would be better.

In Brief.

Miss Dolly Spurr, of the Royal-Grand, Marion, Ind., is a true woman. She writes that she knows the form letter recently commented upon was too long and then she adds:

> P. S. This is the P. S. that wasn't in the circular letter, and it is just to tell you that that long letter DID get a lot of business even though I'm sure people did not read half of it.

You cannot get the last word on them, try as you will. Perhaps it was not the long letter that brought the business, but the show about which she was so enthusiastic. Anyhow, she did another (on a Hennegan cover) that falls within the page. It was exposition week, and she tells what a good show she is going to have. And taking the fight into the enemy's camp, she took space in the exposition for a projection machine, a miniature stage, and some running films. Triangle, Paramount, and Kleine loaned the films, and Paramount sent a lecturer. Miss Spurr writes some capital editorials, but she does them like she does her letters. Being her own editor, she does not have to condense. It is good stuff, but it is too good to cut and too long to run. A lot of men in the exhibition end have the same trouble. They talk too long. If Miss Spurr would get her two pages into a page—and boil it down—she would have more punch. It is the short, snappy article that goes home. You need always to remember, in writing to the public, that your hobby may not be their own and give an exhibition canter rather than a long-distance ride. Miss Spurr is doing good work in educating her public, but they have not her personal and intimate interest in film exchange methods, for example.

More About the Stillman.

C. L. Madden sends in the opening program and souvenir of the Stillman theater, Cleveland. The souvenir is a heavy white card folder with the house cipher as the only decorative material. It carries five frames of film, but, doing it just right, it is not an old reel cut up, but a clipping from one of the scenes shown the opening performance, something that the recipient can compare with what he has just seen on the screen. The opening attraction was Vitagraph's, "The Chattel," with E. H. Sothern, and new cuts were obtained from the company. It was attached to the card with bits of orange colored silk. The opening was a real social success, and was treated as a social function by the papers. The house program is neatly done in black and green, but the first issue was rather horribly [illegible] the house, and there is a running story of eight and a half pages that is kept readable to the end. Some of the special schemes were taken from Picture Theatre Advertising, including a time clock considerably elaborated over our own suggestion. Here there are three signs giving the running feature and the time of showing of the next. These are operated electrically from the projection room by the chief operator, the clock faces being of the master clock type. One of these clocks is in the reception room which adjoins the entrance lobby, and a person may drop into this room and wait until time for the next subject to start. A check room, ladies room, with maid, writing desks, and other conveniences are provided, and the room is opened at nine in the morning for the convenience of shoppers, though the performance does not start until eleven. Short film is used until one o'clock when the feature starts and runs again at half past four, seven and nine. There is a spedometer for the projection machine that repeats at the leader's desk, which is a novelty, and the whole house is so full of tomorrow's ideas that some day we are going out there just to look it over. The house has its own camera man for local stuff, and at the first performance the men who made the Stillman were introduced via film.

From the Zone.

This reproduction shows the advertisement of "The Birth of a Nation" down on the Canal Zone. It was taken down by the Y. M. C. A., and if you strain your eyes a little you will see that it costs only six bits if you belong to the Y. M. C. A., or $1.25 if you do not, but a majority of those in the "gold list" do belong to the Association, and it will work out on an average of a dollar a head. A man was taken down to run things, and it was made quite an event. Most of the films are a bit old by the time they get to the Zone, and a man who was up the summer of last year writes that he is still getting stuff now that he saw then, but they like the pictures, and both the Y. M. C. A. and independent houses use many reels. No special advertising has to be done for the big pictures. The towns are hungry for amusement out of the ordinary, and money is not scarce, for a paternal government is liberal to its employees, and they have the cash to spend for amusement and not overmuch chance to spend it. It is probably the smallest advertising showing "'The Birth of a Nation" will receive for a year or so yet, and even at that, in proportion to the population this rather unenthusiastic advertisement will draw more than much paper will in the States.

Another Birthday.

The Clansman, the Kansas City organ of the Vitagraph Exchange, celebrates its first anniversary by dropping the old V-L-S-E for the new title. Also it comes out in twenty-eight page form; more than three times the size of the initial issue. Between E. R. Pearson and L. J. Scott they have done a great deal to educate their clients in the use of advertising as an aid in paying exchange rentals, and they are still at it. One stunt in the recent issue is not to be recommended. An Exhibitor booked "What Will Happen to Father," and then got married. If it has that effect generally the film should be avoided. Between a convention and the change in the lineup of the exchange there is not the usual space for stunt write-ups.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Comedy Synopses.

WHEN you write the synopsis for your comedy, try to suggest in the synopsis the business you have written into the action. Of course the synopsis should tell the story and not detail the business, but in comedy it is a good plan to write in some hint of the better bits of business instead of merely reciting the plot. You do not say that John elopes by mistake with his mother-in-law-to-be. You tell how John rushes her into the auto in spite of her protests, how he presses her to his loving heart and gets a box on the ear that throws him out of the car. The editor wants comedy business as well as comedy idea, and it will help to make a sale if you prove to him in the synopsis that both business and idea are to be found in your script.

Kiddies in Comedy.

"Can you suggest how children might be used to advantage in comedies where they are not required to carry the heavy work?" Naturally this inquiry comes from a comparatively new writer, for old hands know that children are best left out of comedies. The rule-proving exception, of course, is the comedy planned for all child players on the lines of work done by Lubin, Mutual and Universal, but evidently this correspondent means to casually introduce kiddies into comedies to get the benefit of their presence.

The trouble is that most comedies are too rough to permit the use of children. In knockabout they have no place whatever, no matter how much they may appear to enjoy their work. Audiences do not like to see children thrown about and such comedies react. Coming higher in the scale, what is properly farce comedy does not permit the extended use of children. They have been and probably always will be employed now and then in farces of the Peck's Bad Boy type, but here they are apt to be bothersome, for a "fresh kid" is never pleasant, and by the very nature of their work they must assume a smartness if they do not possess it and generaly they have too much self-esteem.

Only in the true light comedy may children be used, and then casually in those scenes in which there is the least comedy. Two little children stumbling upon Henry proposing to their Aunt Jane might bring a laugh and their diffidence would give charm to the scene, but they are out of place in any scene of marked comedy activity. The child and comedy business seldom go together well. Few comedy directors care to work children, since this makes for waste of time in trying to teach the youngsters to do the required work, but where they must be used or where it is desired to employ them, they must, as a general rule, appear only in scenes remote from rough work or at least be held free from any effects of knockabout.

Things that read humorously may not be humorous when done into picture. The idea of a father and mother taking a child for an outing at which all but the child enjoy themselves may be humorous as a story, but graphically depict the child being yanked about in the fiction that it is having a good time, and the stronger appeal made by the graphic showing will bring sympathy for the kiddie instead of laughs. So fixed is this rule that a couple of years ago the Lubin company abandoned an attempt to utilize the services of a dwarf in rough comedy. The ideas might be amusing, but the sympathy went to the little fellow and overbalanced the laughs.

Ripening Ideas.

The best idea file lists only fragments of plots, these to be assembled later on into more complete form. These semi-finished plots should take the form of a rough synopsis, and unless the impression is so vivid that the complete play is fully realized in the mind, it is better to let the ideas lie in this form for several weeks, taking them up as time permits, revising or reworking until it seems that the best possible development has been arrived at. As Louis Reeves Harrison lately said, it takes several months to write a really good play, but he should have added that several plays should be in hand at the same time.

Don't Get Sore.

Just the moment you get soreheaded you stop writing good stuff. You cannot do your best work while you mutter cuss words under your breath, you cannot work with enthusiasm at a task you know to be useless, and if you are soreheaded you know the game is on the blink. Van Buren Powell's Optimist's Club seems to have surrendered its charter, but you can be an optimist all by yourself and some day it will get you somewhere if you live long enough, but if you write stories or try to write them knowing that they will be stolen, or that they will not be bought or that they will be butchered, you'll write junk that will neither be stolen nor purchased. If you know they steal stuff and still you want to write, at least have enough pride to send in stuff so good that it will be worth stealing. There will be some small comfort in that if you are built right mentally.

Same Thing.

A deadly paralleler sends in a poem by Walt Mason that runs in part: "My trifling boil will gall me more than big carbuncles three or four which may adorn my neighbor's neck, and make his life a gruesome wreck." Then he points out that we first said that your own sore toe interests you more than another man's broken leg. We would like to think that we were good enough for Walt Mason to swipe from, but we do not suppose he ever heard of us, and we assuredly are not going to accuse him of plagiarism. In the same way the story you wrote last year may be written by some one else this year who never heard of you or your story.

Getting Plots.

Ideas are everywhere, but you must know them when you see them. Last night, going home in the street car, an elevator runner just getting over a week's drunk and still communicative, insisted on telling about it. Before he came to his street corner he had supplied the basic ideas for two farces and a drama, and in another moment the conductor's apt comment had raised the farce score to three. Possibly the next ten drunks will be unproductive, but there is always the chance for a plot in the people you speak to and the people who will not speak to you. Keep your eyes open and see what you get.

The Difference.

Here is an extract from a letter from one of the brainiest men in America, the leader in his particular line and a man who is known the world over:

> As I am always most satisfied not by praise but by criticism from which I can learn, I appreciated especially your introductory paragraph.

And the same week brought a scathing letter from a person to whom we ventured to suggest that only original ideas were wanted by the studios. He wrote:

> I did not ask you what I could do. I asked you could I take a copyrighted story for an idea for a play.

He did not want the additional information that ran counter to his conceit. He did not want to be told that he must think his own ideas before he could become an author. He resented even implied criticism.

The man who gets ahead is he who can be taught and who is not only willing to be advised but who eagerly seeks advice.

Two Blurbs.

Al Santell, of the American's comedy department, sends in a couple of really rich blurbs, though the only thing that will do justice to them is photo reproduction. One of them is on a note size sheet with a heavy indent and reads:

> you can have this Play for a $1.50c. I woodniet it go but it as no sub-title so I hope you will by it.

A dollar and a half for a play, even though it lacks leaders is a ruinous rate and we do not blame the authors' league for joining the American Federation of Labor in an effort to keep up prices and be able to call upon its blacksmith brothers for "entertainment committees" for the scabs. Exhibit B is guiltless of the greeting and starts right in to business with a preliminary "Submitted to (!) the usual rates" in the corner. The author remarks:

> Please do the Best you can for me I am out for Big game and noteriety. In the feuture I Will give you Something That Will tickle you from the nose to the toes. and more that will Raise your hair & pull your Boots off of your feet. A hair Spliter. Now old Socks do your best & help a Weary Wandering Brother.
> P. S. This is my first: I have several diferant kindes & Styles. Border. Precepts. of Early days Wild and Wooly & full of flees.

Possibly that last statement refers to hairbreadth escapes, as the spelling leaves the matter in doubt. Mr. Santell also has a letter from "the author of a thousand plays," which is going some.

Perhaps.

If you do not sell your stuff, perhaps it's because it is you and not the editor who is a fool.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps, (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now reads and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 161.

Could two 30 ampere rectifiers be used in multiple to supply 60 amperes at the arc?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 150.

I hardly think it would be proper to have any Roll of Honor on a question of this kind, which does not involve any question of practice or theory, but merely calls for an expression of individual opinion, therefore the Roll of Honor is dispensed with.

All of the answers except one favored the publication of the questions and answers in book form, and I am not prepared to say that it won't be done. A good while ago I called for an expression of opinion on the matter, and while many favored it, very few opposed. If those who oppose publication do not think it worth while to inform us as to their views, why I don't see that their views are deserving of much consideration.

As a matter of fact the questions and answers would make a book very similar to the Hawkins' Electrical Guide, and I have yet to find an electrician who has voiced objection to the publication of that work. If the questions and answers are published in book form the answers will, of course, be carefully revised.

I am publishing the replies of both Brothers Charles S. Stuckey, and W. B. Allen.

Reply to Question No. 150.

By Charles S. Stuckey, Niagara Falls, Ont.

The Question:

How much do you feel you have benefited by this series of questions, and do you think the questions and answers ought to be published in book form?

The Answer:

In order to properly answer Question 150 one must take a great many things into consideration, since a person who has answered the entire list of questions by digging the necessary information up for himself has derived far more benefit than has another person who was already well advanced and well up in the knowledge of the subjects covered in the questions. But even such a one would to a considerable extent benefit, even though he already knew the answer to the question, since the mere act of exercising his brain to set the answer forth in writing, even though he might copy it from a book, would help to "brighten him up" on that particular subject. It is difficult for me to say to just what extent I have benefited from the questions, as I did not keep at them consistently at first—that is, as to the answering part of it. I did, nevertheless, take great interest in all the answers, and feel that, taking everything together, I might class myself as being benefited about 90 per cent. I think had I answered them all I would perhaps have derived the other 10 per cent. of benefit. I believe the publication of the questions and answers would make one of the greatest technical books ever put forth, and I am in favor of its publication. It should be a well bound book, to be sold at a respectable price.

Reply to Question No. 150.

By W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada.

To set forth on paper the precise extent to which I have been benefited by the questions would be quite an undertaking. But, to make a long story short, they have been very beneficial to me. I have followed them since the beginning, but have only answered a few. However, failure to answer does not stop a fellow from studying them does it? I wonder how many men followed the questions who never have, and probably never will, correspond with the department. How many "men" are there who knock the department and its editor, but purchase a copy of the Moving Picture World from their local newsdealer, carry it home in their inside pocket, and there devour the projection department, and, incidentally, study the questions? all of which goes to show that one cannot form any idea as to how many are following the questions, or how much good is being done merely by looking at the Roll of Honor.

As to the second part of the questions, yes, if the questions and answers can be put into book form and make a book that would be beneficial to the operator I certainly would like to see it done.

Important.

With Regard to the Coming Trip.

There seems to be a misunderstanding, in some quarters, with regard to my coming trip through the south, west and north. First let it be clearly understood that there is no business of any kind whatsoever I am NOT coming among you soliciting subscriptions for the Moving Picture World, sales for the Handbook or anything else. Second: So far as the towns in the itinerary be concerned, the Moving Picture World bears absolutely all the expense, except such as may be incurred in making the local arrangements. You don't have to pay me anything, nor would I accept anything if you offered it. Third: The only thing I do is give you an illustrated lecture on practical projection, which same has been universally commended by all operators' unions and exhibitors' leagues who have heard it. Some have even been kind enough to say that the lecture was of huge value, both to the individual operator and manager, and to the local industry at large. Fourth: You can make my visit the occasion for a general "get together" meeting in the form of a banquet, a smoker, or anything else you desire; or you may simply secure the loan of one of the theaters, after the shows close at night, and get the operators and managers together therein. This latter should be a very easy matter to do, since we only need from four to five lights burning, therefore the expense to the theater will be practically nothing, and the only expense will be sending out invitations to those you desire to be present.

I name these things because, as I said in the beginning, some of the smaller locals and leagues have expressed a desire to have me come, but have hesitated on the score of expense. Let me say right now, that it is utter nonsense for a small, weak exhibitors' league, or operators' union to try to put up a big, elaborate entertainment. I don't want it. It is not necessary. On the other hand, where it is practical, I do believe that a greater amount of good is accomplished by giving a nice supper, or buffet luncheon, preferably, however, a supper, with the lecture at the end of it. My experience has been that this works out best, and it need not be expensive, either; also each participant can pay his small share by ticket.

There, that ought to be plain enough so that you can all understand it. The only reservation is that this applies only to towns which are included in the itinerary. Those cities which lie off the route will have to stand the round trip railroad fare and pullman from the nearest point on the main route. For the benefit of all concerned the main route is again set forth, a stop in those cities followed by a question mark not yet being definitely settled upon. If anyone has been overlooked let us hear from them at once:

(?); La Crosse, Wis.; Minneapolis, Minn.; St. Paul, Minn.; Duluth, Minn.; Racine, Wis. (?); Oshkosh, Wis. (?); Sheboygan, Wis (?), and Milwaukee, Wis. (?).

In this connection I wish to add that during the past sixty days I have written several unions in the South concerning the coming trip through that territory, but, up to this date, I have not heard from a number of them. As it is important to the success of the trip that some response should be had from all, I give here a list of those who have not replied with the request that they let me hear from them as soon as possible:

Richmond, Va. Secretary, Chas. L. Weston, Local, 305 N. 22d street.

Columbia, S. C. R. W. Beatty, secretary, Local Union, No. 347, 1000 Main street.

Augusta, Ga. J. H. Sanderin, secretary, Local Union, No. 547, Box 558.

Charleston, S. C. F. E. Condon, secretary, Local Union, No. 333, 217 St. Phillip street.

Savannah, Ga. Secretary local Union, No. 320. Box 30.

Macon, Ga. Charles L. Leonard, president, Local Union, No. 594, Princess theater.

Atlanta, Ga. Secretary Local Union, No. 225, Box 365.

Louisville, Ky., H. P. Nicoulin, secretary, Local Union, No. 163, Box 317.

Birmingham, Ala. L. D. Mitchell, secretary, Local Union, No. 263, Box 247.

Montgomery, Ala. L. L. Liston, secretary, Local Union, No. 92, Box 203.

In most cases unions or exhibitors' leagues on the main route wrote voluntarily and promptly, on the publication of the itinerary, and some unions lying off the route expressed willingness to bear what, in some instances, amounts to pretty heavy expense, if I would make a side trip and visit them. The organizations named are the only ones, up to date, who have failed to reply.

Is in Trouble.

I. Rosenberg, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

> Am a constant reader of the department, and am in deep water just now, therefore come to you for advice with regard to the following: Am using two Simplex projectors on 110 volt D. C., with a meter direct through to the operating room cut-out. In the basement there are 60 ampere fuses, and in operating room 50 ampere ones. We are pulling 35 amperes through each rheostat. On coming to work I put in a trim, struck my arc at 12.30, and after burning for about five minutes the 60-ampere neutral fuse in the basement blew. I replaced it, and it blew again in about ten minutes. The next fuse lasted until six o'clock when it too blew, and I had three more blow-outs at 7, 9, and 10.45, always on the neutral fuse. It blew five times on one machine and one on the other. Three days ago I had all the connections on machines, switches, lamphouse, leads, etc., cleaned; also tested lamphouse, rheostats and main line for ground, but have not found any. On calling up the Edison people I was assured there was no overload.

According to your statement, plus the report of the Edison Company, the fault apparently lies in the fuse itself; that is to say, in the fuse contacts not being tight enough. On the other hand, this is the case either there is a considerable difference in the amperage of the two arcs, or the fuse ought to blow the same with both machines. You say you have tested the lamp, lamphouse and rheostats for grounds, but have found none. You also say you have tested the main line and have found no ground. Now if this is true, then it seems to me you certainly must look in the fuse block itself for the trouble, or, rather, in the contacts, because if the trouble was due to a ground in the rheostat or between the rheostat and the arc, then the 50-ampere fuse would blow and not the 60; also, of course, there might be a ground on the line between the 50-ampere fuses and the 60?amperes fuses, but you say you have tested and found none. Are you sure you made the right kind of test, remembering it is an Edison three-wire system, which means that the neutral is grounded, probably at the transformer. And, by the way, I wonder how many of you can tell me how to test an Edison three-wire system for ground where the neutral is already grounded. Let us hear from the wiseacres on this particular proposition.

From Oklahoma City.

Bert Bell, recording secretary of Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local Union No. 380, Oklahoma City, says:

> I noticed in the department a report from Oklahoma City which if allowed to stand unchallenged would tend to discredit the work of some of the members of our local. I would, therefore, ask space to answer the correspondent, who came from a small town in this state, who says that he visited certain theaters while in Oklahoma City. In the first place, we have a strike in progress, and if the gentleman carries a card in the I. A. I would like to inquire why he went into the theaters named at all? This strike involves the operators, musicians, stage employes and actors, and any report he made with regard to projection, with the exception of the Metropolitan and Dreamland theaters, would be a report of the work done by the strikebreakers imported here to take the place of union operators who walked out. This statement is made in order that an injustice may not be done the operators of Local 380, and I hope to see it in the next issue of the World.

It is a physical impossibility to get an article of this kind in the "next issue." I am, however, very glad to publish your letter. It is due the members of Local 380 that the matter be given equal publicity with the criticism. It is furthest from the intention of this department to do any injustice to anyone, much less to the members of a local which I have always understood were progressive and up to date.

Valuable Tables.*

From John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn. comes an article which has very distinct value. I regard it as a long step in advance in the matter of matching lens systems. The first tables, which were published in the issues of October 16 and 23, 1915, were a big jump in the right direction and the present table is a perfection of those that have gone before. In Figure 1, we see Table 1, page 141 of the Handbook, in a somewhat different form. Table A is followed by Tables B, C and D, the modus operandi of using these tables is as follows:

First: Using Table A, find the distance from condenser to film according to the diameter and back focus of the objective lens. For instance: Supposing the lens to be 2 inches in diameter, and to have a 4-inch back focus. First find the figure 2 in the lower horizontal column, then look up the column of figures immediately above until you find 4, then following out horizontally to the left hand column you find the figure 17, which means that with a 2-inch lens working at 4 inches back focus there should be 17 inches between the apex of the front condenser lens and the aperture. Now consulting Table B, we choose the distance from crater to rear lens according to the amperage. Supposing you are using 60 amperes D. C., and plano-convex condensing lenses. You should then have 4½ inches between the center of the condensers and the crater, assuming the condensers to be close together—say with 1/16 of an inch between the apex of the lenses. If the current is A. C. and the amperage 60, then the distance should be 4 inches. If the lenses be meniscus-bi-convex, then the distance should be 4¾ inches for D.C. or 4¼ inches for A.C. Having determined this we then consult Table C to find where the X and Y values meet. (In these matters we consider the distance from the crater to the center of the condenser as being represented by "X," and the distance from the center of the condenser to the aperture as being represented by "Y") and choose the curve passing nearest that point, which in this instance (plano-convex condensers), would be the horizontal line half way between 3 and 4 and in the vertical column of figures at the left and the vertical line passing up from 17 in the horizontal row of figures. This indicates curve No. 1, and referring to Table D we find that the condition will best be met by one 5½ and one 6½ inch plano-convex condenser.

This is the only point in this I would question. A 5½ inch lens has pretty heavy curvature, and will, I think, set up some added spherical aberration, though whether this will be serious enough to amount to anything in practice I don't know. I WOULD LIKE TO HAVE OPERATORS CAREFULLY TEST OUT THESE TABLES AND REPORT RESULTS. Study the tables carefully and I think you will have no trouble in understanding how to use them.

Conjugate Foci Points of the Condenser.

W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada, writes:

Many thanks for answering my questions in August 26th issue. I think, however, you misunderstood me on one point, viz: question E, the last one. We will say, for example, the arc is 3 1-2 inches from the rear condenser, and where the light comes to a focus is 22 inches from the front condenser. These two points are what I understand to be the conjugate foci points of the condenser combination. Am I right? Well, if your slide, for example, is 2 inches from the front condenser, and your stereo lens is 2 inches ahead of the point where the condenser rays come to a focus, then by moving the slide 2 inches closer to the condenser you will bring the stereo lens 2 inches closer to the slide, or, in other words, nearer to one of the conjugate foci points of the condenser beam. In this you are altering the conjugate foci point of the stereo lens, and not that of the condenser combination. And now with regard to the color. The shorter the E. F. of the condenser combination the greater the angle of the refracted rays, and if the condensers are very short it will actually cut the corners of the slide, which is the reason I suggest keeping the slide as close as possible to the front condenser. Now, Brother Richardson, you say the stereo does cross the rays. Well, maybe so, but I cannot see it. You put the slide in the carrier inverted, and the condensers reverse it, don't they? Then if the lens crossed them again the slide would be upside down on the screen. I would like to say that the idea of operators sending in questions and their version of the answers is good, and I am sure will meet with approval. In closing, I wish both yourself and our department the greatest of success.

All right where are your questions? As to the conjugate foci points, why read over the article "Conjugate Distances," in which John Solar answers you very completely on another page of this issue's Projection Department. As to the crossing of the rays, don't overlook the fact that with the stereopticon lens the front conjugate foci point of the condenser is presumed to be at or about the center of the stereopticon objective, so that you may say that the condenser crosses, or the objective crosses the rays. The stereopticon of the motion picture lens system presents very different problems.

Address Wanted.

On page 464 of the Handbook I published an illustration of a film waxer. I have had several inquiries for this machine, but the address of its manufacturer seems to have been entirely lost. Will the manufacturer of this particular device kindly communicate with the Projection Department, so that I may be in a position to refer to him the inquiries received to date?

Conjugate Distances.

John Solar, Watertown, N. Y., comes in with the following:

I am replying to the call for enlightenment on Mr. W. B. Allen's questions. First I will explain conjugate distances. If an object such as the film or slide is placed at a given distance from the lens, this distance is the first conjugate distance, and, always providing it be greater than the focal length of the lens, an image will be formed on the opposite side of the lens, and the distance from the lens to this image will be the second conjugate distance. The sum of the reciprocal of these distances will always equal the reciprocal of the focal length of the lens, just the same as the sum of the reciprocal of two lenses equals the reciprocal of the focal length, E. F. for instance, if we represent the two conjugate distances by the symbols U and V, then $\frac{1}{U} + \frac{1}{V} = \frac{1}{F}$ and, as we have seen, the formula for the focal length of two lenses or E. F. is, $\frac{1}{f_1} + \frac{1}{f_2} = \frac{1}{F}$. Mr. Richardson's formula, the sum of two focal lengths divided by four, will be true only for two lenses of equal focal lengths. Taking the distance U, as 20 in, the same being the distance from the condenser to the lens, and V, the distance from the lens to the condenser image or dissolving point, referred to by Mr. Richardson, as 5 in., we then have $\frac{20 \times 5}{20 + 5} = 4$. The focal length of the lens. If we take the focal length of one combination of this lens as 10 in. and the other as 6.666 in., we have $\frac{10 \times 6.666}{10 + 6.666} = 4$. The same result we had from the conjugate distances. If we shift the position of the object (first conjugate point), the position of the image (second conjugate point), will always change, so that the sum of the reciprocal will be equal to the reciprocal of the focal length of the lens. Therefore, if we have a given lens and one conjugate point, we can always locate the other conjugate point. $\frac{1}{F} \quad \frac{1}{U} \quad \frac{1}{V} = \frac{1}{F}$ or $\frac{1}{F} \quad \frac{1}{V} \quad \frac{1}{U} = \frac{1}{F}$. For instance if we take the values for F and U, as given above, we have $\frac{1}{4} - \frac{1}{20} = \frac{1}{5}$. Then 5 is the value for V, or $\frac{1}{4} - \frac{1}{5} = \frac{1}{20}$ and 20 is the value for U.

Referring to Fig. 1, which represents a 4 inch E. F. lens, this shows two pencils of light proceeding from U U at the condenser. If we trace these through the lens we see that they focus at V V, at a distance of 5 inches as calculated above. A A represents the aperture position. Again we have two pencils proceeding from A A, but these pencils are made up from a B and C ray, whereas in the first case one was made up from two B rays and the other from two C rays. If we trace these pairs of B C rays through the lens we see that they pass, one through each V, and must focus at some point farther than V, from the lens. This distance may be calculated the same as in the case of the condenser image $\frac{1}{4} - \frac{1}{4.022} = \frac{1}{720}$. In this case V equals 720 in. or 60 ft. if we shift the lens from this position, × 4.022, say to 4.25, we then have $\frac{1}{4} - \frac{1}{4.25} = \frac{1}{666}$, and in this case V equals 666 in. or 55.5 ft.

Fig. 2 represents a 19 in. stero lens. In order to focus a real image the slide must be placed at some point farther than the focal length of the lens from it.

Taking U as 20 inches, the same as in Fig 1, we then have, by the same formula, $\frac{1}{19} - \frac{1}{20} = \frac{1}{384.61}$, so that V equals 384.61 inches, or 32.5 feet, which is the point in question, and corresponds with position V in Fig. 1. The distance of the slide image, assuming the slide to be ½ inch, in front of the condenser, would be $\frac{1}{19} - \frac{1}{19.5} = \frac{1}{714.21}$, or 59.52 feet. The distance from the lens to the slide image. These examples are stated briefly, but I will work out the last one in explanation: 1 ÷ 19 = .526, and 1 ÷ 20 = .5; then .526 — .5 = .026. This remainder is the value for the first side of the equation, and is equal to the second side of the equation, $\frac{1}{V}$.

Then if 1 divided by V equals .026, 1 divided by .026 must equal V. 1 ÷ .026 = 714.21 in., or 57.52 feet.

In comparing the points V in Fig. 1 with Fig. 2 we must remember that conditions are not the same in both cases, and we must not expect similar results. Taking Fig. 2, if we trace one of the pencils of light from U, we see that in passing through the slide the pencil carries only a small part of the whole picture, consequently only a small part of the picture passes through each V. If we trace these same pencils in Fig. 2 we see that they have spread out to such size that they cover the whole object, or aperture, and each pencil carries a complete image of the aperture, consequently a complete image passes through each point V.

Referring to the position of the slide with relation to the condenser, changing the position of the slide will not effect the focusing of an image more than refocusing the lens. Moving the slide up to the condenser as near as possible will eliminate some, if not all, of friend Allen's color trouble.

I hesitate about giving space to some of Brother Solar's articles, because I very much doubt the ability of many of our readers to understand them. This particular article, however, seems to contain matter which may tend to give operators a very much clearer idea of conjugate foci points. Solar's letters have large value, but I would caution him to avoid the use of technical terms, complicated formulas and reciprocals as much as possible, since a large number of the men do not understand them.

EXPLANATION OF RECIPROCALS.

Reciprocals are used very extensively in optical formulas. The reciprocal of a number is one divided by the number in question, for instance $\frac{1}{2} = .5$ and $\frac{1}{.5} = 2$, so that, 2 and .5 are reciprocals, and one divided by either will equal the other. A form that is frequently used is the sum of reciprocals equals the reciprocal of a number, as $\frac{1}{f_1} + \frac{1}{f_2} = \frac{1}{F}$, in this case f_1 is the focal length of one lens and f_2 the focal length of another, and F the equivalent focus of the two, if we represent f_1 f_2 by 2 and 3 respectively, we have $\frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{3} = \frac{2+3}{2\times 3} = \frac{5}{6} = .833$, just the same as simple fractions, the equation indicates that $.833 = \frac{1}{F}$.

Then if .833 equals one divided by F, one divided by .833 must equal F, which it does, and gives 1.2 as the value for F. A simple and the usual way of calculating the sum of two reciprocals is to put them in the form of the first result in the above fractions, $\frac{2+3}{2\times 3}$, then invert this fraction, and we have $\frac{2\times 3}{2+3} = 1.2$, the same value we had for F, in the first case.

Why we must use reciprocals to obtain the equivalent focus of two lenses. The greater the power a lens has to deflect or bend a light ray, the less its value will be numerically, for instance, a 2-inch lens is more powerful than a 4-inch lens, and we see that 2 is less numerically than 4. So that in adding the power of two lenses, it must be in such a way as to reduce the value numerically, as we saw above a two and three inch lens combined has a power 1.2 inches much greater than either of the lenses, but less numerically.

A Criticism.

The article by Mr. P. D. Hugon published in the issue for October 14th has called forth a very interesting letter in regard to certain points made by Mr. Hugon. Unfortunately for the clarification of all of the points brought up, Mr. Hugon is at present in England, and until he can be heard from, certain of the questions cannot be answered.

Mr. Hugon's article differs in several instances from the views held by myself, but as it is by means of discussion and not by dogmatically adhering to certain doctrines that we arrive at the truth. Mr. Hugon's article was published as submitted. We are pleased to publish Mr. A. C. Abadie's letter.

I have read in the issue of October 14th an article on "Soft Focus and the Angle of the Lens."

As an active participant in motion photography for twelve years past, having circled the globe making agencies several times for a well known firm, and since becoming a producer myself having employed some of the brainiest cameramen in the business, and having bought and sold and imported motion picture cameras of every known make from the time when cameras first became procurable, I believe some criticisms which I have to make concerning the before mentioned article are entitled to consideration.

The author enshrouds the important points in his article in a certain ambiguity which causes me to state that nothing is proved. I should like to know what lens (among all of the lenses sold for use in making cinematographic pictures) is referred to as "giving a soft focus." While it is known to some of the more expert cameramen that lenses of like make and focal length frequently vary greatly in their defining powers (in the case of imported lenses this being frequently due to lack of precision work in the mounting operation done here), still it is a fact—and has been so demonstrated to me in the testing laboratories of the most famous photographic lens makers of Germany and England—that all of the lenses supplied for cinematography are tested, corrected and adjusted to produce a perfectly sharp reproduction of test charts and also of natural objects.

According to the makers of the various cinema lenses, and according to tests made by the writer of every procurable lens of such type, no cinematographic objective which produces a soft (or unsharp) image is intentionally issued by any of the well known optical firms producing lenses for use in motion photography. I base this assertion on statements made by experts of various lens factories (mostly European) and by the demonstrations which they have made in my presence, as well as on personal tests of an exhaustive nature.

Furthermore, I would like to know what "leading French camera outfit" the writer of that article refers to as "including a lens of one and one-half inch focus." I have imported all makes and models of French cinematograph cameras, both from London and direct from Paris, and while I am aware that the Pathe and one or two others sometimes include both a Zeiss "Tessar" and Voigtlander "Heliar" (of two inch focus), and that in a few instances Pathe outfits have been equipped with a 45 mm. Special Cinema Objective (Heliar). This comes quite a ways from being a one and one-half inch focus lens.

This 45 mm. Heliar just barely covers the standard film image, and experienced camera men are aware that lenses of shorter focal length than this will not cover to the corners.

While on the subject of covering power I would also like to inquire if the author of that article can show any photographic results to prove his assertion that a 2-inch cine objective will cover a plate 1½x1.3 in., even with small stops. If he can do this he sure must have "some lens." I have tested (during the last ten years) hundreds of 2-inch cinematographic lenses as to covering power, and I find that the average 2-inch lens just about covers the average size camera aperture, the best performance in this respect being generally exhibited by the German lenses. When testing on an aperture filled out to the full ¾x1 inch, I find that the best lenses will just cover this satisfactorily "wide open," and stopping down does not increase their covering power appreciably, at least in no instance which has come under my observation. This is probably attributable to the construction (type) of the lenses used in cinematographic work.

In passing through Mr. Hugon's attempted description of image formation, it seems that he means to convey that when a lens is stopped down the improvement in definition is due to the fact that the oblique pencils (of light) have been cut off by the diaphragm. Can it be that the author of the article under discussion does not know that stopping a lens down decreases the diameter of the pencils of light, and consequently decreases the diameter of the "circles of confusion," thus improving the sharpness of the image?

Again, I notice the statement of "depth of focus is entirely due to focal strength and iris aperture." I am not sure (and it seems the author is also some confused) as to whether "depth of focus" or "depth of field" is meant here. Which is it, please?

I am assured by prominent lens makers that depth (either of focus or of field) is not entirely dependent on focal length, and "effective aperture." Type construction is also a factor in securing depth in the results produced by an objective.

Pursuing Mr. Hugon's test I again come to remark: "Why is it, then, that a certain 2-inch lens gives 'soft focus'?" I am so curious about this mysterious "certain 2-inch lens" that I again ask: What lens does the writer of that article refer to? It is important that this be known in order that the accuracy (or inaccuracy) of his statement can be verified. As the matter stands nothing has been proven. As I have previously remarked no maker of cinematographic objectives intentionally issues lenses for such work which are "intentionally imperfect in their optical corrections," but, rather, every energy has been bent by the several makers of cinematographic taking lenses toward producing objectives which, when properly focussed, give microscopically sharp definition.

I find it to be appreciated by all expert cameramen that one particular make and type of lens (presumably the one Mr. Hugon calls a soft focus lens) shows much greater depth of field than any of the others. Tests have established the fact that this particular lens is equal (if not superior) to any other lens in the sharpness of results which it produces, while it leads all others in depth of field at a given stop.

An extensive experience in producing pictures in England and an acquaintance with all of the "honest to God" cameramen in London, England, and vicinity has not revealed a preference for the lens which is termed (in the article) a soft focus lens, over the other popular lens, or, in fact, over any of the other recognized makes.

In closing I wish to state that this communication is not written in the spirit of controversy, but a technical article to be of value must present facts with proofs. Therefore, I request that the points brought up be explained, through the Motion Picture Photography columns or otherwise.

Mr. Abadie's statement that lenses for cinematography are adjusted to produce perfectly sharp reproductions is one which I believe requires a limiting clause. There is an appreciable limit to mechanical accuracy, and there is also a limit to the resolving power of a photographic emulsion.

Taking a certain limit of resolving power as being the finest difference which an emulsion is capable of recording it is manifestly absurd to go to the useless trouble of grinding a lens very much finer than is necessary to fall within that limit, and while, in justice to several firms of lens makers, it must be said that they produce lenses well within the resolving power of an emulsion. The usual figure used in calculating depth of focus, &c., for cinematographic lenses is 1-250 part of an inch. In other words, that what is theoretically a point may be represented by a spot 1-250 of an inch in diameter without transgressing what is called a sharp image on the screen.

For ordinary photographic objectives where the image is not designed to be so greatly enlarged, the ordinary limit for such calculation is 1-100 of an inch.

It is natural that manufacturers of lenses should be unwilling to admit that the lens of another maker possessed superior definition; nevertheless, it is evident that they cannot all be equal, and it is customary to charge a considerable addition when a maker is even required to match one of his own lenses.

Mr. Abadie raises several very interesting topics, will some of the other optical sharks give us their opinion?

Musical Suggestions for "The Heart of a Hero."

Released by the World Film Corporation.

(Prepared by S. M. Berg.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 58¼ T "Morning" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 57¼ "When Hale thinks of freedom" is a description of action.

"The Heart of a Hero" depicts the life of Nathan Hale, a young ambitious schoolmaster, who when urged on by his sweetheart Alice, takes up the side of the Colonists in their fight for liberty against England. Through his heroic efforts, he is soon made a captain and later volunteers to obtain the enemy's plans. Disguising himself, he gains the plans, but not until he is recognized by Alice's cousin, Fitzroy. His arrest as a spy follows, and when about to be hung his last words were: "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country."

It will be found impossible for the musician to endeavor to fit every scene in this picture, owing to the continual changes of action. Care should be used in not overdoing the use of patriotic music.

Note particularly: English Airs at 38¾; English Patriotic Airs at 46½; Spirit of '76 with drums and fife only at 57¼; Direct cue of Bugle Call at 63½. Especially note drums only, slow beat at 80½. Dawn (on the way to scaffold).

The THEME selected is "One Who Has Yearn'd Alone"—Tschaikowsky.

Time schedule 87 minutes (six reels—5,800 feet).

Pictures vs. Vaudeville.

By S. M. Berg.

ON almost any important thoroughfare in New York City, attention will be drawn to a building brilliantly illuminated. Upon investigation one will find it is a theater given over to vaudeville and picture entertainment. Possibly the large electric sign will blazen to the world, the title and make of some important feature picture advertised as their star attraction, together with six acts of vaudeville.

The thought must suggest itself that the day has passed when the vaudeville performance closes with the presentation of some film. It is no more vaudeville and picture, but today "pictures and vaudeville." However, the idea is not which is of premier importance as the star attraction, but rather to the musical interpretation presented with the film in some of these theaters.

Most of these houses change their programs on Monday, Thursday, and on those days the manager and his assistants, together with the orchestra leader and his musicians, are on the job early in the morning. Rehearsal is called and the artists run through their acts. Stage and light cues are provided for, and everything is arranged for the afternoon performance, but what about the rehearsal of the star act—"the picture." What time and thought is given to this by the average manager?

In a discussion with a musical director in charge of an important circuit, he frankly stated that "if my musicians do not play the vaudeville right, the artists will kick, but nobody will kick for the picture; besides which few musicians who are experienced in playing vaudeville will not bother much with the picture."

Vaudeville managers, wake up! To stop your patrons from flocking to the exclusive movie theater your star act today is a feature film. But put it over right. Motion pictures are dumb, but music can make them speak. It can interpret and enhance every motion depicted on the screen. Get together with your musical director. Let him know you expect some effort from him. Help him financially by paying for some of the music. Consider the instrumentation of your orchestra. Listen to your own orchestra play a picture and then visit the exclusive picture house and see what they are doing. Your orchestra probably consists of piano, violin, cornet, trombone and drums. Sit on the right of the house and you have a charming melange of cat rocking music. The exclusive picture theater possibly has a string trio, a quartette with clarinet or cornet, or perhaps a quintette with an organ or harmonium. The atmosphere is different, the music is subdued. Each scene and change of action shows that some care has been exercised in the selection of the music. The orchestra plays the picture as an individual picture and give it a distinct interpretation, not a haphazard hit-or-miss continuation of melodies that at the best are distracting. It should not appear as though two distinct forms of entertainment were being given at the same time, viz: a concert and a drama, one having scarcely any relation to the other. It is not good policy to run an entertainment on the three-ring circus basis. The music and the picture must work together. The picture is willing, so the music must co-operate. When two forces harmonize a certain satisfactory result is obtained.

Music gives to the film an atmosphere and enchantment which only experience can realize. By changing somewhat their combinations of musicians and if a little more care were given to the selection of music, their entertainment will take on more real value than before, and their audience will leave appreciating everything that has been offered for their entertainment.

Alice Brady, Multiple Star

Hard-Working Little Actress Appears in Many Features for World Film.

ALICE BRADY is the star of seven of the picture plays to be released by the World Film Corporation before the end of May, 1917. These are "Bought and Paid For," "A Woman Alone," "The Girl and the Wager," "Darkest Russia," "The Madness of Helen," "Sinners" and "Frou Frou."

At this rate of productivity as an actress Miss Brady is portraying one new role every month, which is regarded as something of a feat considering that the process covers a long stretch of time and is not operated under special pressure.

Alice Brady.

"Of course this is hard work," said Miss Brady. "Not in spots, but regularly, without the slightest break. I should call it memorable, for its exactions are never relaxed. But it is wonderfully stimulating, for the variety is entirely unlimited, and you go from one role to another like roaming through some vast building with an endless number of rooms, all different and each one with something in it to fasten the interest.

"When I was very new to the speaking stage I realized that I lacked experience, and I thought the best way to acquire it was to join a stock company where they changed the bill every week. So I played all summer in Dayton, Ohio, appearing in a new role every Monday and beginning to rehearse another every Tuesday morning.

"This seemed to me to be great experience at the time, but as I look back I doubt if it was of any special benefit, excepting that it may have given me confidence and familiarity with the technical side of my profession. But as for any considerable help, the drive was too great and too aimless.

"The plays were changed so often that we scarcely knew one of them before we were plunging into another, and of course we fell into a rut in spite of ourselves. And then, if we were imperfect in our lines, we 'sensed' them as best we could, and slipped through somehow.

"This cannot be done in the pictures. One phrase may be made to do duty for another in the speaking drama, but you cannot make a substitute expression or action take the place of the real thing. In other words it is impossible to slur a scene or any portion of a scene in the pictures, because the camera is sure to catch you at it if you try.

"On account of this the picture player must be on his or her mettle all the time in order to succeed, which means that the interest is keyed up every instant. If this lets down the whole scene is gone and must be made over, which does not improve your own temper or those of the other actors and the director.

"This is what I meant by describing the work as unenjoyable. On the other hand, it is satisfying in a great many respects. For one thing the picture gives us opportunities to see ourselves as others see us, and incidentally to study our own imperfections. On the speaking stage we have to take the word of the critics or our friends regarding the value of our work. On the screen we have ample opportunity to judge for ourselves—so that if we do miss the applause there are other advantages which overbalance it immensely."

Enid Bennett Becomes Triangle-Kay Bee Star

RARELY has the initial work of a new film star aroused the interest that is being accorded the debut of Enid Bennett at the Triangle-Kay Bee studios in Los Angeles. Possessing all of the qualities considered essential in a screen favorite, Miss Bennett's success is predicted by impartial observers who have witnessed her opening scenes before the camera.

Little Miss Bennett is the special "find" of Thomas H. Ince, who was so impressed by her dramatic talent and photographic possibilities during his recent sojourn in New York that he urged her to return with him to California and become one of the stars of the Kay-Bee Company.

Enid Bennett.

The far-away settlement of York, in Western Australia, is the birthplace of Miss Bennett. She is a blonde of the vivacious type with a clear, fresh coloring and wide blue eyes that poets are fond of describing as typical attributes of English beauty.

"It was through meeting Katherine Grey that I came to go on the stage," said Miss Bennett when asked about the incidents that affected her in choosing a career. "My friends gave me a theater party when I was sixteen. I was taken to Perth to see 'The Third Degree,' in which Miss Grey was then appearing. After the performance the star received me in her dressing-room, and was kind enough to help me secure an engagement as Modesty in 'Everywoman' within a few days. My work attracted the attention of Fred Niblo and Josephine Cohan and I became an ingenue in their company, appearing in 'Seven Keys to Baldpate,' 'The Fortune Hunter,' 'The Whip,' 'Excuse Me,' 'Broadway Jones' and other plays in their repertory.

"I feel that the most fortunate incident in my life, however, will prove to be my meeting with Mr. Ince in New York last summer, as I think motion picture acting is perfectly thrilling, and I am very eager to make good all the confidence that has been placed in me."

POLI MEN SEE CHAPLIN REVUE.

Manager H. H. Buxbaum of the Twenty-third Street General Film Exchange entertained last week a quartet of Poli chiefs, General Manager R. C. Miller, W. L. Sandercock of Bridgeport, O. C. Edwards of New Haven and A. Vicars of Hartford. The four were in town to take in an exclusive showing of the Essanay Chaplin revue of 1916. Others who viewing the same bill looked upon this bunch of laughs were Mr. Graves of the Proctor forces and Messrs. Mitchell and Bernstein of the Loew circuit.

When the "Cinch" Peters Out

By Frank G. Andrews

Exhibitors Who Won Success by Chance Usually Are "Up Against It" When Competition Comes Along

HANK RUMSEY felt quite sure there was money to be made in the "store business" in Peetsburg, so he proceeded to prove it to the Doubting Thomases. He rented the front room in Squire Peck's building and budded forth. And he grew and he grew—like the proverbial little peach in the orchard. He became one of the leading "cits" of the community.

As business success came, he threw his head back and placed his finger on his chest, the prototype, man-size, of Little Jack Horner. He was A Success and he really pitied the other fellows who were working around by the day in a land where Opportunity is simply trying day and night to burglarize the house.

Now the real facts are that Hank wasn't suchamuch. He was a success when it came to measuring success by a dollar-and-cents standard, but he had never done anything to really deserve success. He was a victim of chance. He simply opened up a store and the store did the rest.

In front of the store he had swung a sign which cost him a dollar and a half. On it was painted: "Henry Rumsey, Dealer in General Merchandise." He carried an ad in the town paper reading the same way. And his business policy consisted of opening the store at six in the morning, closing it at ten evenings and being there every minute during business hours. Hank had absolutely nothing else up his sleeve.

You couldn't blame Hank for feeling that he was a superior man—the Wanamaker of his section—and he liked to have people tell him about it. He was so successful that whenever any native wanted to raise money he never thought of giving his mortgage to anybody except Hank Rumsey. It wasn't long before Hank had a part interest in all the town real estate.

After Hank had been doing business for twenty years and had become known for miles around as "the merchant prince," there came to Peetsburg a modern city fellow who desired to summer there. He saw Hank's bonanza and started an opposition store. It is a tearful tale, so why dwell on it? It was soon proved that Hank Rumsey wasn't a Wanamaker at all nor was he a merchant prince. He was simply a chance success. It wasn't him that was succeeding at all, even though he was getting the benefits. It was the store—the opportunity.

The modern storekeeper soon had him on the toboggan and a few years later Hank Rumsey was sold out by the sheriff. He died penniless and his widow at the present time is being looked after by the Helping Hand Society of the First Presbyterian Church.

As George Ade might say: Some men are born great and some have it thrust upon them, but the trouble is they live too long.

Having now shown the moral, let us apply it to the picture business.

Many small exhibitors have succeeded because they got into the business by chance and there was no alternative but success. Things came their way in bunches and the Lord stayed with 'em. There are many who are succeeding who are ranker misfits than hundreds who have failed. They haven't the first idea of what constitute good business policies or good showmanship. They are doing practically everything they should not do and still succeeding. If you tell them in a friendly way of a fault they will ask you what you know about it—what have you ever done! At the same time they will tell you to look at them. There seems no refutation of the argument and a man is a fool who will argue with them. Always the proof of the pudding is in the eating, and when they are using the only spoon they have nine-tenths of the argument on their side.

But every intelligent exhibitor of experience knows that there are right methods to be employed in the conduct of a picture theater, even admitting that misfits have succeeded and that competent showmen have failed. Fundamentally, the picture business is a lottery. You succeed or you don't succeed. But when success once starts the competent showman has an ace in the hole to the other fellow's deuce.

A novice may sit into a game of draw poker and draw the cards out of shape against experienced gamblers for an entire evening, but if he comes often enough the experienced card players will get his watch and shirt. Now and then a player wins at a slot machine, but it is a mathematical impossibility to keep it up because the percentage is 40 per cent. against the player. The law of averages must prevail in the long run. Yet an egotistical sport will tell you that he can beat a slot machine and, with his paws full of winnings, he seems to have all the argument on his side. All you can do is play for time.

So it is in the picture business. There are exhibitors succeeding in spite of themselves and this type of exhibitor is quite sure that his superior wisdom and showmanship is entirely responsible. It is far from the truth. His success is due to chance, opportunity and a rabbit's foot. When he loses any of these—well, it's a puff of smoke for him.

Personally, I have seen hundreds of business mistakes in the exhibition end of the business. There is no question but that they were mistakes even though the perpetrators apparently had for the moment the best of the argument.

Here is the case of Peter Potts. Peter saw a chance to open a picture show in the virgin town of Gazelle, population 2,000. He spent $7,000 building a nice little theater. He opened at ten cents a head, six night a week. Knowing nothing about the business, he made the mighty mistake of showing eight and ten reels every night, with twelve reels Saturday nights. He started doing this right at the outset, despite advice to the contrary from persons who knew. Within two weeks the attendance was so poor that he had to cut down to three nights a week and now he is showing only on Saturday nights, just to clear enough money to pay his rent.

Such policy is simply suicide. Besides surfeiting the public with cheap pictures it means that when reverses come there is nothing to do but sit down and admit defeat. You have shot off your whole bunch of firecrackers at once.

Another small exhibitor took a Paragraph service. At the best his theater was a hard proposition and he had just about all he could do to make ends meet. His service was good and he might have won out but he resorted to old-time methods which had made money for him in the early days of the industry. He schemed to put something over on his patrons. He made a new contract with Paramount and took their very earliest releases (nearly three years old) at half the money. He confided to his friends that he had pulled off a slick trick. Did he? Not so you could notice it. He fooled none of his patrons. He lost two-thirds of them and now the theater is boarded up. What he should have done was to have taken twice as costly a service instead of one twice as cheap. His chance to succeed would have been far better.

Another small exhibitor has for ten years been getting his daily service from a Pennsylvania exchange, although his theater is located in an adjacent state. He has received fine treatment and naturally has a warm place in his heart for this exchange. But he does not know that Pennsylvania is the film slaughter house of the Union in the matter of official censorship and he has been getting films that are nothing more than remnants of the original stories. All the while his patrons, ignorant of the true cause, have been groaning and wondering what has come over the films—they are not as good as they once were.

This exhibitor is quite unaware of the cause. When the fine feature—"God's Country and the Woman"—comes to an exhibitor with 1,325 feet deleted out of an original 6,000, making the story so ridiculous that it cannot be comprehended, then it is time for an exhibitor to look around for whatever relief may be in sight.

A nice theater was built in a live town of something less than 5,000 people. It looked like a gold mine and several persons tried for the lease. Along came a big city showman with money in both hands and by offering twice the rent anybody else offered, and twice as much as the stand was really worth, copped the lease inside of ten minutes. He opened at ten cents and did a land-office business. The money was too easy—the city fellow wanted all the golden eggs at once. So he stuck the price up to fifteen cents and put over some miserably cheap stuff. Business suicide! The public dropped him and unsightly boards now "adorn" the entrance. He had an exceptionally good opportunity but ruined it by one bad, unpardonable business stroke.

There are exhibitors who adhere to the policy of drumming people into their theater instead of trying to attract them by superior pictures. It seems hard to believe but there are still some small exhibitors who are using a piano and drums, and advertising the combination as "an orchestra." It takes a mighty good drummer to work in a picture show without "disturbing" the pictures, to those of esthetic tastes especially, and when you meet one who thinks the audience came to hear how well he can drum and to see the pictures incidentally, then you are going against the impossible. The trick work of some amateur drummers, and the crashing of cymbals at a critical stage in an engaging drama, is not what you would exactly call "a joy and a delight." Some exhibitors cannot understand that the purpose of music is simply to provide a soothing accompaniment to the pictures and should not in any instance, except where effects are required, be permitted to disturb the screen story.

The same applies to an orchestra in a small town. The exhibitor who excuses his orchestra by using the argument that the Strand theater in New York employs an orchestra has got another guess coming. There is a lot of difference. The Strand orchestra renders its music with intelligent appropriateness and in no instance does it disturb the thoughts of the audience or jar their finer sensibilities.

The small town orchestra, composed of mediocre musicians, and playing indiscriminately from a repertoire of cheap ragtime and popular waltz songs, is a far, far different proposition, and its chief virtue is to make a noise that will draw people in from the streets rather than provide entertainment for those who have already passed the box office.

The problem of order in a small town theater is also a serious one that few exhibitors consider worth while to interest themselves in. Some care little when the entrance to their theater is blocked up with a gang of foul-mouthed boys and hoodlums that may keep decent people from coming to see their show. They are apparently afraid of offending some of the loafers because they might lose a nickel that one of them occasional spends with him. They do not comprehend that for every nickel they might lose (which they won't because the hoodlum will come anyway), they would probably gain a dollar in patronage from more desirable patrons.

And when we witness a proprietor who, without lifting a hand to prevent it, permits the rougher and more or less undesirable element in his audience to shuck peanuts, throw them boisterously at refined patrons, to guffaw and utter catcalls upon the first suspicion of suggestiveness in the screen picture, then we are convinced that this particular exhibitor is a misfit, even though he may be making some money for the time being. At any rate, he is not a credit to the industry and we feel sure a really competent man could be making two dollars with the same stand for every one that this fellow makes.

The mistakes that are made in advertising pictures is another phase that could be referred to at length. The methods employed by some exhibitors is disgraceful. To them any plan is considered permissible providing it will draw the people. Every form of misrepresentation is employed, with no regard for the truth and no consideration whatever for the character of the house or the good name of the industry as a whole.

One of the most flagrant examples of misrepresentation was when an exhibitor advertised a certain feature of a lurid type. He used these words: "Look what the Moving Picture World says about this great feature!" Then he quoted copiously about the wondrous production.

Now the truth is the Moving Picture World didn't praise the feature at all. Quite the reverse, that journal roasted it unmercifully. The quotations that the exhibitor used in his ad were taken out of the department known as "Manufacturers' Advance Notes."

Exhibitors who employ such methods may succeed for a time, but they cannot become fixtures. God is always with the right, even though one's faith falters at times.

Harold Edel, The Strand's Manager

HAROLD EDEL, managing director for America's largest motion picture theater, the Strand, is the youngest man on Broadway holding a similar position. He was born in Greenville, S. C., 27 years ago and is a graduate from Georgia University.

Mr. Edel's entry into the entertainment field was in 1904, when he was given charge of a penny arcade on East Fourteenth street, New York, owned by Mitchell H. Mark, now president of the Mark Strand Company, owners and operators of the Strand theater, New York.

Harold Edel.

Mr. Mark soon discovered in the youthful manager unusual capabilities, worthy of positions of greater responsibility, and transferred him to Lawrence, Mass., to take charge of a small motion picture theater seating 125 persons. After managing this house for six months he was transferred to Cleveland, O., and given charge of the Coliseum and Globe theaters, both of which he managed successfully for two years. At that time the Alhambra theater, in Cleveland's exclusive section, was opened and Mr. Edel was appointed managing director. The Alhambra was one of America's most luxurious picture theaters and possibly the first which had a pipe organ installed. Mr. Edel inaugurated entertainments which have since been elaborated upon by others.

Later Mr. Edel accepted the position of general manager for the Kinemacolor Company of Canada, in which capacity he presented the famous Durbar pictures in every Canadian theater of consequence from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts. Later he was made general manager for the Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises in Buffalo and served with this firm until the new Strand theater in Buffalo, in which he had purchased an interest, was built, when he took charge as managing director. A few months ago he was transferred to New York.

Mr. Edel's experience has given him a keen insight into the motion picture field, and he has the happy faculty of studying his audiences and make up programs to their liking.

Emerson Back With Triangle

Goes to Coast to Direct Douglas Fairbanks in New Features.

DIRECTOR JOHN EMERSON, loaned by Triangle to the Famous Players for the past two months, has been recalled, and has departed for the Triangle-Fine Arts studios at Hollywood, Cal. The reason for the haste in the departure of Director Emerson lies in a telegram received by Harry E. Aitken, President of Triangle, from Douglas Fairbanks, the same day the ebullient and athletic star hopped off the train at Hollywood. In his wire Fairbanks announced that he was on the ground and ready to start on his next picture, but that he craved two boons—first, that John Emerson act as his director; second, that Anita Loos, busy scenaroist of Triangle-Fine Arts, write the titles for his plays.

Miss Loos, it happened, had just left for the coast after a brief vacation in New York, and is ready for her assignment. Emerson will arrive at Hollywood within the next week or ten days, and Fairbanks will then begin work on his first coast picture since "The Half-Breed." Meantime he has made in the East "Manhattan Madness" and "American Aristocracy."

Emerson directed Fairbanks in "His Picture in the Papers," one of the earliest Triangle-Fairbanks releases. The last production he made for Triangle before coming East two months ago was the Sir Herbert Tree film presentation of "Macbeth."

The northwestern Triangle territory, with headquarters at Seattle, Wash., has been assigned to Peter N. Brinch and associates. The territory takes in the States of Washington, Oregon, the northern half of Idaho and that portion of the State of Montana, lying west of the Rockies. Mr. Brinch will assume almost immediate charge of this district under the contract just signed. The contracts covering five other territorial districts are now pending, and announcement will be made concerning them in a few days.

MOTION PICTURES IN FOOTBALL TRAINING.

The motion picture camera has been brought into play at Rutgers College as one of the factors in training the 1916 football squad. It is believed the men on the team will through watching their own work on the screen more readily remedy defects in play. The result of the experiment should prove of interest to other athletic aggregations.

Australian Notes

JOHN F. GAVIN, who recently produced "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell," now playing under the Famous Players Co. of Canada, is at present busy on "The Birth of Australia," which he states will be by far the most stupendous and expensive production yet attempted in Australia. The scenario, which covers a period of 150 years, will necessitate nearly 600 scenes, and over 1,500 people, including 63 principals, will be employed in the spectacle. The picture will portray all the leading events in the history of Australia from the landing of Captain Cook to the Dardanelles campaign. Gavin considers that, when completed, the picture will be a feature worthy of being screened in any theater in the world.

C. Post Mason, who was mentioned in the "Moving Picture World" of June 24, was sent to America by Mr. Gavin to exploit the latter's big box office attraction, "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell." Mr. Gavin informs me that Mason has been successful in disposing the Canadian and English rights at very satisfactory figures, and that he is at present making arrangements for it to be screened in the U. S. A. Mason is best known in this country as a singer of popular ballads on the Harry Rickards and Fuller Vaudeville Circuits.

Gavin has also just completed a two-part production, entitled "The Revue Girls." This features Gwen Lewis, a member of the Royal Strollers Theatrical Company, at present playing in Sydney.

Franklyn Barrett, formerly with Pathe Freres and more recently with the George Willoughby Photoplay Company, has begun operations on his own account, and has built a studio in Parramatta, near Sydney, and is at present engaged on the production of two single-reel comedies.

* * *

Higgins Brothers, a local firm, is making a special feature of topical films at present, and is not producing any dramatic subjects for the time being.

I understand that Marion Marcus Clark has negotiations under way for the purchase of the motion picture rights for the novel written by her father, Marcus Clark, entitled "For the Term of His Natural Life." A film version of the book was made by an Australian company about five years ago, and was released in America by Sawyer's, Inc., in 1913, under the title, "The Convict Hero." Some time later Miss Clark was successful in obtaining an injunction against the screening of the film, which has not been in circulation for nearly two years.

"For the Term of His Natural Life" is a story of the old penal settlements in Tasmania, and the plot is highly original, and suitable for picture presentation. I hear that the rights will probably be offered to an American concern.

The Hippodrome, which opened only a fortnight ago as a photoplay house, closed down again last Saturday, the venture not having proved a success.

The management has not announced any future arrangements.

I would like to draw the attention of film manufacturers and exporters to the fact that a very strict censorship is being exercised at present by the Commonwealth military authorities. I gave the names of a few pictures that had been stopped last week, and to this list may be added "Sold for Marriage" (Triangle) and "The Yellow Passport" (World). These pictures were stopped because they showed the Russian Government in a bad light, and also contained scenes that might influence feeling against our ally. There are a number of similar pictures being produced, and it is just a waste of time sending them to this country—during the war, at any rate. The law seems to provide that the "villain" of any picture may be an American, an Englishman or a neutral, but if he happens to be a Russian, Frenchman, or Japanese, the picture is not allowed to pass.

"The Yellow Passport" was taken off after two days screening at the new Sydney theater, "Hoyt's," where it was one of the opening attractions.

A meeting is to be held next week by the Federated Showmen's Union (N. S. W.) to discuss the proposed raising of prices of admission to all Sydney and suburban theaters. The proposed minimum price is six-pence, against the present three-pence.

* * *

"The Phantom," the Triangle subject that was held up by the police department, was passed by the chief secretary, Mr. George Black, last week. It is now the current screening at the Crystal Palace, where it is proving a great drawing card.

Lieut. Jim Anderson is back in Sydney from New Zealand, where he went to establish the Fox Films throughout the Dominion. "Yes," said the rotund lieutenant. "I'm back. So is Carey Wilson, who went with me.

"We left Sydney on August 11, returned September 4, and during the intervening time leased quarters, furnished them, built up an organization, and started the sign which will soon reach throughout both islands of the Dominion.

"Our New Zealand home is situated in 65 Willis street, Wellington, in the center of the business district, and beautifully furnished offices have been established."

The Australian rights for "Gloria's Romance" have been secured by Australasian Films, Ltd. The release date has not yet been announced. This will undoubtedly be one of the best box office attractions offered by this firm for a considerable time.

Another serial nearly due for release is "The Adventures of Terence O'Rourke," which are being handled by Fraser Films, Ltd. The first episode will be released in a few weeks, immediately upon the finish of their present serial, "The Broken Coin."

* * *

A new news-gazette is to be released by Fraser Films, Ltd., in the near future. There are two local gazettes at present, one being produced by Australasian Films, Ltd., and the other by the Co-operative Exchange.

* * *

"The Mutiny of the Bounty," a five-part picture produced by Raymond Longford, is easily the best historical subject yet produced in this country. The story, which is taken from an event in the early history of Australia, makes a very good picture, and the acting is consistently good, especially that of George Cross, who plays the leading character. The photography is a special feature of the production, containing some of the finest artistic work I have seen in any production, American, English or local. It is understood that negotiations are under way for the release of the picture in America.

Although common enough in the United States, so far Australia has not had a picture theater which changed the program six days in the week. The Boomerang theater, situated in Coogee, a suburb of Sydney, has the distinction of being the first theater to have a daily change of program. This theater was opened last week, and is one of the finest picture shows in the suburbs. Erected at a cost of £10,000, the building contains all the latest improvements, including a large sliding roof. Every modern convenience has been installed for the convenience of the patrons. Manager Bray says that the name Boomerang was chosen because it means "come back again." It is admittedly very appropriate.

"MOTHER" BENSON DIES.

After having been confined for several months to her home in Hollywood, Mrs. May Benson, known in the photoplay world as "Mother" Benson, died on September 29. "Mother" Benson had been three years with the Universal West Coast studios and for a long time played in films with the late "Daddy" Manley, whose death greatly grieved her. The little old lady was a great favorite at the film capital and her services always were in demand by directors. She had had a long and varied career on the legitimate stage and in pictures and her death was mourned sincerely by the Universalites with whom she had been so intimately associated.

LOIS WEBER STARTS NEW FEATURE.

"The Mysterious Mrs. Musselwhite" is the title of a new feature production started at Universal City by Lois Weber. The story originally was published in a current magazine but has been adapted for the screen by Miss Weber. Mary McLaren will be featured.

McVicker, general director and booking agent. C. W. Porter is house manager. The Regent Theater is situated in the new heart of Detroit, the intersection of the Grand Boulevard and Woodward Avenue, Detroit's principal business street. The building occupies a plot of ground 107½x220, and has probably the largest and finest auditorium outside the city of New York. The entire structure is built of brick, stone, steel, and reinforced concrete. The Woodward Avenue elevation is composed of a marble base with the second and third stories of brick trimmed with stone. This portion of the building, three stories in height, contains the entrance, lobby and offices. On each side of the main entrance are steel poster frames set in the masonry and glazed with plate glass. A large marquise of steel and glass affords protection from the elements.

Wm. F. Klatt.

Above the marquise is a large electric sign consisting of an oval, in which is the word "Regent." Below this is a three-line interchangeable sign, while standing at each end on top of the interchangeable sign are two rampant lions which support the oval. Around the oval are exposed incandescent lamps which are operated on a flasher. Along the front of the marquise is also an interchangeable sign.

Interior of the Regent Theater, Detroit, Mich.

All lights except those operated on the flasher are concealed. Above the electric sign at each side of the building are suspended two huge lamps of beautiful design 9 feet in length and weighing 1,250 pounds each. These lamps are cast iron, covered with gold leaf and glazed with Cathedral glass. The panels between the brackets in the cornice are also picked out with lights. In addition to these lighting effects there are six reflectors on the top of the marquise for flood lighting.

To the right of the entrance lobby, which has walls of brick and marble and a ceiling and frieze of terra cotta tinted in tone with the brick work, the large and commodious ticket office is situated. The ticket office is of marble and glass and is fitted with the latest ticket vending and change making machines, also with burglar and police arrangements within easy reach of the cashier. A handsome brass rail separates the ticket buyers from the outgoing patrons. The ceiling of the lobby is studded with lamps, and a magnificent fixture of unique and original design, which contains fifty-five lamps, is suspended from the center. On the left is a door leading to the offices. There are six mahogany doors glazed with plate glass leading into the foyer from the lobby. The floor of the lobby is graded with an easy rise from the sidewalk to auditorium level and is made of non-slipping vitreous tile in beautiful colors, ranging from light to very deep red. The walls of the lobby are paneled with mirrors and poster frames, and the radiators are set in the recesses behind wrought iron screens of striking design. A beautiful marble wainscoting of Alps Green marble extends entirely around this room. The color scheme of the lobby is in rich, warm French grays and paneling is brought out in beautiful blue tones. The ceiling is beamed and the excellent arrangement of the lighting fixtures throws the paneling in strong relief.

On each side of the foyer are drinking fountains. There are four of these fountains, two in foyer and two in lounge room on the second floor. The foyer is divided with a row of handsome brass posts connected with chains. The foyer is 20 feet wide and 105 feet long with doors of beautiful tile. As one passes through the foyer he is impressed with the huge size and dignity of the auditorium. This magnificent room occupies the full width of the lot, is 105 feet long and has a ceiling height of 60 feet. From a point about midway in the house the side walls are gradually curved in with an easy sweep to intersect the proscenium opening which is 48 feet wide and 32 feet high. The balcony extends from the back over less than half of the house, thereby leaving a very high and airy room. The walls of the room show a base with pilasters surmounted above by a frieze 12 feet in height, then a richly ornamented cornice. Around the entire outside walls of the auditorium the ceiling is heavily beamed in striking design, while the field is worked out in square flat panels. The base of the walls is done in a grayish brown; the pilasters in gray with caps of gold; the wall panels in old ivory with green stenciling. The frieze is richly ornamented in deep blues of striking strength and gold, while the lesser ornament is in different tones of red. The cornice is cream, with the panels between in strong blues and gold.

There are twenty exits in the auditorium, all being of generous size and conveniently located so that the building can be emptied quickly. The auditorium floor is of concrete, except the aisles, which are of non-slipping vitreous tile. There are no boxes on the sides of the auditorium, but at a point about seventy degrees from the stage front, on the parquette floor there are two rows of boxes extending across the house, and one row of boxes in the front of the balcony. There are 1,900 seats on the first floor, about 900 in the balcony and 288 box chairs. There are no columns in the house, and every seat has a perfect sight line to the stage. The orchestra pit is large and roomy and accommodates a thirty-two piece orchestra. The stage is 75 feet in width. The stage setting designed by the architects after Versailles, is a beautiful piece of work as well as the asbestos curtain. The asbestos curtain is decorated in a manner similar to the wall panels. The medallions which are the motif of the frieze is repeated on the center of the curtain so that when the asbestos is down the walls seem to be carried across the arch opening.

The big pipe organ is one of the largest in the country and is distributed in five parts. It is a five-manual organ with fifty-five "speaking" stops. The great organ and the orchestral organ are placed in rooms on the south side of the auditorium; the swell organ on the north side; the echo organ in the clear story above the ceiling of the auditorium and percussion organ under the stage. The screens over the shutters are beautifully designed and form a decorative part of the auditorium walls.

All stairs are of reinforced concrete with tile treads, iron risers, and wrought iron balustrades. Ascending the stairs to the mezzanine level, one steps into a magnificent lounge room which is about 22 feet in width and 96 feet long. The ceiling of this room is curved in the fashion of a barrel and along one side, the space that is usually unoccupied under the balcony has been made use of by a series of alcoves. The lounge room is beautifully furnished in French gray wicker furniture and velour draperies of blue and old rose. Standing lamps are liberally distributed. These lamps have shades decorated to conform with the various colors used in the room. On the walls are large mirrors. The floor of this room is of small tile of beautiful soft colors ranging from light tan to deep reds with a design worked through it in green tile. The tile is laid in basket pattern. The colors used in this room have been so carefully selected that the whole scheme blends in a beautiful ensemble.

The inclines giving entrance to the balcony from the lounge room are floored with non-slipping tile. The center incline from lounge to balcony is a bridge. This unusual feature was brought about by opening the under side of the balcony to a point about 12 feet above the mezzanine, or lounge floor, so that those in the lounge room may look down on the people on the main floor. Opening off the lounge room is a women's room 28 by 30 feet in size, which is floored in the same tile as the lounge room. The walls and ceilings are decorated in French grays with bands of nasturtiums worked into the general scheme. There is a fireplace in this room of beautiful and odd design. The furnishings here are wicker done in old ivory with upholstering in old rose and tan. The hangings are old rose. Ascending to the balcony level one finds the men's smoking room, 28 by 30 feet in size.

The lighting in the house deserves special mention, the fixtures in the auditorium ceiling being designed as part of the ceiling. In addition to the general illumination there are also additional 20 outlets in the ceiling which, when special lighting is desired, give the appearance of stars in the sky. Lighting fixtures are in deep, ruddy gold, relieved by blue and red. The house is protected by an automatic sprinkler system in addition to the stand pipes. The projection room is 14 by 26 feet in size with reinforced concrete floor and ceiling, and tile and brick walls. The screen is 18 by 24 feet in size. Essentially the projection equipment consists of three Powers 6B machines, two spot arcs, two General Electric compensarcs, three arc transformers and the switchboard.

William F. Klatt, who promoted the Regent, is one of Detroit's oldest exhibitors, if not the pioneer, having started the Bijou theater on Monroe Avenue more than eleven years ago. In addition to the Regent, he operates the Vendome, Gratiot, Jewell and Rosedale theaters in Detroit, all of which are booked by C. A. McVicker, who is Mr. Klatt's "right hand man." The admission prices range from 10 to 50 cents.

DONALD THOMPSON, WAR PHOTOGRAPHER.

TO SECURE motion pictures of actual fighting in the European conflict requires a mixture of skill, courage, official influence and knowledge of military affairs. All these qualities are combined in the person of Donald C. Thompson, staff photographer for Leslie's Weekly and official cinematographer to the French Government. For that reason his collection of films stands in a class apart from the mass of stuff which has been exhibited in this country in the guise of "war pictures" and which has been in so many cases either utterly spurious or taken so far from the actual front line of battle as to be of little more than academic interest.

Donald C. Thompson.

Mr. Thompson returned from France recently to recover from the effects of a shell wound which he received in the front line trenches and he has been employing his period of convalescence in assembling ten reels of the most thrilling scenes which he pictured during many months with the Allied forces. When he had them arranged as he wanted them, under the self-explanatory title, "War As It Really Is," he took them to S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of The Rialto, and offered him the exclusive right to show them in public. After a thrilling two hours during which the complete set was run off for his benefit, Mr. Rothapfel promptly closed with Mr. Thompson on his offer and an arrangement was entered into whereby selected portions of the pictures will be included each week on The Rialto program as an added feature, beginning Sunday, October 15. Furthermore, when Mr. Thompson leaves for Russia this week, to join the army of Grand Duke Nicholas on the Roumanian front, he will begin sending back a weekly reel of pictures to The Rialto whenever transportation facilities and the censorship will permit.

McIntyre in "The Traveling Salesman"

Noted Comedian to Repeat His Stage Success Before Famous Players Camera for Paramount Program.

BY AN arrangement effected this week, Frank McIntyre, the celebrated comedian, will make his debut on the screen under the auspices of the Famous Players Film Company, in a picturization of his greatest stage success, "The Traveling Salesman," by James Forbes.

This typical American comedy created a mirth-sensation during its engagement at the Liberty theater, New York, a few years ago, when under the management of the late Henry B. Harris, Mr. McIntyre's inimitable interpretation of the funny drummer was received as one of the most humorous character creations ever contributed to the stage.

Frank McIntyre.

"The Traveling Salesmen" was considered to possess unusual screen material by many of the larger feature producing companies, who have made frequent and flattering offers to Mr. McIntyre to enact this characterization before the camera. His consent to make his photoplay debut with the company through which so many of his contemporary stage stars have been introduced to the motion picture public, is therefore in the nature of a managerial triumph.

Mr. McIntyre has had an interesting stage history, having traversed all the theatrical paths that lead to stardom, including stock and one night stand engagements in the earlier years of his career. After his success in "The Traveling Salesman" he toured the country with it, repeating his metropolitan hit in all the cities, towns and hamlets in which he had formerly appeared under far more trying circumstances as a struggling artist. Among the plays in which he has won personal triumphs are "Captain Malley," "A Poor Man," "My Wife's Husband," "Major Andre," and "The Hat Salesman."

The plot, in brief, has to do with the romance which develops from the first meeting of the traveling salesman and the girlish telegraph operator at Grand Crossing. The girl has some property that two schemers plan to get away from her by bidding for it when it is up for sale for taxes. The traveling salesman learns of the plot, foils it and finally wins out after undergoing all the conditions of misery because the girl mistrusts him and believes in her enemies.

This photoplay comedy will appear on the Paramount Program during the next few weeks.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of October 22 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Rainbow Princess" at The Strand.

AT THE Strand theater Daniel Frohman presented Ann Pennington in a new photodrama entitled, "The Rainbow Priness," by Shannon Fife. Miss Pennington enacts the role of Hope, a waif who has been picked up by "Pop" Blodgett, owner of a circus, and forced to do most of the dangerous turns in the show. There are many thrilling situations in the play. In support of Miss Pennington are: William Courtleigh, Jr., Edwin Sturgis, Charles Sutton, Harry Lee, Clifford Gray, and Augusta Anderson.

The first installment of the Battle of the Somme, the fourth chapter of Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature," Travel and Educational studies, and the Strand Topical Review were also shown.

On the musical program were the original Hawiian Players from Ziegfeld's Follies, Grace Hoffman, soprano, and Irene Stolofsky, violinist.

"Jim Grimsby's Boy" at the Rialto.

Frank Keenan and Enid Markey shared honors in "Jim Grimsby's Boy," a Triangle feature, at the Rialto. Mr. Keenan departs from the [illegible] been identified hitherto, and in this story plays a rough old mountaineer who has hardened his heart against the world because Fate has made his only child a girl. He brings the child up as a boy, and it is her blossoming into womanhood and eventually winning his reluctant affection that forms the delightfully human theme of the story.

War Pictures taken by Donald C. Thompson, and Roscoe Arbuckle and his dog in "Fatty's Loyal Friend," were added features. Brind's "Intimate Studies of Bird Life" and the topical digest were also on the program.

The Russian Balalaika Orchestra, Hilda Goodwin, and Elizabeth Murray furnished the extra musical numbers. Claire Niles gave a dance novelty.

Romeo and Juliet at the Broadway.

Shakespeare's immortal love story, Romeo and Juliet was presented for the week at the Broadway theater by the Metro Pictures Corporation. Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have the title roles. The screen version is in eight reels, and six hundred persons were used in the production.

The program also contained the Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures, the pictograph, news events, cartoons, and a comedy.

The Eighty-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-First Street theater four Triangle pictures were shown. Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. H. B. Warner in "The Vagabond Prince," and a Keystone comedy were given. Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, Norma Talmadge in "Fifty-Fifty," and a new Sennett Keystone comedy were on the program.

Frances Nelson in Metro Feature Play

FRANCES NELSON, Metro star, soon will begin in the Rolfe studio on a new feature play which has been adapted for her by Harry O. Hoyt. The production will deal with a woman's reverie in a police station. The story is filled with dramatic incidents, and the part is admirably adapted to the emotional powers of Miss Nelson. John W. Noble will direct the production.

Born in St. Paul, Minn., her childhood spent in Boston, Miss Nelson's first stage experience was with Lew Fields in Frances Nelson.

"The Wife Hunters." Next she appeared in stock in Philadelphia and in Indianapolis. Her last experience on the speaking stage, before going into motion pictures, was with Thomas A. Wise in "The Silver Wedding."

Her first motion picture experience was at the old Biograph in "The Chieftain's Sons," in which she was seen as an Indian girl. Among the pictures in which she has been seen are "Love's Crucible," "The Family Cupboard," "The Revolt," "Human Driftwood," "Sins of Society," "The Stolen Voice," "The Almighty Dollar," "The House of Fear," "Ambition," and "So Runs the Way."

DORIS KENYON IN "THE MAN WHO STOOD STILL."

Co-starred with Lew Fields in "The Man Who Stood Still" is Doris Kenyon, an amazingly prety girl who is coming along very rapidly as a motion picture actress.

Elaborate Features on Paramount Program

Marguerite Clark Makes First Appearance Since the Renewal of Her Famous Players' Contract.

THE week of October 30 will be remembered in the history of Paramount Pictures Corporation by reason of the fact that Marguerite Clark makes her first appearance on this date after the renewal of her contract with the Famous Players Film Company, to remain on the screen rather than succumb to the inducements of the footlights. Miss Clark will appear in "Miss George Washington," one of the most exceptionally clever productions Paramount has ever been able to offer its exhibitors.

The phenomenal rise of Miss Clark to a position of preeminence among screen stars, has been one of the most remarkable chapters of motion picture history. Coming fresh from the musical comedy stage, Miss Clark became a favorite overnight when she made her screen debut in the Famous Players picture "Wildflower," in which she created a veritable sensation. From that time she has ranked as one of the foremost motion picture stars in popularity and in accomplishment. Exhibitors throughout the country are looking forward with keen delight to the reappearance of Miss Clark as a regular star on the Paramount Program.

The other feature for this week is "Seventeen," a picturization of Booth Tarkington's humorous masterpiece in which Louise Huff and Jack Pickford co-star. "Seventeen" was produced under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, and marks the return of Jack Pickford to the Paramount Program as a member of the Famous Players forces after a long absence. His last appearance in the productions of this company, having been in "Poor Little Peppina," in which he appeared in support of his sister Mary. Miss Huff was last seen on the screen in "The Reward of Patience" in which she played the Quaker girl. "Seventeen" is one of Booth Tarkington's greatest successes and deals with a phase of life which no normal youngster escapes, and is, therefore, universal in its appeal. This is the first time that Miss Huff and Mr. Pickford have been co-stars. Throughout the country booksellers are co-operating with exhibitors in advertising this production, as this book was for many years, one of America's "best sellers."

In addition to the two features on the Program, Paramount will release four single reel features, the 38th edition of the magazine-on-the-screen Paramount Pictographs. The 39th of the series of "Little Trips Around the World" conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes his fellow travelers to view the wonderful "Vesuvius Volcano in Eruption." The Paramount-Bray Cartoon drawn by L. M. Glackens, entitled "Greenland's Icy Mountains," and Paramount's third comedy "A Troublesome Trip," produced by the United States Motion Picture Corporation.

The 38th edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, contains four very interesting subjects, the first of which is "Art and the Etcher," in which Walter Raymond Duff, one of the most skillful etchers in the world, consented to pose for the screen and give the public a more intimate idea of how this delicate work is done and show conclusively that their artistic genius has developed great skill in the more mechanical details required to produce the finished etchings, as most etchings are simply reproductions of paintings which are done by skilled craftsmen and which have little value compared with the original work of a real artist—these pictures are indeed unusual.

Another subject is "The Passing of the Cowboy," which romantic and picturesque figure has been associated with daring feats of the western plains and who is rapidly disappearing before the march of so-called civilization, is shown in a series of exceptional trick riding and broncho busting features. Among the famous riders who consented to pose for these pictures, are Dolly Mullins, the most fearless woman rider in the world, famous for her daring; Bert Gudgeon, who carried off first honors at the 1916 Stampede at Sheepshead Bay, where he surpassed his rivals with his dexterity in using the lariat, and Buck Moulton, who has been broncho busting since he was 15 years of age and is world famous for his fearlessness in handling outlaw horses.

The other two features in this screen magazine are "Fall Sports on Lake Ontario," which were posed for by E. F. Warner, editor of "Field and Stream," and the second of the series of Sculptured Plastiques, executed by the famous sculptor, William d'A. Hopkins. The subject this week is entitled "Everybody's Uncle Sam."

Burton Holmes in the 39th travel which he is conducting for Paramount, goes to the Island of Vesuvius, visiting it during the time this volcano is in eruption. To witness the violent and destructive eruption of any mighty volcano is a startling experience and not always an enviable one. The awfulness of the scene, the helplessness of human beings at such a time, and the dreadful uncertainty as to what may happen to an entire community, unfortunate enough to be in immediate vicinity when nature undergoes one of these convulsions.

Mollie King with Pathe

ONE of the latest screen stars engaged for the Pathe Gold Rooster productions is Miss Mollie King, who is featured in "Kick In," which has just been produced by the Astra Film Corporation. Miss King also plays the lead in a serial now being made for Pathe.

"Kick In" is a famous Woods' success which will be released in a short time and in which Miss King was co-starred with William Courtney.

Mollie King was born in New York City on April 18, 1898. She attended the New York public schools, graduating from Wadleigh High School. Her first stage appearance was at the age of eight months, and she has been on the stage ever since. She played in several Broadway successes and was a feature at the Winter Garden after a two-year tour of the Orpheum Vaudeville Circus, where she and her sister Nellie did a sister act. She has been starred in several of the productions of the World Film Corporation and is well known to the motion picture audience throughout the country. Miss King can sing and dance charmingly as millions of vaudeville fans throughout the country can attest.

Mollie King.

Mollie King's first actual stage engagement after she had passed the infant stage, was an important child part she played with Maxine Elliott in "Her Own Way." She was then seven years old and made a hit both in New York, and in London As a child actress she also play in "The Royal Family" and "The Little Princess," as well as with the leading Denman Thompson in his vaudeville sketch "Joshua Whitcomb."

After leaving school, Miss King acted as an understudy for Elizabeth Brice, in the musical comedy "The Winsome Widow," playing the star's part on many occasions. She was then 15 years old. Afterwards she played a season in vaudeville with her sister Nellie, then filled an engagement with the passing show at the Winter Garden, and then supported Sam Bernard in "The Belle of Bond Street."

Miss King comes from a theatrical family. Her brother, Charlie King, is known through the world as a member of the famous team of Brice and King, and her sister Nellie is a vaudeville artist.

DR. FREEBURG TO ADDRESS THE PHOTODRAMATISTS.

At the next regular meeting of the Photodramatists, to be held in the rooms of the Balboa Feature Film Co., Mecca Bldg., 1600 Broadway, on Tuesday evening, October 24, Dr. Victor O. Freeburg, instructor in photoplay writing at Columbia University will be the guest of honor, and will address the club on "Characterization in the Photoplay" and "Dramatic Symbolism of the Screen Drama." Members of the Playwrights' Club and the Society of American Dramatists and Composers will be present as the guests of the photoplay organization, and a cordial invitation to be present on this occasion is extended to anyone—writer, editor, director or player—who is really interested in the development of the photodrama. The meeting will be called to order at eight o'clock sharp.

Mutual Program

Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fischer and and Edmund August on the List for the Week of October 30.

MARY MILES MINTER and Margarita Fischer, both famous screen beauties, will head a release schedule of more than ordinary interest and excellence for the Mutual Film Corporation the week of October 30.

Miss Minter, the fourteen-year-old "lovely Mary," will appear on Monday, October 30, in "Faith," the third of her series of Mutual Star productions for the Mutual produced at the studios of the American Film Company, at Santa Barbara, Cal. In it the charming star appears in the role of a girl in search of mother love. It is a story especially designed to bring out the young player's highest powers of interpretation, as well as her greatest charm and sweetness, for "Faith" was written especially for her by James Kirkwood, her director.

There is a great deal of excellent work done in this picture by Miss Minter, by her director and by the supporting cast. Perry Banks is especially noteworthy in his role of a one-time brilliant lawyer degraded by drink, who summons all his past powers together for the supreme effort which saves "Faith," the only one who has befriended him, from the dishonor that others would place upon her.

Miss Minter's sister, Margaret Shelby, is also seen in the cast, as is Lizette Thorne, Mrs. Gertrude Le Brandt, Josephine Taylor and Clarence Burton.

Margarita Fischer's perfect beauty of countenance and form equips her exceptionally for the role of "Yulita," a daughter of the South Seas, in the five-part drama "The Pearl of Paradise," which will mark the exquisite actress's first appearance in Mutual Star productions, and her return to the Mutual after an absence of considerably over a year.

"Miss Jackie of the Navy," a drama in which Miss Fischer plays the role of a girl masquerading as a boy, formerly announced as the first of Miss Fischer's five-part pictures made by the Pollard Picture Plays Company, under the direction of Harry Pollard, has been postponed until a later date.

As "Gomez," the father, appears Joseph Harris. Harry Pollard plays the role of the beloved "John Dallow," J. Gordon Russell is the trouble making element as "Captain Piete Van Dekken," an uncouth suitor for "Yulita's" hand. Beatrice Van appears in the role of the fiancee of "John Dallow."

There will be three dramas of short length, strong, tense, concise and full of scenic and pictorial beauty during the week.

"Paying the Price," a two-reel Mutual, will appear on Monday, October 30. "Canned Curiosity" will be released on Thursday, November 2, and "The Eternal Challenge" will go out on Saturday, Nov. 4.

"Paying the Price" and "The Eternal Challenge" are strong problem plays all the more impressive for the lack of padding which makes it possible to limit their exceptional plots to two reels.

Edwin August will appear in his third Mutual short drama release in "Canned Curiosity," a charming drama with an infectious comedy touch pervading. It is the story of a young writer imbued with sceptical ideas concerning women. He thinks them possessed of overpowering curiosity, and swears that he will never marry until he finds a woman who is free from this fault. Mr. August is supported in this playlet by Iva Shepard, William Bailey and Ruth Blair.

Orral Humphrey, the eccentric American comedian, appears to great advantage in two very diversified comedies in one-reel on Tuesday, October 31. "The Last Thrust" is purely comedy, being the story of mix ups and funny rivalries, but "Spartan Spleen" contains enough of the dramatic and the real heroic to make it rather a drama with strong comedy element. It is the story of an absent-minded and seemingly weak-livered soldier who discloses unusual bravery.

"Nearly a Hero," an amusing Cub comedy, will be released on Friday, and on Sunday, November 5, Paddy McGuire, the Vogue's screaming comedy hit, will appear in "Bungling Bill's Bow Wow." Between a mongrel cur which has brains, and Paddy McQuire, this two-reel Vogue is a continual laugh.

The Mutual's usual weekly output of scenic, current news and magazine material produced by the Gaumont Company will appear on Wednesday and Sunday. Mutual Weekly No. 94 and the split reel-scenic-comic "See America First" and "Kartoon Komic" will appear on Wednesday. "Reel Life," the Mutual's magazine in film, will appear on Sunday.

ALBERT COWLER WITH TRIANGLE.

Triangle-Kay Bee has annexed another eastern scenario writer, in the person of Albert Cowles, who has left New York for Culver City to turn out plays for the Ince stars.

Boyd Marshall, Thanhouser Leading Man

BOYD MARSHALL, like Wayne Arey, another Thanhouser leading man, came from a small town in the middle west. Mr. Marshall's home is Port Clinton, Ohio, on Sandusky Bay, and he never has forgotten his birthplace. Whenever he has a vacation it is to Port Clinton that Mr. Marshall goes.

In his early youth Mr. Marshall thought he was born to be a professor of Greek and Latin. He was a star pupil in the dead languages in the Port Clinton High School and went to the University of Michigan to continue his studies. He got into the glee club there and Orpheus battled with Caesar and won. Mr. Mar- Marshall decided to become a singer.

Boyd Marshall.

He attended the Michigan Conservatory of Music for three years, then invaded New York. After a season with Fritzi Scheff in "Mlle. Modiste" he went into vaudeville with "The Pianophiends" and later with "A Night on a Houseboat." He toured in a sketch called "The Wall Between," then joined Kolb and Dill in San Francisco, playing leads. He was juvenile baritone at the Hippodrome in New York in "Under Many Flags," after which he joined a musical stock company in Elmira, N. Y.

Three years ago he decided to try motion pictures and joined the Thanhouser company, with whom he has been ever since. Mr. Marshall and Muriel Ostriche were featured in a number of Thanhouser-Princess plays. Mr. Marshall is leading man with Valkyrien in "Hidden Valley," to be released through Pathe on November 5, and in "The World and Woman," starring Jeanne Eagels, to be released on November 19. He also has important parts supporting Frederick Warde in "King Lear" and "The Vicar of Wakefield."

CONCERNING THE CHRISTIE COMEDY COMPANY.

Neal Burns is playing his second week of the "Yankee Prince" at the Los Angeles Burbank Theater, having been loaned to the cast by Al Christie of the Christie Comedy Company. It is a strenuous life, Mr. Burns has decided, making pictures from nine to five and dashing onto the Burbank stage at eight-thirty in George M. Cohan's rollicking role. The box office receipts indicate that this musical comedy will run a third week. C. H. Christie leaves for New York this week and expects to remain for a busy month in the interests of the Christie Film Comedy.

William E. Wing, who wrote one hundred and eighteen comedies for Mack Sennett in the "old days," has prepared a series of six two-reel comedies to be produced by the Christie Company. The one slated for early production is "Undone," "The Purity Hypocrite." Mr. Wing says you can take his word for it that it will be a thriller. The title predicts as much.

LITTLE MARY SUNSHINE STARS AGAIN IN A PATHE PLAY.

All babies are valuable to the state and to society, but Baby Helen Marie Osborne, now known as "Little Mary Sunshine," is the only one on record who is capable of earning the salary of a bank president. Fame came to Baby Osborne over night. She starred so delightfully in the Pathe Gold Rooster play, "Little Mary Sunshine," that the whole world took her to its collective heart. Now Pathe announces the wonderful baby as the star in "Shadows and Sunshine," a Gold Rooster Play to be released on November 12.

Beban Re-engaged by Morosco-Pallas

Popular Star Returns to Paramount Program By Popular Request—Donald Crisp to Direct All His Subjects.

GEORGE BEBAN, the well known delineator of Italian character roles, has signed a long term contract with Morosco-Pallas and left New York on the Twentieth Century Tuesday afternoon, October 17, for the studios of these companies in Los Angeles. The engagement of Mr. Beban was effected by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and marks the first stellar addition to the Famous Players-Lasky-Morosco-Pallas companies since their combination announced recently.

Mr. and Mrs. George Beban Leaving Grand Central for Morasco-Pallas Studios, Los Angeles.

The initial Beban production under the new contract will be an Italian character subject written by himself in collaboration with Lawrence McCloskey. Other subjects of different Latin types will follow.

Shortly after Mr. Beban signed his name on the dotted line, Donald Crisp, who has been connected with D. W. Griffith in an advisory capacity for many years, was engaged to supervise the production of all the Beban photoplays. Mr. Crisp is prominently known as director of many subjects, including "Ramona."

Accompanying the star on his transcontinental trip is John Clymer, the well known photoplay author, who has been engaged to collaborate exclusively with Mr. Beban on all his future productions. At the Grand Central depot to see him off were Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Pierce, Lawrence McCloskey, J. Parker Reed, Jr., and a delegation from the Friars Club who sang the Friars' song as the train pulled out. Mrs. Beban also accompanied her husband.

An Interesting Industrial

Cotton Growing and Manufacturers Illustrated in a Four Reel Subject Produced for Advertising Purposes.

FOUR reels of clearly photographed film covering in detail the cotton industry from the sowing of tire seed to the shipping of finished fabrics, were exhibited at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 18, before an appreciative audience. These films were made by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company of Manchester, N. H., to be shown by them in the various large cities of the United States for purely advertising purposes, the exhibition rights to be retained by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The first of these reels is taken up with the preliminaries of the industry, such as the sowing of the cotton seed, the harvesting of the cotton, its transportation to the gin where it is stripped of its seeds, pressed into bales and shipped to the manufacturing plant. Here it is put through the cleaning, dyeing, and carding processes which are some of the first steps toward making it ready for the loom.

The second and third reels show the actual manufacture of attractive ginghams and other cotton fabrics. The fourth reel besides escorting us from end to end of the huge manufactory occupying at least a mile and a half, covers the manufacture of worsted goods and the making of seamless bags. In addition to what has already been recorded we are also introduced to the print shop, where all the literature, letter and bill heads, etc., for the firm are made. Glimpses of the beautiful Amoskeag Falls from which the manufactory derives its name, views of the neat tenements erected by the company for the accommodation of their employees, the children's playground and swimming pool, sports indulged in by the employees, and the outpouring of a portion of the thousands of employees from one of the many general exits of the factory, are also included.

Some Job of Cutting

Joe Brandt Proud of His Work on "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

COMPLETELY fagged out by the three weeks of day and night work on the Universal submarine spectacle, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal, returned to New York on Monday, October 16, from Chicago, where he superintended the opening of the spectacle at the Studebaker Theater. President Carl Laemmle preceded Mr. Brandt to New York by two days.

The task of making "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" a success was put directly up to Mr. Brandt by President Laemmle and judging from the encomiums of the Chicago newspaper critics, Joe has made good.

Joe Brandt.

When the Universal's greater picture was received in the rough from the Pacific Coast the editorial staff at 1600 Broadway figuratively threw up its hands in despair. It took just seven days for Mr. Brandt and his able associate, Jack Cohn, to view the 110,000 feet of film.

Each scene had been "shot" from three or four different angles and Brandt's first task was to choose the best "shot" of each scene. When this tedious work had been completed the picture had been cut to 38,000 feet. The picture was then run off from the beginning for the second time, a proceeding which required three days of night and day work.

During this second showing Mr. Brandt and the indefatigable Jack Cohn viewed the picture with an eye to eliminating all "waste motion" and of ridding it of scenes not absolutely essential to the story. This process reduced the film to 17,000 feet. On the third run a determined effort was made to "tighten up" the whole play and to accelerate the action. This resulted in the cutting of the picture to 11,000 feet. The fourth run was for the purpose of continuing the elimination of all excess scenes and the shortening to "flashes" of those which, while necessary, could be reduced in length to the benefit of the picture as a whole.

On the fifth run suggestions and orders from Mr. Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane and Pat Powers as to the rearrangement of the scenes were put into effect. A different continuity, adding materially to the strength of the story, was introduced and many scenes which had been considered essential to the story were thus eliminated.

At the end of the sixth run the play was considered ready for a general viewing by the entire Universal organization. Discussion was invided at the end of each reel and all worth while suggestions were noted and acted upon before the seventh showing. It was at this point that Jack Cohn made a suggestion which cut out a whole reel and gave the picture a finish "punch" which had been lacking.

This suggestion involved the shifting of a scene showing a burial ceremony beneath the sea from a mere incident in the middle of the play to the end of the picture where it served as a logical and striking climax to the tragic end of Captain Nemo, the hero of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

Universal Program

Week of October 30 Marks the Tenth Year of Laemmle Service with 33 Reels of Pictures.

THE week of October 30, 1916, marks the tenth anniversary of Carl Laemmle's entrance into the exchange field. On October 30, 1906, Carl Laemmle, then proprietor of the White Front Theater at 909 Milwaukee avenue, Chicago, and of the Laemmle Theater at 1233 South Halsted street, Chicago, issued his first program of Laemmle releases and took the first steps in the incorporation of the Laemmle Film Service which a year later had branches in Minneapolis, Omaha, Evansville, Memphis, Salt Lake City, Portland, Winnipeg, Montreal and Des Moines.

The first program of Laemmle films was issued from the Laemmle Film Service offices in the Crilly Building at Monroe and Dearborn streets, Chicago, on November 1, 1906. That first Universal Program listed two feature films, "Roosevelt in Africa" and "The Crusaders; or Jerusalem Delivered." Whereas that first program had only two releases, Carl Laemmle's Universal Program for the week of October 30, 1916, contains thirty-three reels of film.

Carl Laemmle's interests have made tremendous strides in the past ten years and the quality of his pictures has kept pace with the increase in output. From the beginning the "Laemmle Program" has been a moneymaker for exhibitors. It is an interesting fact that President Laemmle received this week a letter signed by 47 exhibitors in the Middle West who have been using Laemmle Film Service for the last ten years, thanking him for providing them with the opportunity to make snug little fortunes.

"We have been using Laemmle service since October, 1906," read the round robin letter, "and it has carried us through panics and business depressions. In normal times it has been a moneymaker beyond compare. Ten years is a long time in the picture game, but the exhibitors old guard is ready now to sign up for ten years more of Laemmle service."

To celebrate the tenth year of Laemmle programs, the president of Universal announces the following banner releases for the week of October 30:

First and foremost, the patriotic Universal Special serial, "Liberty," featuring Marie Walcamp, Jack Holt and Eddie Polo in the two-reel episode "For the Flag." This episode was written and produced, as have all the preceding episodes, by Jacques Jaccard on the Mexican border. Supporting the principals are L. M. Wells, Bertram Grassby, Neal Hart, Maude Emory and G. Raymond.

The week's Red Feather five-reel drama is "The Isle of Life," the story of which, by Stephen French Whitman, was scenarioized by Fred Myton and produced by Burton George. Roberta Wilson and Hayward Mack play the principal roles, supported by Frank Whitson, T. D. Crittenden, Lillian Concord, Hector V. Sarno, Dick Ryan and "Babe" Sedgwick. On the same day "The Isle of Life" is released the Nestor comedy, "Love and a Liar," featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean, will be submitted to an indulgent public. The story of this comedy was written by Tom Gibson and produced by S. Chaudet. Fred Gamble plays an important role in the production.

On October 31 Gretchen Lederer and William Quinn, co-star in "The Masked Woman," a three-reel Gold Seal underworld and society drama scenarioized by Harvey Gates from the story by Tom Gibson and produced by A. W. Rice. The principals in the drama are supported by Lloyd Whitlock, George C. Pearce and Jessie Arnold. The Victor comedy, "Victor on the Job," also will be released on October 31. This special one-reeler was written by Harry Wulze and produced by Joseph De Grasse. George Felix, Eva Loring, Lon Chaney and Lydia Yeamons Titus play the principal roles.

"Terrors of a Turkish Bath," a two-reel L-Ko comedy, featuring Dan Russell, will be released on November 1 as the feature of the day. No. 44 of the Universal Animated Weekly and "The Midnight Toll," a one-reel Laemmle drama, will also be released on this date, in addition to a Special one-reel Laemmle the title of which has not yet been decided.

On November 2 Douglas Gerrard and Francelia Billington will be seen in "Her Wedding Day," a two-reel Laemmle society drama produced by Mr. Gerrard from the story by I. M. Ingleton, which was scenarioized by Harvey Gates. Ruth Clifford and Willard Wayne play important parts in the production. On the same day "Sea Mates," a Big U drama featuring Claire McDowell, will be released with Clyde Benson, Harold Sinner and C. H. Mailes appearing in support. The story of "Sea Mates" was written by Francis Powers, scenarioized by F. M. Wiltermood and produced by Francis Powers. The third release on this date is a Powers split reel, including "Sammie Johnson Minds the Baby," a comic animated cartoon, and "Ceylon," an educational split reel of the Dr. Dorsey series.

Agnes Vernon and Malcolm Blevins co-star on November 3 in "Stumbling," an Imp two-reel underworld drama, the story of which was written by Max Genaske, scenarioized by Harvey Gates and produced by Leo Kent. Jack Livingston, Ray Hanford, Constance Johnson and Edwin Clark appear in support of the principals. "Us Kids," a Powers juvenile comedy produced by Lule Warrington, also will be released on November 3 with Ray Clark, George Hupp, Clara Horton, Dorothy Clark, John Sterling, Elizabeth Janes and Beth Roland in the juvenile roles. There will be no Rex released on this date. Wallace Reid also will appear on November 3 in "Starlight's Message," a Special Big U one-reel Indian drama with a most exciting plot.

On November 4 Edith Johnson and Edward Hearn will co-star in "For Love and Gold," a Bison two-reel Mexican mining drama. The story of "For Love and Gold" was written by E. M. McCall, scenarioized by William Parker and produced by Henry McRae. L. C. Shumway, Marc Fenton, E. N. Walleck and Charles Dorien play important roles in the picture. "A Shadowed Shadow," a Joker comedy written by Jack Byrne and produced by W. W. Beaudine, also will be released on November 4. Gale Henry and William Franey play the principal roles, supported by Milburn Moranti, Lillian Peacock, Charles Conklin and Dan Duffy. There will be no Laemmle release on November 4.

Peggy Coudray and Dana Ong will appear in "Her Vanished Youth," a Rex drama, on November 5, with Walter Yant and Virgle Foltz appearing in support. "Her Vanished Youth" was written by Maie Havey and produced by O. C. Kelsey. The feature of November 5, however, will be "The Bandit's Wager," in which Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, most popular of all co-stars, will be presented. This Big U drama was written by Miss Cunard and produced by Mr. Ford. "The Secret Cellar," a two-reel detective drama featuring King Baggot, will be released as a special Imp on this date. There will be no L-Ko release on November 5. This closes President Laemmle's banner anniversary program.

INTERNATIONAL HAS NEW BOSTON MANAGER.

Following its established custom of advancing employees who display ability, the International has appointed Dan Horgan manager of the Boston branch of the International, succeeding F. H. Vine. Mr. Horgan was born and reared in Boston and has been connected with the film industry the past two years, first as roadman for Pathe, later going with the International when they opened their Boston office. He is well and favorably known by the New England exhibitors.

District Manager B. F. Lyon has been in Boston the past week "breaking in" the new manager and reorganizing the sales force. Two new salesmen have been added to the Boston office. E. L. Knight, for several years manager of the Bijou Theatre, Springfield, will cover the territory vacated by Mr. Horgan, which is western Massachusetts and Connecticut east of Hartford. S. P. Levenburg, formerly of the Unicorn, has been assigned to Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont territory that has heretofore been covered by W. S. Davidson, who is transferred to Rhode Island, Boston and vicinity and the Cape.

DAUGHTER BORN TO COMEDIAN.

Another leading lady was added this week to the juvenile ranks at Universal City when a baby girl arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Milburn Moranti.

A little daughter last week gladdened the hearts of Milton Moore and his wife, know professionally as Laura Oakley and Jack Mulhall, one of the leading juvenile actors, is boasting of the arrival of a son. The three happy fathers have a daily meeting in which they boast of their wonderful babies.

"CIVILIZATION" SOLD FOR CHICAGO.

Big money continues to roll in for Thos. H. Ince's "Civilization." After the Argentine Republic sale for $20,000 comes Cook County, Ill., otherwise Chicago, with $25,000 for the city rights. The Amalgamated Theatres Corporation, Chicago, paid this sum of money for "Civilization" on Friday, October 13. The deal was handled and completed in Chicago by J. P. Grainger, acting for Thos. H. Ince.

Nine Stars in Kalem List

Quartette of Releases Each Week Presents That Many Luminaries to General Film Patrons.

CONTINUING along the lines of the policy of concentration recently declared, the Kalem Company announces that exhibitors booking the four releases issued each week through General Film are now in a position to present nine widely featured stars to their patrons. George Larkin, Scene from "The Merry Motor Menders" (Kalem).

True Boardman, Marin Sais, Ollie Kirkby, Helen Gibson, Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch constitute the roster of players who have for years been featured individually in screen productions and are now found in the Kalem weekly quartette.

In outlining the concentration policy to a Moving Picture World representative Mr. Wright, of the Kalem Company, declared, "We are aiming with all our resources and strength at the exhibitors who complain that they are unable to book short features with stars and advertising value. Nine stars in four productions each week is considerable of an achievement, but we feel that the heavy expenditure is justified by the reception exhibitors are according our productions.

"I doubt if Kalem has ever presented a stronger programme of pictures. There is the 'Girl from Frisco' series, which we have had to extend ten episodes to meet the demand. There is the one reel 'Grant' series that has already scored a bull's-eye hit. And then there are the 'Ham Comedies' and 'Hazards of Helen,' two of the most popular releases listed by any manufacturer."

Kalem's list of releases for the week of October 30 presents the nine stars in an unusual variety of subjects. The week starts with the release on Tuesday, October 31, of "The Merry Motor Menders," a "Ham Comedy" in which Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare, and Henry Murdoch are the principal funmakers. Ham and Bud are seen as the proprietors of a wayside garage, where business is so dull that the two are forced to use all sorts of expedients from tacks to dynamite to force opportunity to knock.

On Wednesday, November 1, Kalem will issue "The Son of Cain," thirteenth episode in "The Girl from Frisco" two-reel series. Marin Sais and True Boardman are seen solving a puzzling murder mystery. In one scene of this episode a stage-coach plunges over a two hundred foot cliff, providing a stirring thrill.

"The Pencil Clue," third episode of the new "Grant, Police Reporter," series is issued on Friday, November 3. George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby are the stars in this series of one reel "thrillers." A reckless leap from the first floor window of an office building into a speeding automobile is one of the exciting moments in the action of the one-reel story of newspaper life.

For "The Gate of Death," the "Hazard of Helen" release scheduled for Saturday, November 4. Kalem found it necessary to construct a gigantic "cut-out," a four hundred foot slide down a mountain side and over the railroad tracks. The structure required over three weeks to complete and enough timber to erect a good-sized house. It is used to smashing effect when Helen Gibson, in one of the thrilling scenes of the picture, makes the four hundred foot slide down the monster chute and misses death under the wheels of a train speeding along the tracks below by a matter of inches.

Essanay Northland Pictures

Many Scenes from the Far North Taken for the Canimated Nooz Reel.

INTO the "Norway of America," the inland water route to Alaska and the last land of romance in North America, Essanay camera men have been forcing their way for the past five months, encountering varied dangers that scenic film might be obtained. Now 20,000 feet of this film, picturing natural beauties in localities never before photographed, has been received at the Essanay laboratories. This will be compressed to half length and issued as ten 500-foot educational films with Wallace A. Carlson's Canimated Nooz Pictorial and other half-reel releases.

The photographers set out from Vancouver and penetrated all untouched spots on the trail to Dawson. The famous trails and passes, famed in song and story since the gold rush to the old Klondike, have been gone over and the contrast shown in the films. Dead Man's Gulch, where scores of the old prospectors perished, is shown as is White Pass, the Yukon river and the old mining camps.

The treacherous rapids where hundreds lost their lives because they preferred a two-minute chance against death to a two-week's trip around, has been shown. All beautiful sounds, glaciers and some gigantic icebergs have been filmed.

Sub-titles explaining the historical conenction of this romantic country with the old days of the gold rush made it a worthy educational series. So completely have the photographers gone over the ground that even the famous old boats that carried the adventurers of '98 have been pictured where they lay falling to pieces on the beach. Their names are stil to be made out on the bows, however, and seeing them in the film will make real to thousands the scenes pictured in the novels of Jack London, Rex Beach and in the poems of Robert W. Service and others.

President George K. Spoor wishes exhibitors to know that Essanay will now be able to announce through its usual mediums the titles of the scenic that accompanies each split reel release. The first called, is now being issued. It deals with the beauties of South California, Yosemite National Park, Crater Lake, Oregon and other Pacific Coast wonders, up to this time untouched by the camera.

TRIANGLE NOVEMBER 12TH RELEASES.

Douglas Fairbanks and Frank Keenan are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for the week of November 12. Mr. Fairbanks appears in a Fine Arts play entitled "American Aristocracy," by Anita Loos, recently completed under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. Mr. Keenan has a vehicle well suited to his personality in "Jim Grimsby's Boys," a Kay Bee production by Lanier Bartlett, directed by Reginald Barker.

"American Aristocracy" is novel drama with plenty of comedy to add zest to its thrills. Douglas Fairbanks takes the part of an adventurous young scion of an aristocratic family who quits the conventional life of the leisure class to seek the excitement that he craves as a secret service agent of the government.

In "Jim Grimsby's Boy" Frank Keenan takes the part of a rugged old prospector of the California mountains. The victim of a chronic grouch, he has looked forward to the birth of a son who should be his boon companion. His entire outlook on the world sours, however, when his wife dies, leaving him a girl-baby. In desperation, Grimsby names the child "Bill" and resolves to treat her like a boy in all things.

General Film Program

A Selig All-Star Production Heads the List for the Week of October 30.

GENERAL FILM SERVICE for the week October 30-November 4, inclusive, will begin with a Selig three-part comedy "Small Town Stuff," which Selig's publicity department says, was made by an all star cast which included William Hutchinson, John Lancaster, Leo Morris, Ralph McComas, William M. Chapman, Harold Howard, Martha Mattox, Lyllian Brown Leighton and Irene Wallace. This comedy was made under the direction of Norval MacGregor, and, according to Selig, reaches the top notch of excellence. This will be followed by a one-reel Vitagraph comedy, "The New Porter." Selig-Tribune will then tell pictorially all the big events of the world. This will be followed by a Biograph one-act drama featuring Blanche Sweet in "The Goddess of Sagebrush Gulch."

An Essanay comedy in two parts, "The Beachcomber," presenting Harry Dunkinson, and Virginia Bowker, will be the first picture screened the following day. Then will come a Kalem comedy, "The Merry Motor Menders," with "Ham" and "Bud," Ethel Teare and Henry Murdock furnishing the fun.

The following day, after an Essanay split reel of Canimated Nooz Pictorial and scenic, will come a Vim comedy, "Gertie's Garters," with Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby in the titular roles. Then will be seen the thirteenth episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco," under the caption, "The Son of Cain," presenting Marin Sais and True Boardman. "The Power of the Press," a three-part Biograph drama with Lionel Barrymore featured, will be the last picture shown that day.

A reel of Selig-Tribune and a Vim comedy, "Twin Flats," with Babe Hardy and Kate Price, will comprise Thursday's offering.

Marguerite Nichols will be featured in a two-reel drama a Knickerbocker Star Feature production, as the first of Friday's offerings, entitled "Jess of the Hill Country." This will be followed by the third episode of Kalem's "Grant, Police Reporter," in which George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby have the chief roles. Then will come a Vitagraph one-reel comedy, "The Game That Failed," with Mary Anderson and Webster Campbell as funmakers. Still another comedy in a one-reel Vim, "In the Ranks," with "Pokes" and "Jabbs" featured, will be shown.

An Essanay three-part drama, "The Heart of Virginia Keep," with Marguerite Clayton and Edward Arnold as stars, will be shown Saturday, November 4. This will be followed by a three-part drama from the Vitagraph studios, "The Heart of a Fool," in which Harry Davenport has opportunity to display his acknowledged ability. This will be followed by an episode of "The Hazards of Helen Series," from the Kalem studios, featuring Helen Gibson. The week's offerings will be concluded by a Selig one-part drama, "Tom's Sacrifice," with Tom Mix and Victoria Forde as stars. The scenario for this picture was written by Tom Mix himself.

GALA PERFORMANCE AT THE WEBSTER.

A special gala performance with three distinguished film stars in the ascendant and personally present occurred on Thursday, Oct. 19, in the well-known Webster theater, Webster avenue and 167th street, Bronx. The film stars were Lucille Lee Stewart, sister of Anita Stewart, who gave a vocal selection; Huntley Gordon and Ralph W. Ince. The two men stars gave most entertaining and instructive addresses, which were much enjoyed by a full capacity audience. Herman Pollak, the owner of the Webster theater, acted as master of ceremonies. Next week he will have Earl Williams as a special guest in his theater.

MAILES A SCREEN PERENNIAL.

Charles Hill Mailes, the all-round actor with the Universal Company, may be said to be a screen perennial; he is never absent from it. At this time he may be seen in the pictures he worked in for the Biograph and which they were holding back. He's in most of the old-time pictures being re-released by the same company and he is never idle one moment at the big U studios. It is a tribute to his excellent acting that he has never had a prolonged holiday from the day he first went into the picture game.

Not Interested in New Company

Carl Laemmle Denies Story That He Is to Form New Manufacturing Concern.

THE New York Clipper in its issue of October 14 published a story headed "Laemmle to Start New Film Company, Is Report." I have no idea where the Clipper secured all the misinformation contained in the article in question, but it would be difficult to pack more misstatements in a few paragraphs than was done in this case. It is totally untrue that I have any idea of heading any oher organization.

It is totally untrue that the Spreckles Sugar interests hold or have any interest in even a single share of Universal stock. Practically all of the Universal stock is owned by Mr. Powers, Mr. R. H. Cochrane and myself, with the exception of a few scattering shares among our close friends. Never has an outside dollar of capital been put into the company. The Universal's earnings have paid for all of its improvements and extensions all over the civilized world.

It is totally untrue that our Fort Lee studio has caused trouble of any kind. Our plant at Universal City has been enlarged and systematized in such a way that it is much easier and less expensive to make pictures there than at Fort Lee. There was a time when the Fort Lee studio was absolutely essential to us. We are still using it, but only for one or two producing companies.

It is totally untrue that we used only two or three scenes made at the Coast for our submarine picture, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." I have not counted the scenes used, of course, but the picture would be far from complete without them.

In fact, the story is untrue from start to finish. I don't know who started it, but it must have been some one who desired to vent a petty spleen against the Universal.

CARL LAEMMLE.

H. B. Warner Leaves Triangle for McClure's

McCLURE Publications announces that H. B. Warner, who has recently finished six important pictures on the West Coast for Triangle Film Corporation, has signed a contract to appear in McClure Pictures, and will be the star of "Wrath," one of the superseries of seven five-reel feature plays McClure Publications will soon release under the title Seven Deadly Sins.

H. B. Warner.

H. B. Warner, newest of the McClure stars, is the son of Charles Warner, the great English actor whose powerful acting left a lasting impression on the American theater-going public when he toured this country in the sensational play "Drink."

It seems peculiarly appropriate, in view of the elder Warner's success in this part, that his no less distinguished son should be the chief exemplar of "Wrath" in Seven Deadly Sins. Those who saw "Drink" will have the chance to see in "Wrath" a striking instance of the descent of strong dramatic talent from father to son.

H. B. Warner's greatest stage success was as Jimmy Valentine in "Alias Jimmy Valentine." His work is well-known to the motion picture public, for he has appeared in "The Raiders," "The Beggar of Cornpaw," "The Market of Vain Desire," "Shell 43" and "The Vagabond Prince."

Mr. Warner is the fifth eminent star to join the McClure forces. With Ann Murdock appearing in "Envy"; Holbrook Blinn in "Pride"; Nance O'Neill in "Greed"; Charlotte Walker in "Sloth;" and H. B. Warner in "Wrath," each play depicting one of the Seven Deadly Sins, the McClure program has already become one of the most impressive and attractive in motion pictures, and amply substantiates the McClure statement that "stars of all programs will appear in McClure Picures."

Rita Stanwood, Mr. Warner's wife, will play opposite him.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Hayakawa Co-stars With Myrtle Stedman

Lasky and Morosco-Pallas Stars Seen on Screen in "The Soul of Kura-San."

"THE Soul of Kura-San," which is to be presented on the Paramount Program by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company on Nov. 13, and has the unique distinction of having both a Lasky and a Morosco-Pallas star in its cast, has just been completed under the direction of E. J. Le Saint. Sessue Hayakawa, the celebrated Japanese actor who was last starred by Lasky in "The Honorable Friend," is the star of this production. With him appears Myrtle Stedman, Morosco-Pallas star who was last seen on the screen in "The American Beauty," a Pallas production. This is the first time that the players of these two organizations have ever been seen together on the screen, Miss Stedman having been loaned to the Lasky Company for the one picture by their allies on the Paramount Program.

The story of the photoplay concerns a young Japanese whose impoverished condition makes him an undesirable suitor for the hand of Kura-San in the eyes of Naguchi, her wealthy father.

"The Soul of Kura-San" is an exceptionally powerful drama which receives added interest from the fact that the Japanese roles in the story are taken by real Nipponese—the members of the Japanese stock company of which Sessue Hayakawa is the head. With the many bonafide Japanese settings to be found near the Lasky studio in Hollywood, the production is realistic in every detail.

"THE OCEAN WAIF" THIRD GOLDEN EAGLE FEATURE.

The International announces the five-reel drama "The Ocean Waif" the third of its successful Golden Eagle Features, its predecessors being "Jaffery" and "The Flower of Faith." "The Ocean Waif," which is declared to be a worthy associate of the other two Golden Eagle Features, will be released on November 2. "The Ocean Waif" is a clean, wholesome drama, devoid of sensationalism but of absorbing interest. The various scenes are remarkably beautiful and the settings more elaborate. A splendid cast, headed by Carlyle Blackwell, "the prince of popularity," and Doris Kenyon, one of the daintiest and most vivacious of screen actresses, has been engaged for the production.

Miss Kenyon appears as Millie Jessop, the sea waif. The waves washed up Millie on an island in the Atlantic when she was a baby and deposited her on the doorstep of Hy Jessop, a disreputable, drunken fisherman. She grew into beautiful womanhood as his drudge, with no knowledge of her parentage and loved and protected only by "Sem," a hunchback neighbor boy.

To her island home comes Ronald Roberts, played by Mr. Blackwell. He is an author, seeking solitude to complete a novel. He rents a deserted mansion, supposed to be haunted, and takes possession of it the day after Millie leaves the hut of Jessop following a beating. She hides in the attic of the supposedly haunted house and furnished delightful comedy by assuming the role of the ghost. Then Ronald discovers her and promptly falls in love with her and she with him.

But a cloud appears when Ronald's fiance and a party of friends come to visit him. Millie realizes her position, discards the fine raiment in which she has arrayed herself, and goes back to her rags and the fisherman's hut.

AL WOODS BOOKING "CIVILIZATION" IN NEW YORK.

"Civilization" the Thomas H. Ince motion picture spectacle, is now being booked by A. H. Woods throughout the State of New York. George F. Miller is in charge of the bookings at Mr. Wood's general offices in the Eltinge Theatre Building, New York.

DUSTIN FARNUM IN "A SON OF ERIN" (Pallas).

As its next release on the Paramount Program, Pallas Pictures announces "A Son of Erin" starring Dustin Farnum. The subject is particularly timely in that it treats with metropolitan politics and offers Dustin Farnum in the role of an honest young Irishman who succeeds in breaking up a big political machine. In contrast with the complex unseen currents of graft in a big American city, "A Son of Erin" presents also the daily life of the poor farm tenants in Ireland. The quaint charm of old Erin together with various incidents of particular heart appeal are displayed with typical Pallas Pictures effectiveness.

In addition to its stirring dramatic theme, offset by scenes of heart interest, the new Dustin Farnum vehicle presents a big thrill in the way of the spectacular collapse of a poorly built viaduct. It was only after extended search and negotiation that the desired location was secured for this scene which presents the actual destruction of a portion of a big viaduct now in the course of construction near Los Angeles. Five camera-men were used to insure the filming of this scene.

Never has Dustin Farnum appeared in such a human, likeable role as that of Dennis O'Hara the frolicsome though strong-willed young Irish lad in this photoplay. The charactor is different from anything in which he has appeared on the screen before and offers another example of his versatility. Appearing opposite the star is his well known leading lady Winifred Kingston, in the role of the sweet Irish lass. Others in the cast are Jack Livingston, J. Wallace, Scene from "A Son of Erin" (Paramount).

Winfred McDonald, Wallace Pyke, Lee Willard, Mabel Wiles and Hugh B. Koch.

Staged under the direction of Julia Crawford Ivers, who is also its author and photographed under the supervision of J. O. Taylor, "A Son of Erin" offers another Pallas Pictures masterpiece as regards detail and thoroughness of settings, together with artistic photographic effects. It will be released on the Paramount Program, November 9.

MICROBE ACTORS IN NEW FINE ARTS DRAMA.

The latest addition to the acting forces of the Triangle-Fine Arts company are a troupe of remarkable "microbe actors" that play a prominent part in the solution of "The Microscopic Mystery," a unique comedy-drama by W. E. Wing that has recently been completed with Wilfred Lucas and Constance Talmadge in the leading role.

The use of bacilli and infinitesimal insect life in motion pictures has been brought about by the invention of Louis H. Tolhurst of Los Angeles, who has perfected apparatus which makes it possible to photograph the tiniest particles of sentient protoplasm. Application has been made by Mr. Tolhurst for patents on his invention. Meanwhile, the original model, used in the filming of "The Microscopic Mystery," is being carefully guarded to prevent its secret from being learned.

In this feature they have not been dragged into the action "by their heels." Mr. Wing has written a vehicle for the microbes which bring them into the story in a perfectly logical manner. In fact, the solution of the mystery is solved by the leading character—and the audience—through observing the antics of the tiny disease germs under the microscope.

The first four reels of the play are largely comedy, involving a country doctor and his rivals, a firm of quacks. Suddenly, in the fifth reel, a revolver shot turns the comedy into the grimest of dramas. In his effort to save an innocent girl from the charge of murder, the country doctor at the coroner's inquest puts his microscope upon the handle of the revolver. The spectators look through the lens with him, by the aid of the Tolhurst invention. They see what he is seeing, and with him solves the riddle of the crime.

A MARGARITA FISCHER SERIES.

From the Mutual offices comes the announcement of the titles and dates of the Margarita Fischer series of feature dramas to be released beginning in November. The pictures are the product of the Pollard Picture Plays Company, which, under the direction of Harry Pollard, the actor-director long associated with Miss Fischer, are being made at the Exposition grounds at San Diego, Cal.

"The Pearl of Paradise," already announced as Miss Fischer's first release of the series, will appear on Thursday, Nov. 2. This is a story of the South Sea Islands. "Miss Jackie of the Navy" will be the second drama. It is scheduled for release on Nov. 30. In this picture the graceful and charming star masquerades in the clothes of a jolly little tar and gets herself into all sorts of trouble.

On Dec. 28, "The Butterfly Girl" will appear, the third of Miss Fischer's pictures, carefully selected and excellently adapted to her own joyous charms. Then will come "The Knight of Tarquizzi," a drama with a great deal of punch and a still greater surprise. That is booked for January 25. "Birds of Passage," the fifth picture will go out, it is expected, on February 22. On March 22, "The Light of Heaven," the last picture so far chosen, will make its apearance.

Supporting Miss Fischer, aside from Harry Pollard, are Beatrice Van, Jack Mower, Joseph Harris, John Steppling. Julian Louis Lamothe is the scenario editor for this photoplay company.

WHO IS AUTHOR OF "THE CHALK LINE."

Understanding that two parties claim to be the authors of his comedy, "The Chalk Line," Watkins Eppes Wright wishes to state through the columns of the Moving Picture World that he is the sole author and originator of the said comedy. This comedy was recently released by the Vim Picture Corporation starring Miss Rosemary Theby and Harry Myers. Mr. Wright is also the author of "The Lemon in Their Garden of Love" another Theby-Myers Vim comedy.

"THE END OF THE RAINBOW" (Bluebird).

Lynn F. Reynolds, who created for Bluebird "The Secret of the Swamp" and "The Girl of Lost Lake" has produced, with practically the same acting company, a third feature breathing the atmosphere of the Sierras and particularly the redwood forests of California. "The End of the Rainbow" carries a few scenes made in San Francisco, but very largely the locations are among the giant trees in the foothills.

Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul, Fred Church and George Hernandez are the principal players in "The End of the Rainbow," and they tell an interesting story of the fight the squatters in the redwood forests made against the lumber monopolists. One of the sensations in the piece shows the attempt of a man to escape his pursuers by sliding down the water-chute used to carry timber down the mountainside. The man sails along on a plank until there comes a break in the chute and then he falls to destruction.

"THE WEALTH LURE" READY FOR SCREEN.

The Latin-American Producing Company, of 1482 Broadway, reports that its first production in "The Wealth Lure," a five-reel modern society drama, with Vera Sisson and Sidney Mason in the leading roles, will be completed at the end of this week.

This picture, directed by Paul Trinchera, gives wide scope for Miss Sisson to show her remarkable ability as an emotional actress, and the public can look forward with pleasure to work that Mr. Mason will present upon the screen.

The Latin-American Producing Company has contracted with C. Lang Cobb, Jr., to market the company productions. Mr. Cobb will handle the sales department from his offices in the Columbia Theater Building.

MARSTON DIRECTS "GREED."

Having completed his direction of the McClure play "Sloth," of which Charlotte Walker is the star, Theodore Marston is now directing "Greed," another play of the McClure series, "Seven Deadly Sins," in which Nance O'Neil is starring.

Mr. Marston, in his previous connections with Pathe Freres, Kinemacolor and Vitagraph, was unusually successful in photographing the curb market without having his scenes marred by those curb brokers who take special delight in causing a director trouble.

His experience in such scenes is being utilized by him in the filming of "Greed" in which crowds are depicted pursuing their passion for wealth in the hectic atmosphere of metropolitan financial circles.

"SMALL TOWN STUFF" (Selig).

"Small Town Stuff" is a three-reel comedy-drama of rural life produced by Norval MacGregor, from the story written by Maibelle Heikes Justice. "Small Town Stuff" will be released through General Film Co., on Monday, October 30th.

The village of Bloom Center is excited when Othello Booth arrives and interests the Ladies' Art Embroidery Club in the production of a drama, entitled "Rita, the Beautiful Snake Charmer." Constable Plum longs to be a detective and studies text books on the art of sleuthing. He searches long for an escaped crook called "Micky, the Mick."

Following the home talent performance, Othello Booth informs the villagers that the box office receipts are missing. Then it is that Johnny West, instigated by Constable Plum, figures in the climax, which uncovers the identity of Micky, the Mick, and recovers the funds earned by the home talent performance.

"Small Town Stuff" is filled with funny situations, and is enacted by an all-star cast, which made "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" series, released by the Selig Company, so popular.

"GLORIANA" (Bluebird).

In this feature little Zoe Rae becomes a featured player. This little girl, barely arrived at her "teens" has played many roles in earlier Bluebirds where a child has been required to enact the role of the heroine in earlier scenes. With Master Gordon Griffith, who also appears with her in "Gloriana," little Zoe Rae carried almost the entire first act of "Naked Hearts" in the Bluebird series.

Virginia Foltz, Clarissa Selwynne, Irene Hunt, Mary Talbot,

Scene from "Gloriana" (Bluebird)

Wm. Canfield and John J. Cook are the "grown ups" who assist Miss Rae, Master Griffith and twenty-five other children in telling a story that will appeal particularly to women and children. It is believed that "Gloriana" will be one of the greatest matinee attractions of recent times.

W. H. Pippert wrote the scenario from E. Mason Hopper's story and Mr. Hopper directed the production. Particular attention was paid to the photography and S. S. Norton is said to have produced some skillful results. This feature is depended upon to particularly demonstrate the artistic and photographic beauties of Bluebirds in particular and to show how moving pictures may generally appeal through the beauties of construction to the better classes.

WILLIAM RUSSELL AGAIN SEEN IN STRONG ROLE.

William Russell, the virile American-Mutual actor, has played many stirring rules, but none more interesting and convincing than that of "Tom Weston" in "The Love Hermit," the Mutual Star Production of October 26th.

In this drama, Mr. Russell plays the role of an ambitious young man who, finding himself unfairly treated by the girl he loves, who is also the daughter of his employer on Wall Street, becomes a recluse from the society of women, and bends every energy to the accumulation of a great fortune.

Scene from "The Love Hermit" (Monarch).

He succeeds in his plan and brings the employer, who had discharged him through the perfidy of his daughter, on the verge of ruin. The girl, played by Charlotte Burton, in the years has come to see the folly of her move and to recognize her love for young Weston. Throwing pride to the winds, she goes to see the successful young man, not so much to plead for her father, as to apologize for her early actions. A reconciliation is brought about, and they are married.

Both Mr. Russell and Miss Burton are at their best in this drama. They are supported by a strong cast consisting of William Stowell, Queenie Rosson, Harry Von Meter and Ashton Dearholt.

SELIG'S KATHLYN WILLIAMS SPECIALS POPULAR.

The Selig Polyscope Company reports great popularity of Kathlyn Williams Specials released as Selig Red Seal Plays through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Exchanges. These productions, five or more reels in length, include "The Rosary," "The Carpet From Bagdad," "Thou Shalt Not Covet," "Sweet Alyssum," "Into The Primitive," etc. "The Rosary" presents Miss Williams supported by an all-star cast including Wheeler Oakman, Frank Clark and Charles Clary. "The Carpet From Bagdad" is a story by Harold MacGrath featuring Miss Williams. "Thou Shalt Not Covet," founded on the biblical commandment "Thou Shalt Not Covet Thy Neighbor's Wife," was written by James Oliver Curwood, and Kathlyn Williams has an unusually strong part. Her scenes with Tyrone Power in this production are very powerful. "Sweet Alyssum" and "Into the Primitive" recently enjoyed extended runs in a Seattle, Wash., theater.

"THE HEART OF VIRGINIA KEEP" (Essanay).

This is a three act adaptation of Edwin Baird's story, and it offers a plot stronger than is generally to be seen in a film of this length. There are some situations which afford thrills, such as the girl indulging in a pistol fight in the slums, and others intensely dramatic. The hero is a young millionaire who goes to work as a reporter on his own paper, becomes interested in defending an unjustly accused banker, and later falls in love with his daughter. Marguerite Clayton is the dainty heroine, and her experience through part of the picture in the disguise of a messenger boy lends a suspense to the story that will thrill any group of spectators Edward Arnold appears in the masculine lead.

"BOBBY BUMPS QUEERS THE CHOIR" (Paramount).

Earl Hurd is giving to the lovers of animated cartoons, the most laughable single reel cartoon comedy that has ever been flashed on the screen, in "Bobby Bumps Queers the Choir," a Paramount-Bray cartoon which will be released as a single reel feature by Paramount on October 26.

As usual, little Bobby is out for mischief, and his ever-constant companion, his faithful dog, is with him, the canine being the one part of the household that Bobby's mother dislikes most.

The church choir, which meets every Friday night in Bobby's house, arrives, and when Bobby hears the bell ring, he happens to be in the parlor with the pup, a room which is never used in their home except for choir rehearsals and for Sunday afternoon gossip.

Realizing that he would be severely chastised if caught in the room, he places the dog inside the piano and tells him to be as quiet as a mouse until the choir practising is over. It is screamingly funny to watch the church choir march through the house and get ready to sing, with Bobby hiding behind the portieres.

Neva Gerber, pretty Universalite, is being featured in a three-reel drama, "A Serpent's Tooth," under the direction of Stuart Paton. The story was written by S. R. Jones and prepared for the screen by Harvey Gates. In the play Miss Gerber does some clever emotional work, relieved by several scenes of such sprightly comedy that one wishes she were a comedienne more often.

"TWEEDLEDUM" AND THE AUTOPEDE.

When Tweedledum was in New York recently with Billy Dunn his director, he was much attracted by the style of the new autopede machines, which he saw being exhibited on Broadway, and he promptly persuaded Dunn to purchase a couple of machines and have them shipped to Jacksonville for use in a new comedy.

The Eagle Film Company reports that Tweedledum is busy now in a comedy which will show him performing all manner of stunts on one of these unique machines.

Tweedledum made his greatest reputation in the old Eclipse comedy, called "The Near Sighted Cyclist," so that by using an autopede he simply brings himself up to the minute in appliances and a screaming comedy is expected from Tweedledum's experiences on the autopede.

The title of the new comedy will probably be called "A Near Sighted Autopedist, and it will be released in the near future as one of the regular Tweedledum comedies.

CLEVER ARTCRAFT ADVERTISING.

Following out its policy of a co-operation of deeds as well as a co-operation of words, Artcraft Pictures Corporation last week ordered the free distribution of several thousand 24-sheet stands to the exhibitors who have already booked the new superior Mary Pickford productions. These stands are divided among the regular stock posters which the exhibitors are encouraged to use between the various features in the Pickford series and the special production printing prepared from artistic designs for the first release, "Less Than the Dust," on November 6.

This departure from the usual methods of handling accessories was the result of a chance meeting between Mary Pickford and Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, in Boston. Mr. Greene had just left New York and was able to give the famous star the latest reports on the enormous bookings obtained through the sixteen Artcraft exchanges. Her enthusiasm took the form of a desire to show some tangible recognition of the hundreds of enterprising exhibitors who have revised their policy in order to show the new Pickford productions. Before they separated Miss Pickford and Mr. Greene had agreed to share on a generous contribution of the attractive line of posters designed to exploit star and production.

Wells Hawks, Mary Pickford's personal representative in charge of publicity, is nearing the end of a trip that has covered practically every large city north of Dallas and east of Kansas City. His work with the newspapers is expected to prove of valuable assistance to the exhibitor.

WARNING TO EXHIBITORS.

Look out for a crook representing himself as Zack Miller. He is a man between 30 and 35 years old, weighs 170 to 180 pounds, about 6 feet 1 inch, dark complexioned, two lower teeth out in front, wears big Western hat, stamped "101" in sweat band. He claims to be placing "101" pictures and borrows small amounts from theater employees. Has been operating all over the United States from Iowa to Texas. This man goes under various Miller aliases and sometimes claiming to be a relative of Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch. He beats automobile men, liverymen, hotels and barrooms. Notify officers to arrest him and wire us.

PATHE'S FLORENCE ROSE FASHION FILMS.

Pathe's Florence Rose Fashion pictures showing what the women will wear this winter, are being booked in the best houses of the country. Reports from Pathe's thirty offices show an increasing demand for these pictures on the part of all exhibitors. In New York they are being shown at the Strand theater among a number.

What the women will wear this winter is shown in the Florence Rose pictures. In these scenes there are dainty dresses of chiffon and crepe de chine. Morning dresses in serge with an unusual combination of satin. Luncheon frocks particularly remarkable for the original way in which fur is introduced. Dressy afternoon hats, a beautiful wedding gown showing many new features are noted by Miss Florence Rose.

Volume 4, showing Betty and her school chums, and Volume 5, showing Betty and the bride selecting costumes for the great day were also particularly fine. Miss Rose points with particular pride to these three releases.

"The sixth is almost universal in its appeal," she says. "No woman will miss it, and the men may pretend to want a slapstick comedy, but you'll find them watching the screen very intently for all that."

"THE WITCHING HOUR" SOON.

Frohman Amusement Corporation Announces That It Is About Ready for Trade Showing.

CHARACTERIZED by a cast of remarkably well-known personalities, including C. Aubrey Smith, Marie Shotwell, Jack Sherrill, Robert Conness, Helen Arnold and Etta De Groff, "The Witching Hour," the current Frohman Amusement Corporation's feature, is now complete and will be given a trade showing within the next fortnight.

"The Witching Hour" as produced by the Frohman enterprise, stands as a dramatic spectacle, in every sense of the word. The story of the play, as taken by Augustus Thomas from the book "Caleb Powers," was the most intense dramatic production of its day and in stage form, was the popular hit of the decade. When Anthony Kelly was commissioned to construct the scenario, he demanded three weeks in which to complete it. When the story was turned over to Director Irving, Mr. Kelly nominated it the very best scenario he had ever written.

Every effort of George Irving was concentrated upon securing dramatic effects. The wonderful opportunity of bringing out in the character of Clay Whipple, the awful fear he has for the cat's eye pin. The continual torturing of the boy's brain by the gambler, who shows this pin at every opportunity, and finally the mighty scene in which Clay, driven to desperation by the sight of the cat's eye, kills his tormentor, will, according to those who have seen portions of the picture, stand out as the greatest situations ever conceived.

Extremely successful situations lead up to many series of highly thrilling dramatic moments, punctuate the entire seven reels.

Aubrey Smith as Jack Brookfield, Marie Shotwell as Helen, Robert Conness as Hardmuth and Jack Sherrill as Clay Whipple are burdened with the heavier dramatic work, with the bulk falling to Smith and Miss Shotwell.

"The Witching Hour" will be state-righted by the Frohman

Companies and will follow the former production, "The Conquest of Canaan." It is thought that those who have secured "The Conquest of Canaan" will also have the control of the "Witching Hour," at least, the intention of Mr. Sherrill is to have one outlet in each territory and to develop and create only big productions of more than extraordinary interest, at the rate of twelve features a year.

ATTRACTIVE BOOKLET FOR MUTUAL FEATURE.

The new Signal Film Corporation offering, "A Lass of the Lumberlands," starring Helen Holmes, heroine of "The Girl and the Game" and a number of Mutual Star productions, was announced to the trade by some tasty little eight-page booklets, 8x8 in size, which were enclosed in sepia envelopes bearing on the surface a reproduction of the bark of a tree, across which was lettered in white: "Announcing a Big New Chapter-Play," and in the lower left-hand corner appears a portrait of the star.

The cover of the booklet is a two-color reproduction of a huge log, on one end of which appears the announcement of the picture and the title. The back cover shows another log-end, on which appears the face of Miss Holmes, and the inside back cover contains a full list of all sixty-eight Mutual film exchanges. Each of the eight pages of the booklet is illustrated and printed in two colors. "A Lass of the Lumberlands" is described in detail on the first page, while other pages are devoted to E. Alexander Powell, the author of the story; Helen Holmes, the star of the production; J. P. McGowan, the director; a description of some of the earlier thrills in the picture; a mention of the nation-wide advertising campaign in newspapers and trade journals, the helps the exhibitor is offered in the way of the presentation of the fiction story by hundreds of newspapers, and a page devoted to the profit-making possibilities of the attraction.

The booklet and their enclosing envelopes were designed and written by the Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Company of Chicago, the same firm which handled the advertising and publicity campaigns on several other motion picture serials. Undoubtedly the tasty and attractive nature of the announcements of "A Lass of the Lumberlands" will greatly assist the Mutual in booking the production.

GRIFFITH FILM, "A DAY WITH GOVERNOR WHITMAN."

As a testimonial to Governor Whitman, who last spring vetoed the Christman-Wheeler Motion Picture Censorship Bill, which would have worked untold hardships on producers, distributers and exhibitors of motion pictures in New York state, David W. Griffith at his own expense and gratis, has produced a one-reel film entitled "A Day with Governor Whitman." Many of the big motion picture producing and distributing companies have united to take care of the making of one hundred prints and their distribution throughout the state.

In addition to spending several days himself in Albany, Mr. Griffith took with him to the state Capitol his personal artistic staff which he brought on from the West. He also has circularized the exhibitors of the state and sent broadcast free slides for screens in an effort to materially aid the Whitman campaign for re-election. The plan for the distribution of the Griffith-Whitman film was conceived by John C. Flinn of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, working in co-operation with Thomas Hanley of the Whitman Committee.

"THE LAND JUST OVER YONDER" (Unity).

"The Land Just Over Yonder," the first of the special features being produced by the Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, and distributed through the Unity Sales Corporation, will be released to exhibitors on October 23. The story from which the six reels of the picture have been made was written by Peter B. Kyne and appeared some months ago in the Saturday Evening Post. It is a wonderfully dramatic tale of mining life in the great West and hinges for its action upon the absorbing devotion of an old man, whose heart is wrapped up in a young comrade and partner.

The picture was filmed in the actual setting of the story, and the character parts are taken by actors of recognized ability. George Chesebro as "Billy Boy," the young man, carries his way to the heart in manly fashion and with finished acting; and it is not possible to portray a more lovable and whole-souled prospector than Arthur Millet, as the old "desert rat." Jane Vernon, as the intriguing quarter-breed, combines attractiveness, at the same time that she arouses genuine hatred through her treachery and faithlessness. The other parts are in the capable hands of Elsa Fox, George Best, Julius Frankenberg and Charles Eichman.

NEWMAN'S LACQUER.

The Newman Lacquer Co., 3317 Hackberry Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, has issued some new literature describing their transparent lacquer, which is furnished to theaters and banks throughout the country. This lacquer is a transparent liquid which prevents brass poster frames, railings, etc., from tarnishing, and is easily applied with a brush similar to varnishing. It can easily be brushed on metal and is quickly air dried, sets fast and becomes hard. This lacquer will stand lots of wear, and can occasionally be washed off with water. This lacquer prevents the metal from tarnishing and considerable labor is saved in keeping brass work polished. It comes in half pint, pint and quart size cans. Literature will be sent to any interested parties by writing to the above firm.

"PIDGIN ISLAND" (YORKE-METRO).

For months Fred J. Balshofer has been endeavoring to explain to his various directors the distinctive type of screen productions he thought the public were demanding. By the time this story is in print Mr. Balshofer will have started on the first scenes of an elaborate picturization of Harold MacGrath's popular novel of romance, "Pidgin Island," laid in a picturesque sea coast environment, and dealing with a baffling smuggling mystery and a beautiful love story.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison, with Mr. Balshofer, have already departed for San Francisco, where the first scenes of "Pidgin Island" will be staged. Part of the story transpires in Chinatown, in order to secure the real Oriental atmosphere.

Lester Cuneo and Lillian Hayward head the supporting cast selected by Producer Fred J. Balshofer to appear with Harold Lockwood and May Allison. Philip Gastrock, of "The Fall of a Nation" fame, plays a prominent part, and Elizah Zerr, who played with Ida Schnall in "Undine," is cast for the part of Harold Lockwood's fishing guide. Unusual care is being exercised by Producer Fred J. Balshofer in the selection of his cast, he being very keen to secure types that are talented.

"MY COUNTRY FIRST" FOR PREPAREDNESS BAZAAR.

Louis Rosenbluh, the president of Variety Films Corporation, announces a record-breaking business with the new feature, "My Country First." This picture has been adopted as the official feature of the National Preparedness Bazaar, which is to take place at the Grand Central Palace. The entertainment committee of the Preparedness Bazaar, headed by its chairman, Sterling P. Story, viewed "My Country First," and out of a total of more than one hundred pictures which they examined, they decided that this was the one to be most highly recommended for the purposes of the Bazaar. Tom Terriss, the noted international star, Helene Ziegfield and and Jill Woodward, head the cast of this six-part modern photo-drama.

"GRANT" OFF TO A GOOD START.

Last Friday, October 20, saw the release of "The Code Letter," the first episode of Kalem's new series, "Grant, Police Reporter." The order of prints on the first and succeeding episodes by the General Film exchanges sets a new record for one reel G. F. releases, while early reports of first-run bookings indicate that in this report the new feature will also surpass the exchange marks.

In the Greater New York territory alone eight prints of the initial episode of the series featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirby are at work. Forty-seven theaters ran the one reel as a first-run attraction for one or more days.

Kalem officials are also enthusiastic over the co-operation shown by the exhibitors in the use of the various publicity aids. The line includes a stock half-sheet, one and three sheets on each episode, slides, newspaper cuts, and fictionizations of the stories in newspaper mat form.

DEMOCRATIC POLITICAL CARTOON.

Louis J. Beck, of the Associated Art Films Co., who secured the contract to turn out the first animated film argument ever produced, will release today 35,000 feet in Brooklyn, New York and other states, of the animated cartoon entitled "Where Do You Go From Here?" made for the Democratic party.

By clever artistic and mechanical work the drawings of the original pictures are made by the camera to move animatedly upon the screen exactly as pictures of real persons would, had actors posed for the pictures instead of being reproduced from drawings by Mr. MacDougall. Mr. Beck and the Associated Art Film Company made a record in the production of the film.

NORMA TALMADGE, IN "PANTHEA."

"Panthea," the drama that created a furor in Europe and America when presented by Mme. Olga Petrova, has been chosen as the vehicle for Miss Norma Talmadge in the first of her Selznick-Picture productions.

It had been announced that Miss Talmadge would be presented at the head of her own producing company in a film version of David Graham Phillips' novel, "The Price She Paid," but Mr. Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, succeeded last week in obtaining motion picture rights to "Panthea," and at once decided to use this powerful drama for his initial presentation of the popular young film star.

TRADE SHOWING OF PATHE FASHION PICTURES.

Miss Florence Rose, the well known fashion's expert, is to give a private showing of the fashion's motion pictures which she has produced for the Pathe program at the Broadway theatre on Thursday, October 26, at 10.30 a. m. Miss Rose will have present six of the beautiful girls who pose in these films and they will appear upon the stage. Four of the most recent pictures which Miss Rose has made will be shown.

New International Serial

"Patria" Is the Title and Mrs. Vernon Castle Is the Star—A Patriotic Subject.

"PATRIA," the great preparedness photoplay serial of the International, with Mrs. Vernon Castle, famous dancer and beauty in the title role, will be released throughout the United States on Monday, December 4. "Patria" has been many months in the making, and now that it is about ready for presentation to the public is a super-motion picture of unrivaled artistic beauty and epoch-making magnificence.

Scene from "Patria" (International).

"Patria" was conceived for the dual purpose of furnishing the highest quality of photoplay entertainment possible, and of instilling into the American public the deep obligation of preparing the country against invasion. Nothing has been left undone to accomplish these purposes. "Patria" is a motion picture masterpiece that teaches a lesson, the far-reaching influence of which will live for centuries.

Louis Joseph Vance, one of the foremost American authors and playwrights, wrote "Patria." He has welded together in a series of episodes a story of remarkable interest bristling in every scene with that kind of excitement that makes one quiver with patriotic enthusiasm. The International has staged the production in sumptuous grandeur.

Patria Channing, which character is impersonated by Mrs. Castle, is left an orphan early in life, bereft, too, of all other relatives. She knows little about herself, except that she possesses a vast fortune and that she must some day take her place at the head of the great manufacturing industries, including vast munitions plants, that is part of her inheritance.

When she reached her twenty-first birthday, Patria discovers that in addition to her vast fortune, she has been left to administer an heritage of $100,000,000. This vast fund was created to be used when needed to prepare the nation against attack.

Mrs. Castle, as Patria, has amazed even her greatest admirers by her remarkable impersonation of the part. Internationally known as a dancer and beauty, she possesses ability as an actress that could best be demonstrated by the impersonation of Patria. The same intelligence and enthusiasm that made her the most famous dancer in the country she applied to her motion picture work.

The International has surrounded Mrs. Castle with an excellent cast. Foremost in her support is Milton Sills, one of the foremost American actors, who plays Donald Parr; Warner Oland, who appears as the scheming Baron Huroki, and Dorothy Green, who plays the part of Fannie Adair, an accomplice of the plotters. Mr. Sills is best known in motion pictures for his work in "Deep Purple," "Under Southern Skies," "A Woman Who Lied," "The Rack," and "The Honor System." As a legitimate actor he won fame as leading man in "Just Boys," "The Law of the Land," and "Panthea."

Mr. Oland is known as one of the most finished actors in the profession. Before he became a screen actor he played "heavies" with Viola Allen, Sothern and Marlowe, Nazimova and in "A Fool There Was," and "The Yellow Ticket." His greatest previous work as a moving picture actor has been with Theda Bara.

Miss Green is famous for her "vampire" characterizations. She has had many successes, the most notable recent ones having been "The Devil at His Elbow," "Souls Aflame," "Parisian Romance," "The Spirit of the Poppy," and "Women and Wine."

KALEM'S "HAZARDS," A JAPANESE FAVORITE.

Archie Bell, the well-known dramatic authority of the Cleveland Leader, writing in the current issue of The Theater Magazine, gives an interesting description of the popularity of American motion pictures in Japan. Incidentally it is interesting to note that Kalem's releases, "The Hazards of Helen" and "Ham Comedies," are met with great frequency throughout the Land of Nippon.

An interesting passage in Mr. Bell's article says, "The Chinese like the 'movies,' so do the Japanese. There are few occasions, excepting a patriotic or religious festival, where the Japanese will so unbend himself and forget his dignity. At Kyoto, the ancient capital, where I had seen the people festive and gay during the day as they participated in the Great Aoi festival at the Kamo shrine, I observed them in the evening as they witnessed the American thriller, 'The Hazards of Helen.' They made about as much noise at one as the other, giving outbursts of applause, and even rising to their feet and shouting, just as much when the hero saved Helen and a baby by venturing to a railroad bridge and jumping in with the two in his arms as the express train whizzed across the screen, as they did when the Sugekasa pasasal and the sacred horses passed through the streets on their stately journey toward the Shinto temple."

PAULINE FREDERICK IN "NANETTE OF THE WILDS."

The first screen vehicle in which Pauline Frederick will be presented on the Paramount Program since her renewal of contract with the Famous Players Film Company recently announced will be entitled "Nanette of the Wilds," written expressly for her by Willard Mack, and that popular dramatist and actor will appear in the production in support of the star.

In the course of this production Pauline Frederick will return to the screen in a primitive characterization, a type that she has so well exemplified in her previous productions—"Aubrey," "The World's Great Snare" and "The Spider." Unlike these former characterizations, however, Nanette's environment is in the Northwest, and the characters with whom she comes in contact and conflict are far different from those whom she met in her screen travels through these former subjects. The famous mounted police of that region and the law-breakers whom they relentlessly pursue are the personal factors about whom the drama is woven.

For the purpose of obtaining the exact atmospheric surroundings for this production, Pauline Frederick and a supporting company under the direction of Joseph Kaufman, who was responsible for the direction of Pauline Frederick's recent success "Ashes of Embers," have gone to the western part of Canada, where all the exteriors will be staged.

A corps of the Northwest mounted police will be utilized in the production of this subject, and the love scenes between Pauline Frederick as "Nanette" and Willard Mack as O'Brien against the rugged background contained in this story will undoubtedly supply a series of scenes of pictorial and dramatic value. The production will be released on the Paramount Program, November 27th.

SCHLANK SAYS UNICORN IS BOOMING.
